GET RAY HERCULES MINE.

New Yorkers in Group Acquiring Arizona Copper Property.

A syndicate in which Joseph B. McCall and George A. Huhn of Philadelphia, J. Guthrie Hopkins of Virginia, and E. P. Earle, N. F. Brady, August Heckscher, and Frank C. Armstrong of New York are interested has taken over control of the Ray Hercules Copper Company of Maine, which has acquired the properties of the Arizona Copper Company immediately adjoining the ore body of the Ray Consolidated.

The Hercules ore body has been developed by drilling under the direction of Henry Krumb, consulting engineer for the new company. The Ray Development Company, owning the water supply of the Ray camp, is also controlled by this group. C. E. Addams, formerly mines manager for the De Beers Consolidated Mines, Ltd., South Africa, and until July 1 last in charge of mining for Ray Consolidated, has been appointed general manager of the company. It is planned to equip the mine for an output of 3,000 tons per day and to erect a mill for handling the ore.

FINANCIAL NOTES.

William A. Read & Co. are offering $11,600,000 of Canadian Northern Railway two-year 5 per cent. collateral trust gold notes at 98¾ and interest, netting about 5¾ per cent. The notes are direct obligations, secured by the pledge of $15,833,334 of general mortgage 4 per cent. bonds, guaranteed by the Dominion of Canada.

Pouch & Co. and W. C. Coles & Co. are issuing a circular and map on the Penn.-Mex. Fuel Company, one of the Standard Oil group of Mexican properties.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Gold Goes to the Banks.

The presence of $19,534,000 of British gold, which was deposited in the Sub-Treasury Wednesday at the conclusion of the imposing parade downtown, will be reflected in this week's bank statement. Warrants, or receipts for the gold have been deposited in several New York City banks. The report that $200,000,000 more gold now at Cape Town will shortly start for New York was not credited in well-informed banking quarters yesterday. More gold is of little use to the banks, already loaded up with surplus cash for which there is no borrowing demand.

Anthracite Rate Decision.

Announcement of the Interstate Commerce Commission's decision in the anthracite rate case did not come until after the close of the Exchange and there was not a sign of advance knowledge of the decision during the business day. The tip that a decision would be handed down went the rounds two months ago. Since then many exciting things have happened and the brokers apparently lost their interest in coal rates. Nine railroads are affected principally by the decision and yet the stock of only two of these, the Erie and the Pennsylvania, sold in considerable quantities yesterday. It is very probable that trading would have been representative in all the nine stocks had there been any intimation of a decision. Erie lost only ⅛ of a point and Pennsylvania lost ⅝.

Unfavorable News Expected.

Brokers expressed no surprise when they heard that the Interstate Commerce Commission had declared prevailing anthracite rates unreasonable. Some railroad men took the same view. The early dispatches contained only a few figures and from these reports it was estimated that the annual los

LONDON MARKET QUIET.

Closes with Steady Tone—Munition Issues Lower.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—Money and discount rates were quiet today.

Business generally was quiet on the Stock Exchange. Bonds and Kaffirs were steady and oil shares firm, but home ralls were stagnant and most of the munition issues declined.

Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk were favored in the American section, but the rest of the list ruled easier. The closing was steady.

NEW BRITISH GOLD NO AID TO EXCHANGE

Demand Sterling Drops to $4.72¾, the Lowest Price Ever Recorded Here.

SITUATION DISTURBS BANKS

Most Serious Problem Connected with Exports to the Allies—Credit Scheme Sought.

The arrival of nearly $20,000,000 in gold besides British-owned American securities of an estimated value of more than $30,000,000 had no apparent effect toward checking the downward movement of sterling exchange, which yesterday went to a low level never seen before in modern times. Demand sterling, which sells ordinarily at $4.865 for the pound, sold at $4.72¾. At this figure there is a loss of 2.8 per cent. on transactions settled by the buyer in demand sterling.

Yesterday's decline, according to international bankers, will be only a start on the downward movement if steps are not taken to provide for the settlement of obligations here through credit facilities rather than through exchange. The situation was disturbing to the banks and brought forward what was characterized as the most serious problem that confronts this country in connection with its enormous exports to the Allies. A suggestion that more gold might be brought here from London or South Africa was dismissed as a restorative of normal rates.

"We don't want gold," said an international banker who is taking an active part in negotiations with financiers in London and Paris. "The gold is of no use to us and might better stay in London. If our export trade is not to receive a serious check a way must soon be found to extend credit for the settlement of the bills that are falling due.

"The banks in this country have unprecedented cash reserves, which are not doing any good. What is needed is a credit arrangement under which this money can be paid out on behalf of foreign nations. Either through the sale here of foreign securities or the establishment of a credit, means must be provided for paying the war bills maturing in this country or it will become increasingly difficult to place additional orders."

It was learned yesterday that the securities received by J. P. Morgan & Co. from the Bank of England in connection with the gold, are American bonds, and that they are to be used as security for temporary advances. It was said that they were not a part of collateral for a large credit, but that they would be deposited with banks to secure the release of cash to meet bills. Whether further consignments of securities are sent depends entirely upon London

On most of the war contracts, 20 per cent. or 25 per cent. of the price called for has been paid at the time of placing the orders. So far only a relatively small part of the munitions contracted for has been delivered, and the unsettlement caused by the preliminary advances has brought up the question of what may be expected to happen when the remaining 75 per cent. or 80 per cent. is called for. To date there are no unpaid items, the Allies having settled in cash for everything delivered.

There was a report which seemed to be borne out by facts yesterday that a large volume of war business has been held up by the refusal of manufacturers to take new orders calling for payment in notes running for a year or more. Russia has offered a large amount of new business on condition that the contractors accept bonds in payment, but little of this business has been taken. One industrial company has had under consideration for several days a big Russian order which was delayed by inability to reach an understanding as to payment.

It is regarded as entirely possible that Great Britain will eventually try out the investment market here with an offering of notes payable in New York in dollars, to secure investors against loss in exchange. Bond men said yesterday that the reception which such an issue would get could not be foretold, but that a maximum estimate of $100,000,000 should be placed upon the amount of such securities that could be absorbed in this market.

Until recently most financiers have taken the stand that the exchange problem is of no direct concern to the United States, and that Great Britain must find her own way to pay the obligations incurred here. Now it is recognized that the future industrial prosperity of this country depends upon cooperation which will make it possible for the Allies to finance their purchases without exhausting their supplies of gold. Large war orders for Italy are hanging fire pending action on that country's inquiry for a loan of $50,000,000.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—Notice of the detention by the British authorities of the Standard Oil steamship Petrolite was received at the State Department today from the American Embassy in London. Ambassador Page probably will be instructed to obtain the ship's release.

ROCK ISLAND PLAN NEAR.

Details of Reorganization Expected Within Thirty Days.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Aug. 12.—The re-organization plan of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad Company probably will be announced within the next thirty days. Leading interests are holding conferences in New York and a plan, which is expected to be concurred in by all of the various factions of the property now in receivership, is being arranged.

Details of the proposed financial arrangement are being closely guarded, but there persons close to inside matters who contend that if the stock is to be assessed the levy will be a small one and in the form of subscription by holders of the present stock to an issue of new securities.

The semi-annual interest on $20,000,000 in 5 per cent. Rock Island debenture bonds, which was not met when due July 15 last, is not in default until Sept. 15. It is expected that the interest will be paid on or before the latter date, but nothing is likely to be done in the matter until after Sept. 1.

SEEK WRIT TO BUILD TIMES SQ. SUBWAY

Board of Estimate Refuses to Approve $12,000,000 Dual System Contracts.

WANTS THE FORM CHANGED

Holbrook, Cabot & Rollins to Start Litigation That May Delay Completion of the System.

Ex-Lieut. Gov. Thomas F. Conway, counsel for the Holbrook, Cabot & Rollins Corporation, lowest bidders on the contract for the Times Square section of the Broadway subway, will apply to the Supreme Court today for a writ of mandamus to compel the city to execute the contract that has already been awarded them. The Board of Estimate has insisted on striking out of all subway construction contracts the provision permitting the payment for extra work in a lump sum, to be agreed upon by the chief engineer for the Public Service Commission and the contractor.

Acting Mayor McAneny and the Public Service Commission fear the court action may delay indefinitely the completion of the dual subway system. Controller Prendergast is of the opinion that Holbrook, Cabot & Collins have no legal standing in the matter and that protracted litigation by them need not be seriously entertained. If the Public Service Commission would readvertise the contract for this section the delay in letting it would not amount to more than three weeks, the Controller said.

Acting Mayor McAneny and members of the Public Service Commission, on the other hand, maintain that the Board of Estimate has no power to change the wording of a contract once it has been awarded, that its only function is merely to approve or disapprove a contract, and that in insisting upon the elimination of the clause the board will bring about a serious delay in the completion of the subway work.

Must Put In New Bids.

Acting Corporation Counsel Hahlo yesterday gave the opinion that the action of the board practically means a disapproval of the contracts as originally advertised and bid on by the contractors, and that the work must be readvertised and bids received. This may mean a delay of at least two months in the final completion of the subway work.

When the Board of Estimate at its meeting yesterday refused to recede from the position it had taken last week Mr. Conway began at once the preparation of papers in his application for a writ of mandamus. He said he would ask that both the Board of Estimate and the Public Service Commission be compelled to carry out the contract that has been awarded and approved.

Two weeks ago the board approved the contract with Holbrook, Cabot & Rollins, with the provision for payment of extra work stricken out, and the contractors refused to accept the modification. Last week the board was asked to reconsider its action, and by a majority vote refused to back down. Yesterday the matter was again up for reconsideration, when the board had to pass upon more than $12,000,000 in subway contracts, including the contract for the construction of the subway on Eastern Parkway, Brooklyn, known as Section 3, Route 12.

The total estimated cost of this section is $2,170,625.50, and the contract has been awarded to Rodgers & Haggerty, Inc. A representative of the contractors declared that his company was perfectly willing to accept the contract with the lump sum clause stricken out. Acting Corporation Counsel Hahlo told the board, however, that their action last week had legally amounted to a disapproval of the contract and that it would not be legal to award the contract to Rodgers & Haggerty.

Leroy T. Harkness, assistant counsel to the Public Service Commission, took the same view and said that already more than $73,000,000 in contracts had been approved by the board with the provision left in.

Delay Will Be Costly to City.

"It would be legal if the Public Service Commission and the contractor accepted the proposition," said Acting Mayor McAneny. "The Public Service Commission, however, maintains that there must be an approval or a disapproval of these contracts by this board and if sent back it means a serious delay in the completion of the subway work. I feel that it would be unwise to jeopardize these contracts that will cost the city hundreds of thousands of dollars if the mater is carried to the courts."

A vote was then taken on the approval of the contract as it was advertised and awarded and only Mr. McAneny and Borough President Connolly of Queens were for it. Controller Prendergast and Borough Presidents Pounds of Brooklyn, Mathewson of the Bronx, and Van Name of Richmond voted against it, making nine votes in all. After this vote had been taken, President Pounds moved that the contract be approved with the troublesome clause stricken out.

"Why, we haven't anything before us to approve," said Mr. McAneny. "A contract is presented to us for approval or disapproval, and now we have disapproved it we can't conjure another contract out of the thin air and approve it."

President Pounds wanted to put in the fact that the contractor was willing to accept the contract in the modified form.

"That is a mater of public record," replied the Controller. The vote was then reversed, Mr. McAneny and Mr. Connolly voting against the approval in the modified form.

"This is simply repeating the caution," said Mr. Prendergast. "Whether we vote to disapprove the contract or vote to approve it in a modified form, we have thrown it out."

The other contracts for subway work, three for material and two for construction, were then treated in the same manner.

Controller Explains Situation.

Asked as to the exact status of the Times Square Subway contract, Controller Prendergast said:

"The question before the Board of Estimate was this: Should the board agree to a provision in the contract which some of its members did not believe should be there and which they believe is not in the public interest? A majority of the board has now decided upon two occasions that it believed this provision should be eliminated. The Corporation Counsel holds that the Board of Estimate must either approve or disapprove a form of contract submitted by the Public Service Commission, and that where the board approves with a qualification it is tantamount to a disapproval; but the Corporation Counsel also holds that even in the event of that kind of disapproval the matter can be immediately straightened out by the Public Service Commission agreeing to the change the Board of Estimate has suggested, and that this would legalize the proceedings.

"The situation today is that the Public Service Commission refuses to agree to the elimination of a provision that the Board of Estimate believes should not be in this contract, although if it would agree to it there would be no legal difficulty whatever. Further, I have heard talk to the effect that this difficulty may lead to a delay of a year in the completion of the subway. Such a statement is false. The Public Service Commission can readvertise this contract, if it so desires, and have a new contract awarded in three weeks, and this I think is the maximum of any delay that need occur. Talk of protracted litigation by the contractor who made the lowest bid, in this case the Holbrook, Cabot & Rollins Corporation, need not be seriously entertained. They have no legal standing in the matter."

Holds Up the B. R. T.

According to Mr. Harkness of the Public Service Commission, the real trouble will be in the interest charges on the work due to delay. Just how much it would amount to he could not say. The Times Square section is the most important of the entire dual subway system, and until it is completed the B. R. T. will not be able to operate any part of the subway system in New York City. The section is between Thirty-eighth and Fifty-first Streets, and includes the big double station to be built at Broadway and Seventh Avenue.

CITY CLUB SENDS PROTEST.

Dissatisfied with Home Rule Measure Proposed at Albany.

The City Club, following the example of the Citizens' Union, sent to each delegate to the Constitutional Convention last night a vigorous protest against the adoption of the reports of the Cities Committee on the question of municipal home rule. It says the plan proposed seems rather to hinder than to facilitate desirable changes through local action. The letter says:

"The revision of the charter of a city by a charter commission would take years, at the end of which time the entire result could be nullified by the Legislature. Then, for a period of approximately five years, the people of a city would be powerless to effect changes, except possibly by the action of local legislative authority."

The letter says that a second defect of great practical importance is that the proposal tends to throw doubt and obscurity around the source of city powers. The letter concludes:

"Without urging other objections, we ask your assistance in securing a more satisfactory revision of the municipal article, the first step toward which, unfortunately, must be the rejection of the pending report of the Cities Committee."

WHEAT.

The wheat situation is becoming more acute as it pertains to the spot and nearby positions, and during yesterday's operations there was active general covering. The September position sold at a premium of 2¼c over December, and at the close of the day was 1⅝c net higher, while the later months were ½c higher to ½c lower. In the local cash market No. 2 red Winter wheat was quoted at $1.23, cost, insurance and freight, New York, prompt; No. 2 hard Winter, $1.31¾, cost, insurance, and freight, New York, to arrive; No. 1 Northern Duluth, $1.15¼, and No. 1 Northern Manitoba, $1.11½, cost, insurance and freight, Buffalo.

CORN.

The corn market was influenced more or less by the advance in wheat, and prices early in the day showed gains of ¼c to ⅝c, but there seemed to be little enthusiasm on the buying side, and at the close of the day values were easier, with net declines of ⅛c to ⅝c. The Liverpool market was easier, owing to more liberal shipments from Argentina, which were estimated at 5,100,000 bushels, compared with 2,031,000 last year. In the local cash market No. 2 yellow corn was quoted at 90½c, lake and rail, August shipment.

OATS.

The oats market was nervous, as the movement has been delayed by the unfavorable weather, but, after showing an advance of ⅝c to ¾c, prices eased off under more liberal offerings and closed net unchanged to ¼c decline. The local cash market was firmer; standard quoted at 69½c; No. 2 white, 70c; No. 3 white, 69c; No. 4 white, 68½c; fancy clipped white, 70@70c; ordinary clipped white, 69@72c; all elevator.

PROVISIONS.

The market for hog products was inactive and irregular with the undertone barely steady. Supplies are large and selling seems to occur on every substantial advance. Receipts of hogs at Chicago were 14,000; estimated for Friday, 15,000. Kansas City received 4,500 and Omaha 8,500.

SUGAR.

Opening steady, unchanged to an advance of 4 points, with first sales 950 tons, futures maintained a firm tone throughout the day, with trade interests buying, due to improved raw and refined markets. The market closed firm, 1 to 10 points higher, with sales for the day of 7,100 tons.

COFFEE.

Private reports from Brazil indicating that the Government's plan of aiding the marketing of the coffee crop was assuming a rather more concrete form added a little confidence to the buying side of the local coffee market yesterday, and prices advanced 5 to 11 points. The local spot market was inactive, but slightly steadier, with Rio 7s quoted at 7c.

BUTTER AND EGG MARKET.

BUTTER.—Receipts yesterday, 5,925 packages. The tone of the market was about steady. There were a few orders filled early at slightly higher prices than prevailing on Wednesday, but trading was quiet and most operators met buyers freely on the basis of present quotations, with business over 2834c, comprising a small part of the trading. Renovated continues dull. Ladles steadier. Packing stock largely poor and selling slowly. EGGS.—Receipts yesterday, 12,400 cases. The market continues firm for desirable qualities, with moderate supply and fair demand; but the receipts are still of extremely irregular quality and widely varying value. Some of the fanciest marks of closely candled and graded goods are showing better quality and are bringing slightly better prices than heretofore quoted, although the average prime and lower grades are without material change in value. Near-by eggs in light supply and fancy qualities firm; offerings largely below fancy, and sales are at irregular prices. TELLS OF MILLIONS PHILIPPINES OFFER

Rotary Club Hears of Trade Openings on Anniversary of Islands' Acquisition.

OPEN DOOR NOT UTILIZED

We Should Get In or Get Out, Politically and Commercially, Says Gallagher.

The Rotary Club of New York held a luncheon yesterday at the Hofbrau Haus, at which the principal speaker was Patrick Gallagher, editor of the Far Eastern Bureau. Mr. Gallagher addressed the club on "Getting Into the Philippines," it being just seventeen years ago today since our soldiers left their trenches between Pasay and Paco, and Colonel Harry B. McCoy of a Colorado regiment raised the American flag over the bastion of Fort Santiago.

Mr. Gallagher said that the cry, "Let's get out of the Philippines," made him laugh, for, he declared, we are not yet in the islands. Politically, he said, we may be deeply concerned with just what is going to happen to our Far Eastern possession, but commercially, as a people, we have not even scratched the foreshore of the islands. However we may consider our Philippine question, that is the crux of the whole thing.

"The truth of the matter is," said Mr. Gallagher, "that American opinion has been most sadly confused concerning our real interests in the Philippine Islands. Too much of our information has come from political channels, charged with bias and misrepresentation of one sort and another. Too little attention has been paid to the statements of mercantile and non-political bodies in the Philippines, and to the valuable facts collected with considerable trouble by permanent officials whose only interest is to get at the truth.

"After seventeen years of trade we have only some $48,000,000 worth, imports and exports combined," said Mr. Gallagher. "We ought to realize that our famous open-door policy, organized by John Hay and Mr. Rockhill, is useless to us if we fail to even utilize the door step to the open door, the Philippines."

As an example of the splendid opportunities which lie before the American investor in a land where 7,000,000 acres wait cultivation, the speaker told of how young men he had known who had gone into the export of cocoanut oil. The trade was 660 kilos in 1912, worth $40, and in 1914 there was exported, chiefly to this country, more than 11,000,000 kilos, valued at $2,619,183.

"This horrible war is, it does nothing else," Mr. Gallagher went on, "should teach us one thing, and that is that foreign trade enters into the most remote ramifications of business and social life. And certain recent happenings in the Far East ought to awaken us to the realization that great principles of American policy and the promise of concrete profits to our manufacturers are liable to be swept away at any moment because of our neglect to safeguard with sufficient earnestness this 'open door.'

"So long as our competitors consent to leave the door into China open, just so long we have Manila not merely a great mart for serving millions of customers throughout the Orient, but also an advance base for our merchants and exporters doing business from Egypt to New Zealand. The characteristic pluck and endurance of a few American firms have blazed the trails from Apparri to Zamboango, and have aided in our efforts to help China share with us the trade of China. Those pioneers have done their share, but the American business man at home has not done his."

On the military side of the question, Mr. Gallagher considered the problem much the same as the commercial one. We should either get in or get out of the islands. We should take measures to render the Philippines a source of strength, not weakness to our army and navy. It could be done, he declared, otherwise we might as well turn the islands adrift.

There were some three hundred listeners to Mr. Gallagher's address, and such was the interest that, after luncheon, thirty New York merchants signified their intention to look into the possibilities of trade with the Philippines at once. One deal was consummated with a Manila merchant for a Philippine plantation later yesterday afternoon, according to Mr. Gallagher.

MUST USE NEUTRAL SHIPS.

Purchase of Interned German Vessels Would Not Bring Relief.

It seemed to be pretty well settled in local importing circles yesterday that nothing would come of the proposal of Arthur P. Meagher of C. H. Wyman & Co., St. Louis, to purchase German steamships interned in this country, put them under American registry and send them to Rotterdam to get German and Austrian merchandise wanted badly in the United States. While importers are facing financial disaster, owing to their inability to obtain goods already paid for, but detained in neutral ports by the British Orders-in-Council, they are convinced that German-purchased ships would unquestionably be seized by Great Britain.

Ex-Judge Sharretts, counsel for the American Importers' Association, has written to Mr. Meagher, who is a Vice President of the association, and also to the members throughout the country, advising, from a legal standpoint, against the buying of German ships. In his letter to Mr. Meagher, Mr. Sharretts said:

"The public announcement in your advertisements that you were looking for German vessels by implication made your proposed scheme distinctly pro-German, and would defeat the consummation of what you and all American importers are devoutly looking forward to, namely, the lifting of the embargo by Great Britain against the importation of goods belonging to our merchants, now in warehouses at Rotterdam. If by the use of an American-built vessel, such as you first suggested, the embargo can be ended, your merchants, as well as those in every section of the country, whether individually favorably disposed toward Germany and Austria or not, will be saved from great financial loss, while merchants from those countries will be benefited also."

Mr. Sharretts concluded his letter by asking Mr. Meagher publicly to announce that he had abandoned his plan to buy German vessels and intends to purchase ships built in this country, or purchased from neutral countries. He advised the members of the association that if the American merchants should purchase or charter American or neutral vessels and register them under the United States flag, for the purpose of carrying noncontraband merchandise, irrespective of origin, from neutral countries to the United States, it would bring to a conclusion the present interferences with American commerce. It is his belief that the Administration would protect such vessels in their legal rights, and take a position whereby any illegal interference by either of the belligerent powers would amount to an unfriendly act.

ATTACK WAGE BOARD PLAN.

Massachusetts Employers Question Legality of the Statute.

BOSTON, Aug. 12.—A bill in equity asking for an order restraining three members of the State Minimum Wage Commission from proceeding further in the work of organizing a wage board to fix the rate of pay for employes in candy factories was filed in the Superior Court today by twenty-six manufacturers.

The plaintiffs say that the proposed wage board is not an impartial board as demanded by the statute, and that the original act is unconstitutional.

Previous action of the commission fixing minimum wages for employes in candy factories was set aside by the Attorney General on the ground that the commission had failed to comply with certain statutory requirements. To rectify its mistake the commission reappointed the same wage board.

Record Shoe Auction Next Week.

The largest wholesale auction of shoes that has ever been known to the local shoe trade will begin in this city on Wednesday next at 10:30 A. M., when Morse & Rogers, through Van Praag & Co. and Max Kalter, auctioneers, will sell the entire stock of the Clark-Hutchinson Company of New York, which is now in liquidation. The stock which will be offered for sale has been inventoried at $125,000. It consists of $89,000 worth of men's, women's and children's shoes and warm lines, $21,500 worth of new and unused samples, $4,500 worth of used samples, and $10,000 worth of Spring goods. The goods will be sold on the former premises of the Clark-Hutchinson Company, 125 Duane Street, where they will be on exhibition on Monday and Tuesday. The terms of the sale, which will continue on Thursday and Friday at the same hour, will be cash or approved thirty days' credit. Catalogues may be obtained either from Morse & Rogers or the auctioneers.

Sheepskins Off at London.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—A sale of sheepskins was held here today, at which 7,757 bales were offered. Only a small number of buyers attended, and withdrawals were frequent owing to the limited demand. Fine merinos ranged from unchanged to ½d. lower, and other declines were: Clothing, ¼d. to ½d.; short shorn, 1d.; pelts, ½d. to 1d., and crossbreds, ½d. to ¾d.

Taking Plaid Ribbons.

While the effort to stimulate the demand for ribbons is not yielding very perceptible results as yet, there is some "nibbling" being done just now on plaids. The business received on these ribbons is said to be an outcome of the successful marketing of plaid designs in silks. The only large business being done just now is on velvet ribbons in the narrow widths, and large imports of these goods are finding ready buyers. Colored silk ribbons that have also been received from abroad are being bought to be re-dyed black.

A New Collar Style.

After finding that a lightweight collar made with a sheerer interlining than usual was impracticable for use during the hot weather months because the material wilted, a leading shirt and collar house has introduced this make of collar in a new design for the Fall. The front is made with a V effect, and though the collar may be ironed flat in a laundry it will regain its shape if a pencil is inserted between the two layers of material and given a few twists. The collar is more flexible than those made of heavier plies, and for that reason feels more comfortable on the neck of the wearer.

Trend Toward Higher Qualities.

A salesman for one of the leading houses making Summer fabrics, who has just returned from a selling trip through the West, said yesterday that he finds the present demand in that territory is for higher quality goods. The clothiers in that section have found it is necessary to put a good grade of cloth into a suit in order that the garments may be properly tailored. For this reason the sale of all-worsted tropicals of eight and nine ounces has shown a big increase, and it is said to be not at all improbable that the development of the Summer clothing business will be along that line. On artificial silk fabrics there has also been a larger volume of orders put in by the manufacturers for next Summer.

Fall Collar and Shirt Business.

The shirt and collar makers are enjoying a fair trade, although there have been some radical changes in policies among the leading houses, and the business as a whole has been unsettled for a number of reasons. Spring sample lines are being drawn up, but it is a little too early as yet to say very much about the coming styles. For Fall, the trend in collars seems to be toward narrower-spaced designs, as the men's neckwear manufacturers are offering goods that make smaller knots. In shirts, the negligee styles in striped materials, with starched cuffs, have sold the best. Very few figured effects in shirtings are being sold. Some difficulty is being met in the dress shirt end of the business through the cutting-off of supplies of piques from France.

Here for American Merchandise.

H. Van Heuckelum of Van Heuckelum & Lapierre, importers, with offices in Buenos Aires, Montevideo and Santiago, will be at the local branch of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, 409 Custom House, from 10 to 12 o'clock every morning during the next ten days. Mr. Van Heuckelum is interested in making agency connections with American manufacturers of upper leathers, such as patent sides, calfskins, patent colt, etc., as well as in making connections with manufacturers of all kinds of shoe findings, millinery goods, women's and men's furnishings, electrical and sanitary supplies, window glass, office furniture, leather goods and miscellaneous articles. His firm has heretofore handled European goods exclusively.

Gray Goods More Active.

Yesterday was another pretty good day in the gray goods market, a nice business having been done on 38½-inch 64-60s, for delivery to the end of the year, at 3¾ cents. Some nearby business was done on 39-inch 80 squares at 5⅝ cents, and sales of 39-inch 68-72s were made at 4⅝ cents for shipment through October. Nearby business was done on 38½-inch 60-52s and 60-48s at 3⅜ and 3¼ cents, respectively. There was not a great deal of change in the situation, as it affected sheetings and drills, but the business done on fancy cloths was said to have been large. Spot prices on leading staple printcloths were:

39-inch, 80-80s	5¼c	38½-inch, 64-56s	3½c

Difficult to Make Deliveries.

The adjustment of the labor trouble in the coat and suit industry has cleared the way of a brisk business in dress goods. The manufacturers are asking for immediate deliveries of goods they have on order, and the mills are having difficulty in keepng abreast of the demand. It is a seller's market now, and price advances are already beginning to be felt. The advice of the best-posted mill agents to the buyers is against putting off their purchases, on the ground that in the very near future merchandise of a desirable sort will be hard to get, and prices will be much higher. No mistake has been made, it is generally agreed, by those manufacturers who have covered their needs in advance. No style changes are in view to add a disturbing factor to the cutting-up trade, and there are no "dark horses" in dress goods that the buyer will have to guard against.

A Practice Unfair to the Mills.

It is customary in many selling offices, when the manufacturers represented give notice of an advance in prices, for the salesmen to notify certain of their customers so that orders may be taken at the old prices. This practice, the manufacturers hold, is obviously unfair to them and to the customers who are not told of the impending advance. The manufacturers naturally want to get business at as high a price as possible, and to have orders put in at old values is, they say, to take away just profits. Prices are quoted to buyers subject to change without notice, and if this held for all the customers of a house, there would be no complaints made by the clothing manufacturers who are not given advance information concerning increases. The peculiar part of this trade practice is that the customers who get notice of a coming price change rarely appreciate what the salesman has done for them.

Italian Raw Silks Higher.

The Milan raw silk market continues to advance and holders are refusing all concessions. A good demand for European and American consumption has absorbed what little silk reelers had left on hand, and as a result ready stocks are small and poorly assorted. The Yokohama market is steady at last week's quotations, with a fair business for American account. Sales for the week there amounted to 4,400 bales, according to cables received by Maitland L. Gwalter & Co., while stocks amount to 7,500 bales. Canton reports a firmer market, and reelers there are unwilling to contract for forward deliveries, particularly in coarse sizes, in view of the scarcity of cocoons. The Shanghai market is quiet but steady. The new tsatlee silks are held at full prices, with an advance of about 3 per cent. on the lower grades, which are in active demand for home use. The local demand is good for ready silks and nearby deliveries. Spot silks, particularly Cantons, command a premium.

ALASKA LANDS WITHDRAWN.

5,802,000 Acres Through Which Railroad Will Run Restored.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—Nearly half of the land in the Chugach National Forest, Alaska, through which the Government railroad is to run, is restored to the public domain by proclamation of President Wilson, made public tonight. The boundaries of the forest, as redrawn by the proclamation, contain approximately 5,818,000 acres, 5,802,000 acres being with drawn.

Forest Service officials explained tonight that the land withdrawn had been classified and found lacking in timber value sufficient to warrant Government protection. The area retained is heavily timbered, its present growth being estimated at 8,000,000,000 merchantable feet.

The elimination acreage includes the towns of Hope, Sunrise, Kenai, and Ninilchek and three large tracts, one being along the entire southern slope of the Chugach Mountains, another lying northeast of Seward, between Resurrection and King's Bays, and the third located northwest of the Kenai Mountains, in the region of Tustamena and Skilak Lakes.

Homesteaders are warned that the chances of locating in the withdrawn land are not encouraging, as they contain few agricultural areas.

SATURDAY

The New York Times Want Page on Saturday opens to the advertiser opportunities that are of unusual value.

On that day the Want Columns are read with more special care because of the greater time available.

The half day given to most people gives the freedom not granted to every one on other week-days for seeking furnished rooms, for renting an automobile and for attention to other matters of personal concern suggested by want advertisements.

BUSINESS TROUBLES

AMERICAN 5 AND 10 CENT STORES.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against the American 5 and 10 Cent Stores, a corporation, with offices at 315 Fifth Avenue and stores in various cities, by Ludwig M. Wilson, attorney for these creditors: The Taylor, Smith & Taylor Co., $928; Standard Pottery Co., $1,284, and D. E. McNicol Pottery Co., $185. It was alleged that the corporation made preferential payments $5,000, transferred merchandise and accounts $1,000, permitted creditors to obtain preference by legal proceedings, admitted in writing inability to pay its debts, made a trust deed, and permitted an equity suit to be taken against it by some creditors, and a receiver was applied for. Judge A. N. Hand on Wednesday gave a decision in which he did not appoint a receiver, as the officers were allowed to continue the business. The corporation a few weeks ago asked creditors for an extension, and a committee was selected to arrange the extension. Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia University, was a Director in the corporation.

LEWIS KAPLAN.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against Lewis Kaplan, doing business as the New York Bargain House, at 35 Walker Street, by these creditors: Max Shapiro, $683; Bernard L. Cohen, $158, and William I. Rudick, $120. He also made an assignment to James P. Stephens. Liabilities are $6,000 and assets $4,500.

E. I. WEIL & SON.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against Ernst I. and Felix Weil, composing the firm of E. I. Weil & Son, manufacturers of women's neckwear at 85 Fifth Avenue, by A. L. Reid & Co., a creditor, for $696. They made an assignment on Aug. 9 to David A. Nathan. Liabilities are $20,000 and assets $8,000.

JOSEPH H. HARRIS, salesman of 538 West 111th Street, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $10,904 and assets of unknown value. He was formerly a wholesale glass dealer at 111 Cedar Street, and made an assignment on March 20.

CLIFFORD A. SCHAPPELL, printing on commission at 105 William Street, has filed schedules showing liabilities of $36,436, of which $21,850 is secured by realty mortgages, and nominal assets of $11,880, consisting of machinery, $1,500; accounts, $1,880; bond and mortgage, $2,000, and real estate, $6,500, consisting of property in Brooklyn and eighteen lots in Marion Park Addition.

HYMAN GELBERG & KONOGY, trading as the U. S. Waist and Dress Manufacturing Co., at 1265 Herkimer Street, has filed schedules showing liabilities of $36,436, of which $21,850 is secured by realty mortgages, and nominal assets of $11,880, consisting of machinery, $1,500; accounts, $1,880; bond and mortgage, $2,000, and real estate, $6,500, consisting of property in Brooklyn and eighteen lots in Marion Park Addition.

HYMAN GELBERG & KONOGY, trading as the U. S. Waist and Dress Manufacturing Co., at 1265 Herkimer Street, has filed schedules showing liabilities of $20,029 and assets of $4,111, consisting of stock, $1,000; notes, $111; machinery, and fixtures, $2,500, and accounts, $600.

ROSE PROVISION CO., INC., of 170 Suffolk Street, has filed schedules showing liabilities of $7,661 and assets of $7,409, consisting of stock, $1,080; fixtures, $3,500; accounts, $1,370; wagons, $600; cash in bank, $200, and a chattel morigage of $50.

DAVID LONDON.—Judge Hand has denied a discharge from bankruptcy to David London, formerly a wholesale silk dealer at 13 Astor Place, against whom a petition was filed on May 31, 1913, on account of financial statements he made to the State Bank and to Bradstreets.

J. FRED PIERSON, JR., & CO.—Judge Hand has ordered Ralph Wolf receiver of J. Fred Pierson, Jr., & Co., stockbrokers of 74 Broadway, to sell the shares of stock of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company either on the New York Stock Exchange or on the Curb. In a former order of sale this stock, through a typographical error, was listed as the Westinghouse Air Brake. The stock has made a big advance since they became bankrupt in December, 1914.

COOPER & POLLAK STRUCTURAL IRON WORKS, INC., fabricators in structural iron and steel at 18 and 20 Jackson Street, has filed an assignment to Marcus Helfand. The business was started in 1904 and incorporated in September, 1911, with capital stock of $10,000. Charles Cooper is President.

QUEENS LAND AND TITLE COMPANY.—Judge R. H. Smith of the City Court has appointed Alfred J. Rifkind receiver for the Queens Land and Title Company, which had an office at Forty-second Street and Broadway and developed Masapequa, L. I., in supplementary proceedings on application of the Chemical Engraving Company, which obtained a judgment against the company on April 12 for $1,025. Dr. George F. Haight was Secretary and Treasurer. In October, 1914, the Title Guarantee and Trust Company, as trustee, brought a foreclosure suit against the company for $868,300, and many judgments have been entered against the company.

CHARGE BAD MEATS BEAR FEDERAL O. K.

Ex-Grand Jurors Ask Wilson to Have Department of Agriculture Investigated.

WRITE ON EASTLAND SINKING

They Allege Carelessness in Steamboat Inspection Was Pointed Out by Them in 1913.

Because their recommendations asking for a more thorough meat inspection in this district have been ignored, the Federal Grand Jury for July, 1913, has sent, through a committee, an open letter to President Wilson demanding that a stop be put to a system of meat inspection which permits diseased meat to be shipped from New York City bearing the official stamp of the authorities.

The Grand Jury asks that both the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Commerce be investigated, the latter in connection with the Eastland disaster. Charles F. Brown is Chairman of the committee, and his letter in part says:

"I wrote you regarding the laxity of inspections of meats, under date of Jan. 14, 1915, referring to the methods employed by the Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Animal Industry, and requested that a committee should be appointed by you, with full power as Grand Jurors, to continue the investigation to a successful conclusion. I regret, however, you should have seen fit to have referred this matter to the Department of Agriculture, for I wrote Secretary Houston on Feb. 6, 1915, expressing the opinion that I failed to see how a department could investigate itself with justice to all concerned.

"The committee has had several communications from Secretary Houston regarding the matter, particularly with the misuse of the label system on the part of the packers, but no action seems to have resulted. Our Grand Jury did not take action until we had found, through sworn testimony, that meats shipped from New York to Charleston, S. C., were reeking with maggots and skippers, albeit the barrels and boxes bore the official stamp guaranteeing the contents as having been properly inspected under the laws.

"The writer states that the Grand Jury in 1913 made recommendations to the Department of Commerce regarding the steamboat service similar to the findings of the Illinois State's Grand Jury in connection with the Eastland disaster, and continues:

"I hereby make the same charges, but in so doing fail to see with what degree of satisfaction to the public a department can investigate itself. Thus I sincerely trust that you will see the necessity of supplanting the heads of both these departments in the premises. Otherwise our labors are but vain, and conditions, bad as they have been and are, will only continue unless some member of Congress intervenes to bring about a Congressional investigation. Why are conditions permitted which allow a Slocum or an Eastland disaster?"

819 Eligible to be Policemen.

Dr. Henry Moskowitz, President of the Municipal Civil Service Commission, yesterday notified Police Commissioner Woods that 819 eligible patrolmen are at his command whenever needed. The new list is the result of an examination held April 1, 1914, at which time 927 candidates were examined. The old list, containing 655 names, was used up on June 4. Eighty per cent. of the candidates on the list received appointment. Police Commissioner Woods has 100 or more vacancies for patrolmen, but the limitations of his School of Instruction will not permit at present more than thirty-five appointments. Dr. Moskowitz says the commission will next dispose of the 7,000 applicants now awaiting the test for firemen.

REPORTS WERE PREMATURE.

Commerce Bureau Head Denies Russian Trade Plans Are Completed.

Dr. E. E. Pratt, Chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, who was in the city yesterday, said that the dispatches from Washington published in yesterday's newspapers to the effect that plans had been completed to handle Russian imports, were premature. He denied that his visit here was for the purpose of putting the plan into operation.

"The facts are," said Dr. Pratt, "that tentative plans for getting goods out of Russia for the use of American consumers have been laid before the Russian Imperial authorities, but as yet we have not heard if the proposed arrangements are satisfactory." E. C. Porter, agent in charge of the local branch of the bureau, who will probably handle the details when the plan is effective, said he wished it understood that he cannot assist interested merchants until the plan is formally approved and made operative.

Dr. Pratt also said that the Department of Commerce through its Commercial Attachés, has started an investigation into the hardware situation in many of the leading foreign countries. He asserted that the department has a fund of $15,000 available for this investigation.

The ten attachés have been instructed to employ recognized experts in the hardware line in their respective countries. These experts will make reports covering every phase of the business, technical and commercial. It is expected that the reports will cover something like forty countries and fill three or four volumes when published. The fact that they are to be written by authorities on the subject is expected to give them unusual value.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Strawbridge & Clothier Win Case Affecting Fancy Cotton Damasks.

Strawbridge & Clothier, Philadelphia, were sustained yesterday by the Board of General Appraisers in a contention for lower duty on cotton table damask woven on Jacquard looms. The Collector classified the merchandise as "Jacquard figured manufactures of cotton," and took duty at the rate of 30 per cent. ad valorem. Judge Cooper held that the goods should have been admitted by the Collector at 25 per cent. ad valorem under the provision for cotton table damask.

The Stone & Downer Company and F. A. Foster & Co., Inc., Boston, lost in protests against the Collector's assessment on upholstery goods by failing to submit sufficient evidence in support of their contentions. The goods in controversy consisted of what is known in the trade as casement cloth, which is used for upholstery purposes. It is composed of jute and cotton, the latter being the component of chief value. It was classified by the Collector as Jacquard figured upholstery goods composed wholly or in chief value of cotton. Duty was exacted at 35 per cent., while the protestants claimed a rate of 30 per cent., as manufactures of cotton. At the trial the importers failed to prove that the merchandise was not made on Jacquard looms, although it was shown that similar goods were made in this country on the Dobby loom.

F. S. Vandegrift & Co., Philadelphia, objected to the Collector's action in assessing duty at 10 per cent. ad valorem on merchandise described on the invoices as "gunny shoddy." Among the claims was one that the commodity should be allowed free entry as fibrous vegetable substances. Although the importers submitted samples, they failed to give any testimony regarding the character of the importation. Judge Hay, overruling this protests, said the board had no expert knowledge enabling it to decide cases on exhibits alone.

SETTLE QUIMBY ESTATE.

Referee Denies Claim Put In by Aviatrice's Executor.

John A. Sleicher, executor of the estate of Miss Harriet Quimby, the aviatrice, killed near Boston, on July 1, 1912, has "unlawfully and without proof of or allowance thereof by the Surrogate, paid to himself the aggregate amount of $2,327 upon an alleged loan claimed to have been made by him to the deceased in her lifetime," according to the finding of Referee Louis W. Wendel, Jr., in his report filed yesterday in the Surrogate's Court.

The referee further says:

"The deceased, Harriet Quimby, neither borrowed money from Mr. Sleicher, nor did he, the claimant, loan any money to the deceased."

The referee was appointed to determine the merits of Mrs. Ursula M. Quimby's (mother of the aviatrice) objections to Sleicher's accounting of the estate.

Dealing with Mr. Sleicher's contention that the mother holds certain property of the decedent in her possession and which should be turned over to the executor, the referee finds that it is not necessary for Mrs. Quimby to turn the property over to the executor, but should be held to have received $400 of her legacy of the entire estate of about $15,000.

BROOKLYN NAVY YARD BUSY

Some Ships Awaiting Repairs May Be Sent to Boston.

There is such a rush of work in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, supposedly because of developments in Mexico, that the Navy Department probably will send several smaller vessels awaiting repairs to the Boston yard. All the dry docks in the Brooklyn yard are now occupied, and several destroyers are waiting to be docked.

The battleship Maine and the superdreadnought New York could be made ready for sea in a few days. The New York is to leave Dry Dock 4 on Tuesday.

THE REAL ESTATE FIELD.

Duane Street Investment Deal—Mortimer L. Schiff Takes Option on Robins Island for Shooting Preserve—Active Brooklyn Market —Lace Firm Leases Part of Old Arnold-Constable Building.

An investing syndicate has purchased from the Heuer estate the two five-story business buildings at 76 and 78 Duane Street, adjoining the old Cobweb Hall. The properties have a frontage of 49.4 by 77.1 deep, extending through to Republican Alley. The structures will be extensively altered and they have been leased on a long term to one tenant. M. B. Larkin acted as the broker in the deal. The property has been held at $200,000.

M. L. Schiff Has Option on Robins Island.

In addition to leasing Robins Island in Peconic Bay last May, it was learned yesterday that Mortimer L. Schiff has obtained an option to buy the property. The option extends to Oct. 1. The island is situated between Great and Little Peconic Bays, and has been owned for several years by a club of sportsmen known as the Robins Island Club. Ex-Justice Henry A. Gildersleeve is President, and William H. Force, Secretary and Treasurer. The club has been limited to about twenty-five members. The island contains nearly 250 acres, and it is understood the property is held at about $200,000.

Close Deal for East Side Apartment House Site.

Permission has been granted to the Wallach estate by the Court to sell to Julius Tishman & Sons the property at 162 and 164 East Seventy-ninth Street. The property measures 40 by 102.2. Julius Tishman & Sons hold title to the adjoining sixty feet and plan to erect a thirteen-story apartment house on the site. Douglas Robinson, Charles S. Brown Company negotiated the sale.

Investors Buying Tenements.

An investor has purchased from the trustees of Cooper Union 106 to 110 East 111th Street, a six-story tenement with stores, on a plot 52.6 by 100. The property was taken in foreclosure proceedings a week ago on a bid of $52,000. The Douright Company has purchased from the Lawyers' Mortgage Company, 206 East Ninety-eighth Street, a five-story tenement on a lot 25 by 100.11; also 352 Madison Street, a five-story tenement on a lot 23.6 by 95.4.

Brooklyn.

The McInerny-Klinck Realty Company has sold to an investing client for Charles Goell, 358 East Twenty-third Street, a one-family brick dwelling on a lot 20.6 by 102.6.

Friday & Lehmann have sold, 733 Chauncey Street, a two-story and basement, two-family frame dwelling for Anna Griesmann to a client for occupancy; also 1,253 Jefferson Avenue, a two-story and basement, two-family frame dwelling, for Frances Kleinteich to an investor.

Hoffman & Klein have purchased from the Alco Building Company, 2,047 Sixty-sixth Street, a one-family dwelling.

Frederick Fox & Co., sold for the Quiller Morgan Company, the dwelling at 369 St. John's Place, Brooklyn, to John I. Atchison. The buyer gave in part payment five acres of land at Rahway, N. J.

Operator Buys 133 Long Island City Lots.

Otto Kelsey, a Brooklyn realty operator, has taken title to a valuable tract consisting of 133 lots located in the Thomson Hill section of Long Island City. The property was formerly owned by the Boro Bridge Realty Company and it was sold to satisfy a mortgage for $84,000.

William F. Ryan of Jamaica was the referee in the action and the property went to Kelsey for $84,500. The property is part of seven blocks with frontage on the east and west sides of Carolin Street between Nott and Greenpoint Avenues.

Long Island.

In the Fourth Ward, Borough of Queens, the New York Suburban Land Company has sold a lot 20 by 100 on President Avenue to S. Samuels, also a lot 20 by 100 on Oxford Place to F. R. Nehring.

Fifteen Flats for Bay Ridge.

Maxwell A. Cantor has filed plans for two large operations to be started at once in the Bay Ridge section, which is experiencing general building activity as a result of the opening of the new Fourth Avenue Subway.

The westerly block front on Third Avenue, from Sixty-first to Sixty-second Street, is to be improved with ten three-story apartment houses by the Man Construction Company, and five similar buildings are to be erected on the northwest corner of Fifth Avenue and Seventy-seventh Street, by the S. & A. Brooklyn Building Corporation.

Dr. Decker, U. S. N., Buys Staten Island Plot.

Dr. Corbin Jay Decker, U. S. N., retired, has purchased through Cornelius G. Kolff, a plot 55 by 155, facing the Plaza at Harbor View, Clifton, S. I. The buyer will improve the site with a dwelling for his own occupancy.

Commercial Leases.

M. & L. Hess, Incorporated, have leased for the estate of Henrietta Constable and other, the store and basement at 115-117 Fifth Avenue, south east corner of Nineteenth Street, now occupied by the wholesale department of Arnold, Constable & Co. The lessees are Case & Co., Incorporated, lace importers, now at 10-20 West Nineteenth Street. The new tenant will take possession about Dec. 1, 1915, after extensive alterations.

Horace S. Ely & Co., in conjunction with Frederick Southack and Alwyn Ball, Jr., have rented for Rogers Peet & Co., the small store at 483 Fifth Avenue, in the new Rogers Peet building to Aitchison & Co., opticians, at 1,167 Broadway, between Twenty-seventh and Twenty-eighth Streets. Aitchison & Co., will not remove from their present quarters, where they have been for thirty years, but will operate two stores.

The Cross & Brown Company has leased in conjunction with Ogden & Clarkson, the store at 1,875 Broadway to Senior Brothers for A. G. Spaulding & Bros., and the Cross & Brown Company has also rented the store, basement and sub-basement at 47 Murray Street to the Motor Car Equipment Company, for Dr. Slevin.

Midtown Plot Lease.

Pease & Elliman have leased for a term of years the plot, 58 by 100 feet covered with three old dwellings, at 148 to 152 West Thirty-seventh Street, for the M. Cohen & Brothers Realty Company to Lipman Abel, who contemplates demolishing the present buildings, and the erection of a new one.

$500,000 Mortgages in Queens.

Mortgages aggregating $500,000 were filed yesterday in the Queens County Clerk's office by two companies engaged in large developing operations. Another for $16,500 was given to secure funds for the erection of stores and dwellings in the Woodhaven section.

The Hollis-Bellaire Real Estate Company gave a mortgage for $400,000 to the Metropolitan Trust Company upon improved property in Kings and Queens Counties. The mortgage covers thirty-six blocks. All of the parcels in Queens are in the Hollis section east of the old village of Jamaica, with the exception of a plot at Greenwood and Cherry Avenues, Richmond Hill.

A mortgage of $100,000 was placed on the six-story loft building on Meadow Street, between Anabel and Pierson Streets, Long Island City, just completed, for the Brett Lithographing Company. The mortgage was given by the Meadow Street Realty Corporation, which erected the building, to the Citizens' Savings and Trust Company of Cleveland, Ohio.

Real Estate Notes.

Gaines & Drennan Company, Inc., have placed for the Kearns Construction Company a loan of $32,500 on property 2,877 Grand Concourse Boulevard.

Justice Weeks has signed an order permitting the St. Elizabeth's Industrial School to sell its property, consisting of two four-story houses on a plot 52 by 103.3, at 237-237 East Fourteenth Street, 103 feet deep, to William Bernstein for $55,000. A theatre and office building will be erected on the site.

A payment of $184,000 has been made by the Dime Savings Bank of Brooklyn to the Lambs Club, being the first installment of the $300,000 loan, which was negotiated by the Mr. Morgenthau, Jr., Company for the Lambs for the erection of their new club house at 128-134 West Forty-fourth Street. The steel frame of the new building is up to the fourth story.

THE WEATHER

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—Pressure distribution over the United States is very irregular, with low pressure prevailing generally, and there were showers over practically all districts east of the Mississippi River, while west of the river there were only some widely scattered showers.

Temperatures remain moderate east of the Rocky Mountains, except in Texas, and high to the westward.

There will be showers Friday in the Atlantic States, continuing Saturday over the southern portion. There will also be local showers in Western New York, but elsewhere east of the Mississippi the weather will be generally fair Friday and Saturday, except in the East Gulf States, where there will be showers Saturday.

It will be somewhat warmer Friday in the Lower Ohio Valley.

The tropical storm was apparently central near the east coast of Jamaica and still moving in a direction a little north of west at 4 P. M. Thursday. At 2 P. M. a fresh easterly gale was reported at Port au Prince, Haiti, with pressure of 29.60 inches, and at 4 P. M. the pressure at Santiago, Cuba, was 29.68 inches, with light northeasterly winds.

The present rate of progress should bring the storm to Southwestern Cuba or the Yucatan Channel in about two days.

Winds along the North Atlantic Coast will be moderate south Friday and Saturday; Middle Atlantic Coast, moderate south and southwest; South Atlantic Coast, moderate south, except east off the Florida coast.

FORECASTS: TO-DAY AND SATURDAY.

Eastern New York, Southern New England and New Jersey—Showers Friday. Saturday, partly cloudy.

Western New York—Cloudy Friday; probably local showers. Saturday, fair.

Eastern Pennsylvania—Partly cloudy Friday; probably showers in east portion. Saturday, partly cloudy.

Northern New England—Showers Friday. Saturday, partly cloudy; probably showers in Maine.

3 A. M.	71	68	4 P. M.	78	73

9 A. M.	72	71	9 P. M.	70	71
12 M.	78	73	11 P. M.	69	71

This thermometer is 414 feet above the street level. The average temperature yesterday was 71; for the corresponding date last year it was 74; average for the corresponding date for the last thirty-three years, 73.

The temperature at 8 A. M. yesterday was 71; at 8 P. M. it was 70. Maximum temperature, 74 degrees at 3:30 P. M.; minimum, 68 degrees at 6 A. M. Humidity, 71 per cent. at 8 A. M.; 96 per cent. at 8 P. M.

The barometer at 8 A. M. yesterday registered 30.00 inches; at 8 P. M. it stood at 29.96 inches.

ACQUIT M'DONALD OF OSBORNE ATTACK

Court Refuses to Entertain Complaint of Riley's Agent Against Sing Sing Warden.

NIGHT TRIAL A COMEDY

Accused Man Admits He Once Worked for Albany Gambler—No Evidence of "Frame-Up."

Special to The New York Times.

OSSINING, N. Y., Aug. 13, (Friday.)—The jury in the trial of Patrick H. McDonald, confidential agent of Superintendent of Prisons John B. Riley, on a charge of assaulting Warden Thomas Mott Osborne on the morning of July 30, brought in a verdict of not guilty at 1:55 o'clock this morning after being out twenty minutes. Mr. Osborne's charges grew out of a scuffle on the platform of the Ossining station of the New York Central Railroad for the possession of papers McDonald had taken from Sing Sing on the morning of Charles Becker's execution, without permission from the Warden.

In announcing the verdict Foreman of the Jury Robert Tompkins said the jury had decided it wasn't much of a scrap after all and that McDonald's possession of an order from Mr. Riley entitled him to take the papers or anything else his chief wanted from Sing Sing.

After the verdict was announced McDonald asked Police Magistrate Valentine, who conducted the hearing, to issue a warrant for Mr. Osborne's arrest on a charge of assaulting him. The Magistrate told McDonald he would have to produce some new evidence.

"The verdict was just about what I expected," said the warden. "But I think the purpose of the complaint has been fully served by the publicity given the facts in the case."

The Warden then said he believed the people of the State of New York would act as their own jury in the case.

"If the people of Ossining want the keeper of their prison to be in danger of assault while in the performance of his duty," he asserted, "that is up to them. I feel that I have done my full duty."

In the summing up counsel for neither side laid emphasis upon the allegation of an attempt to "frame up" the Warden.

Joseph A. Green, attorney for the Warden, hammered at McDonald in an effort to establish that there had been a conspiracy to "get" Warden Osborne, wrung from him admissions that he had lied to the Warden in obtaining a pass into the prison, that he had dealt with no one but convicts in obtaining the 600 documents he took away from the office, and that he had tried to get out of Ossining in a hurry after he had the papers.

McDonald in Gambling House.

McDonald also admitted that before he became Mr. Riley's confidential agent he had worked in a gambling house in Albany.

Time after time Mr. Green pressed this question:

"What kind of an investigation were you sent to Sing Sing to make?"

Every time it was asked McDonald evaded a direct answer.

McDonald referred to the Warden and Timothy and J. J. O'Connor, who were with Mr. Osborne when he recovered the papers, as "rough-necks," and said he had been the one assaulted and not the Warden.

Morris Rice, ticket agent for the New York Central, caused a sensation when he said that several days ago he had been approached by a clergyman who asked him to change his mind about testifying against McDonald.

"The man was dressed in a black suit—I do not think he was a priest," said Rice. "He said to me, 'McDonald is a good fellow, and you oughtn't to say anything against him. This fellow Osborne is no good.'" Rice said he told the man he would tell what he saw.

Court Scene Is Homelike.

The trial was staged in a stuffy little courtroom over the Ossining Police Headquarters and the crowd was the crowd that might have gathered in any country courtroom. By the side of Magistrate Valentine on the not lofty bench was a privileged photographer, who from time to time snapped about everybody and everything in sight. A young woman stenographer fanned herself with one hand and frequently notified the witnesses to "Hold on" while she corrected the notes she took with the other.

The first hour of the trial was taken up with getting the six jurymen. Twelve talesmen had been drawn, and from these four jurymen were chosen. The Sheriff then called "Joe" and "Tom" and other acquaintances from the crowd until both sides had exhausted their five challenges each and the jury was complete.

Unannounced, John A. Hennessy walked into the courtroom while the jury was being called.

"Oh, John, come here," called Warden Osborne across the courtroom, and the two had a tête-à-tête for several minutes. It was said that Mr. Hennessy was familiar with McDonald's history and would be a witness for Mr. Osborne.

The audience was in good humor and on the whole seemed to lean to Warden Osborne. McDonald's counsel, Mr. Fagan, seemed well known to the auditors, and from time to time there was heard "That's one on you, Ben," when the Warden made an especially cutting reply to a question. Magistrate Valentine showed no disposition to encumber the witnesses with court rules, and Warden Osborne had a free hand to air his grievances in regard to what he believed to be a "frame-up" against him.

Warden Osborne First Witness.

In his opening address Mr. Green said he would show that Warden Osborne had been assaulted by McDonald. Counsel for McDonald said he would show McDonald had been wronged; that he had exhibited his orders from Superintendent of Prisons Riley before he took the papers from the Sing Sing office.

Warden Osborne was the first witness. In response to questions from his counsel he told just why he believed McDonald had tried to "put one over on him." In beginning he said he had known McDonald for several years. He said McDonald had arrived in Ossining from Albany on July 29, the night before the execution of Charles Becker. He intimated that he believed McDonald had counted on his not being at the prison on the day of Becker's execution, attributing that expectation as a cause for McDonald's visit at the time.

"On the morning of the 30th," the Warden continued, "after being up all night, I went to sleep at 7 o'clock. At 8 o'clock a guard announced Mr. McDonald. I had left a call for 9 o'clock, and, not being ready to get up, I sent word that McDonald could wait. McDonald then came to my bedroom and asked if the order excluding persons from the prison on the day of the execution applied to him, Superintendent Riley's agent. I said not at all, and gave him a pass into the prison."

"Did you have any argument with McDonald over papers?" asked Mr. Fagan.

"No," was the reply.

Arose at 9, McDonald Gone.

Mr. Osborne then said he arose at 9 o'clock, and while at breakfast a letter was handed to him. He opened it and found the order from Superintendent Riley for certain papers.

"That was the first I ever saw of the order," he said.

It was contended by the defense that McDonald had shown the Warden Mr. Riley's order before he took the papers from the files in the prison office.

Mr. Osborne said he learned at breakfast that McDonald had taken the papers and that after he had finished he got into an automobile with Timothy and J. J. O'Connor, minor prison officials, and went to the railroad station where he found McDonald seated on a bench with a leather bag between his feet.

"I want those letters," the Warden told Mr. Riley's agent.

"I act under the authority of Superintendent Riley," McDonald answered.

"I don't care if you act under the authority of the President of the United States. I want those letters," was the reply.

"Don't touch that bag," said McDonald.

Mr. Osborne then told how he took the bag, put it on the bench, opened it and took out the papers. The O'Connors stood between the Warden and McDonald.

The witness then said that McDonald took hold of his neck and struck him on the chest with such violence that a button was torn from his shirt.

Shirt Button in Evidence.

"You haven't put the button in evidence," interrupted Mr. Fagan, with a smile.

"Oh, yes," was the reply, "I have it here."

Mr. Osborne then said that among the letters McDonald seized were a number of a private nature which could not have been of any concern to the Prison Department. He exhibited several personal letters he said were among those MacDonald had in his bag.

On cross-examination Warden Osborne scored several times on Mr. Fagan, who was rather belligerent in his questioning.

"Didn't you take the O'Connor boys along to help beat up McDonald?" Mr. Fagan asked.

"Oh, no," was the answer. "I didn't do that. You see, they didn't know where they were going. I didn't think they needed the morning air so much, but I just took them along because I like company when I go for automobile rides."

Mr. Osborne then called a "lie" the assertion that McDonald had shown him the order from Superintendent Riley before the papers were taken.

He was asked why he had so quickly granted McDonald the order on which he reached the Sing Sing office.

"I didn't think it was of importance then," he said, "but I think the fact of the order being asked for is important now in the light of subsequent events, for it shows he was trying to put one over on me."

Timothy O'Connor was the second witness. He said he was an office assistant for the Warden, and denied that he had been taken to the station to help the Warden get the papers. He said that when Mr. Osborne asked him and his brother to go for a ride they didn't know where they were going. Mr. Fagan tried to make a point of the admission of the witness that he had once been a member of a George Junior Republic settlement.

Warden Outweighs McDonald.

When the witness said he didn't think the Warden needed any help in getting the papers from McDonald the crowd looked at the Warden and then at McDonald. There was a difference of six inches in their height and of fifty pounds in weight. Mr. Osborne is more than six feet tall and heavier. McDonald and the Warden also showed a difference in garb. Mr. Osborne's was more quiet. McDonald wore a big diamond ring and a new suit of clothes.

Then McDonald took the stand and told an entirely different story of the affair at the station. He said he was roughly handled and called the Warden a "rough-neck" several times.

"When I got to the station," he said, "I bought my ticket and went out to sit upon a bench on the platform with my bag on the floor. When the Warden and his two huskies came along, I got up. Osborne gave me such a push that I fell back on the bench so hard I thought I had broken it."

Echoes of "Oh" from all parts of the courtroom greeted this statement and showed that the crowd was with the Warden. McDonald's lawyers protested vigorously.

McDonald Describes Struggle.

"Then John O'Connor got a strangle hold on my arm," said McDonald, and he gave an illustration. "He rushed me across the platform. In the meanwhile the Warden rifled my bag. Then he went through it a second time, saying, 'I'd better make sure. That man would steal anything from Sing Sing.'"

On cross-examination McDonald said that when he got to the prison on the morning of the 30th he received a very cold reception. He said that when he tried to see the Warden he had to wait. He admitted that he told the Warden he wished to talk with prisoners in getting his pass. He said that when he left the Warden's bedroom he told him he had a letter from Mr. Riley, and testified that the Warden said he would attend to that later.

He said that when he got to the office, the head keeper wasn't around and that the only person he saw was Bob Kelsey, a convict. He said he showed Kelsey Riley's order and that Kelsey remarked "Well, here's where I get the cooler and a transfer to Dannemora." Kelsey then handed him the papers and he left the prison at once.

The witness admitted that he had worked in Albany for a firm controlled by James Tickens, and that Tickens ran a gambling house. He said he had nothing to do with the gambling part of the business, but worked in a stock brokerage office Tickens maintained in the same building. He said that previous to working for Tickens he had managed some bicycle racers. He wouldn't give the dates of these employments.

On cross-examination he said that in addition to Riley's letter he had verbal orders to "find out things," but he refused to tell what. Magistrate Valentine ruled the question could not be pushed.

SEEK FINGERPRINTS ON GLASS BOY'S TOYS

If Obtained They Will Be Sent to Oklahoma to Aid in Identifying Child Found There.

GRANDMOTHER HAS HOPE

She Believes Parents Are Mistaken in Their Decision That the Boy in Norman Is Not Theirs.

In order to settle the question whether the four-year-old boy found at Norman, Okla., with his mind a blank, is James Glass, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Glass of 13 Leinau Place, Jersey City, who disappeared three months ago, the grandmother and aunt of the missing James got out the child's dolls and toys yesterday to have the police try to obtain finger prints from them.

In spite of the fact that Mr. and Mrs. Glass decided positively last night, after hesitating for two days about the boy's identity, that the child was not theirs, the Glass boy's finger prints, if they can be developed, will be sent to the police at Norman to compare them with the finger prints of the lad now in their care.

On Wednesday Mrs. Glass sent from Norman to her mother, Mrs. J. E. Englebrecht of 15 Lienau Place, Jersey City, a telegram saying that the child there was not James, but that it had taken her four hours to be sure. Late Wednesday night Detective Rooney, who was sent with Mr. and Mrs. Glass to Norman, sent the following telegram to Deputy Director of Public Safety James F. Norton:

Child answers description in every particular. Glasses positively state it is not their son.

The description which Norton had went into great detail, naming moles and birthmarks and scars. Yesterday Mrs. Englebrecht received from her daughter the following telegram:

Child bore most remarkable resemblance. returned second time and took child with us for observation. Has identical habits, but different moles. Mind blank. Must attend court Thursday. Judge wishes us to take child home in hope he may be James, anyway. Residents positive from resemblance, but we know differently. Return Sunday. May bring child.

This did not extinguish the grandmother's hope that the child at Norman would prove to be her grandson, because she had differed with her daughter as to the position of the moles on the child's body, and felt positive that her own recollection on this point was correct.

Last night, however, Mrs. Englebrecht received from her daughter the following telegram:

Will not bring child back. Positively not ours.

Even this has not put an end to the misgivings of the grandmother as to the ability of the parents of the child to decide as to the identity of the boy in Norman. When a picture of the foundling was received from Oklahoma several days ago the relatives of the missing child were sure that it was he.

BLACK ADDRESSES LEAGUE.

Tells Young Democrats of the Opportunities in Politics.

Chairman William Harmon Black of the Democratic County Committee, addressing the members of the Young Men's Democratic League last night at 1,368 Broadway, said that politics offered great opportunities and honorable careers to young men today, more so than in any previous period of the nation. He cited as good examples of the successful young men in politics the careers of State Senators James A. Foley and Robert F. Wagner, William F. McCombs, Chairman of the Democratic National Committee; Assemblyman Alfred E. Smith, and Joseph P. Tumulty, secretary to President Wilson.

Other speakers were Francis D. Gallatin, private secretary to Supreme Court Justice Platzek and Secretary of the National Democratic Club, and ex-State Senator Walter I. Herrick. There were 1,200 members of the league gathered in front of the headquarters of the league for an open-air meeting at Broadway and Thirty-seventh Street, but the rain made it necessary to finish the speaking indoors.

TO SAVE GIRLS' SHIP HOME.

Many Offers of Aid, but Arbuckle Heirs Must Decide.

Miss Lilian L. Deaver, Chairman of the committee that is working to save the Jacob A. Stamler floating hotel for working girls, reported yesterday that offers were being received from many people in this city and even out of the State, who wished to help in the work.

"We had a letter from a Maine woman today," she said, "who offered us $100 toward saving the ship, and added that if we needed it, she would give us $400 more. A New York woman told me that we could count on her for $1,000, and there have been many other offers of help, several of them coming over the telephone.

"As the matter now stands, the Arbuckle heirs are considering what shall be done, and we hope to have their answer before the end of the week. Our committee feels that whatever may be the ultimate result, there can be no successful plan which does not include the hearty co-operation of those who for so many years carried on this splendid work for the self-supporting girls of small income.

"We realize through the many telephone calls and letters which are being received hourly that the public is anxious to help. The committee, however, does not feel that it has the right to accept contributions or to outline any plan which is not, first of all, in harmony with and supported by those who in the past have carried on this work alone. The committee hopes those who have volunteered their help will not lose interest until a decision has been reached as to future plans."

NATIONS' APPEAL GOES TO MEXICO

Carranza Leaders in Mexico City First to Receive the Call to Make Peace.

HARD TO REACH OTHERS

Washington Not Sure Carranza Will Let Messages Pass to Hostile Chiefs.

VILLA WILLING TO RETIRE

And His Party Is Ready to Trust President Wilson and the Latin-American States.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—The communications embodying the appeal of the United States, Brazil, Argentina, Chile, Bolivia, Uruguay, and Guatemala, to the leaders of the warring factions of Mexico began to go forward to these leaders by telegraph today. How many of the leaders were addressed in today's communications could not be ascertained at the State Department where the reticence that has characterized statements about the Pan-American conference on Mexican affairs was shown with reference to details of the concurrent effort to pacify the perturbed Southern republic.

The copies of the appeal sent today went by telegraph to the United States Embassy in Mexico City for distribution to the Carranza Generals and other leaders there. Telegrams to Carranza, Villa, and Zapata containing the appeal will be sent soon, probably tomorrow.

The impression has been created here that the State Department is withholding the transmission of some of the communications on account of information or belief that their delivery to certain leaders will be interfered with by the Carranzistas. It is supposed that all the communications, addressed to the Governors of the Mexican States and other persons of prominence in the several factional movements, will not be cleared from the State Department until there is assurance that delivery is reasonably certain.

Señor Naon, the Argentine Ambassador, called on Secretary Lansing today, and it was said afterward that their talk had shown that there was no misunderstanding between them as to the purposes of the United States and the Latin-American nations in undertaking to urge the Mexican factional leaders to compose their differences. The call of the Ambassador was due to published statements indicating that the response of the Argentine Government to General Carranza's protest against the reported purposes of the Pan-American conference was misleading in that the response said the conference had been "based from its incipiency on the understanding that any act or design which might mean an interference in the internal affairs of Mexico should be eliminated beforehand, and above all any purpose of armed intervention." Officials stated yesterday that this statement gave a wrong impression for the reason that armed intervention had never been mentioned in the conference.

After the visit of the Argentine Ambassador to the Secretary of State, it was explained in an authoritative quarter, that while it was true that the matter of armed intervention had not been mentioned in the conference and had not been brought up in any advance understanding of what the conference was to consider, an oral explanation made on June 29 by the Secretary of State to the Brazilian Ambassador, for communication to his diplomatic colleagues from Latin-American countries, had been in such terms that the Latin-American Governments would understand that armed intervention or any act "that might mean an interference with the internal affairs of Mexico" was not contemplated. It was said, however, that there had been no mention of armed intervention specifically in Secretary Lansing's conversation with the Brazilian Ambassador. The reported misunderstanding has left no ill-feeling and Secretary Lansing and Ambassador Naon laughed over it today.

Villa Willing to Retire.

Announcement was made by the Villa agency here tonight that Villa and his associates, in contrast to Carranza's attitude, were ready and willing to retire from political control in Mexico. This announcement was based on the following telegram received today by Señor Llorente, the Villa agent, from Señor Lombardo, the Minister of Foreign Affairs in the Villa administration:

"I do not believe that the sending of American vessels of war to Mexican waters can be considered as a purpose to intervene on the part of the United States, inasmuch as the invitation to be sent by the Pan-American conferees to the military chiefs in Mexico contains no menace whatsoever, according to the dispatches that I have read relative to the subject. The cablegram sent by President Plaza of Argentina to Carranza in answer to his impertinent message justifies my opinion, since in categorical terms President Plaza states that Argentina is taking part in the conferences on the condition that the sovereignty of Mexico be respected and rejecting any idea of intervention in our internal affairs, above all, by means of force.

"I believe, furthermore, that by racial solidarity and for their own future convenience the Central and South American nations, not only would not take part in any armed movement against our country, but would protest against any act of this character. I firmly believe, also, in the good-will of President Wilson toward Mexico, and that the American Government will not attempt any armed intervention, inasmuch as it has asked the co-operation of the Latin-American nations, one of them being Argentina, which declines its opposition to such intervention in the internal affairs of Mexico.

"If President Wilson had a plan for intervention within a period more or less remote, he surely would not have invited Argentina to the conference, since that Government, in distinct, friendly terms for Mexico, had expressed its view reflecting, no doubt, the sentiment of the people of that republic.

"If the peace conference between the factions in Mexico reach a successful end, not only General Villa, but all the civilian and military elements affiliated with the Convention party would be disposed to eliminate themselves, if necessary, with the single condition that the men who are placed in charge of the new situation shall solemnly agree to restore constitutional order, and that they

SAY GERMANS LOST CRUISER IN FIGHT

Russian Reports Tell of Heavy Damages to Other Warships in the North Baltic.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 13, (Dispatch to The London Times.)—According to the latest unofficial accounts the Russian Baltic fleet inflicted heavy losses on the German battle squadron near Oesel yesterday. It is stated that a large German cruiser was destroyed and several other warships were severely damaged.

Despite the heavy firing of the German ships the Russian vessels did not sustain any loss or serious injury. Russian seaplanes again rendered invaluable services in supporting the fleet.

It is surmised that the enemy's purpose was to reconnoitre the waters of the Northern Baltic, and, if possible, to bottle up the Russian fleet in the Gulf of Finland and the Gulf of Bothnia. So long as the Russian warships are able to penetrate south it will be impossible for Germans to provision General von Billow by sea or to send transports to Libau or Windau. Operations of a hostile fleet must, therefore, be regarded as a necessary adjunct to land operations between the Dvina and the Niemen.

AUSTRIAN NAVY LOSES ANOTHER SUBMARINE

U-3 the Second Undersea Boat Destroyed by Italians Within a Week.

ROME, Aug. 13.—The Ministry of Marine tonight made public the following official communication:

Yesterday morning in the lower Adriatic the Austrian submarine boat U-3 was sunk. The second officer and eleven men of the crew were saved and made prisoners.

VIENNA, Aug. 13, (via London.)—The War Office tonight made the following announcement:

Our submarine U 12 has not returned from a cruise in the Northern Adriatic. According to Italian information, it has been sunk, with its entire crew.

Since Austria and Italy have been at war each has lost two submarines, the former the U-12 and the U-3, Aug. 11 and 13, respectively, and the latter the Medusa on June 17 and the Nereide on Aug. 7.

The U-3 was a Germania, Krupp type boat, built in 1908-10. Her displacement was 237 tons on the surface and 300 submerged. Her speed was twelve knots an hour on the surface and nine submerged. Her maximum surface radius was 1,200 miles at nine knots an hour. She had two 17-inch torpedo tubes and carried 17 officers and men.

SAYS INDIA WAS SUNK IN NEUTRAL WATERS

Norway Notifies Germany Her Territory Was Invaded in Destruction of British Vessel.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—Reuter has received the following dispatch from Christiania:

"The British auxiliary cruiser India was sunk by a German submarine in Norwegian territorial waters, according to the contention of the Norwegian Government. It is officially announced that, just as Norway previously insisted that the West Fjord in its entirety was Norwegian territorial water, the Government has, on the occasion of the torpedoing of the India, informed Germany that the West Fjord from time immemorial has been regarded as belonging to the Norwegian sea territory. This was specifically the case with the part of the fjord where the India was attacked."

The India was torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine on Aug. 8.

ZEPPELINS KILL SIX IN RAID ON ENGLAND

Two of the Dead Are Women and 11 Women and 9 Children Are Among the Injured.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—Official announcement was made today of an airship raid last night on the east coast of England. Six persons were killed. One Zeppelin, the announcement says, probably was damaged, but escaped.

The official announcement says that besides the six persons killed, twenty-three were injured and fourteen houses were damaged seriously by bombs. The text of the announcement follows:

"Two Zeppelins visited the east coast last night, between 9:30 and 11:45 o'clock, dropping incendiary and explosive bombs in various places, resulting in the following casualties: Killed, four men, two women; injured, three men, eleven women, nine children, all civilians. Fourteen houses were seriously damaged.

"The Zeppelins were engaged at some points, but succeeded in getting away from our aircraft patrols. One of the Zeppelins was probably damaged by the mobile anti-aircraft section."

Last night's raid of Zeppelins was the second this week. On Monday night Zeppelins flew over the English coast and with their bombs killed fourteen persons and wounded fourteen.

These raids mark the renewal of the Zeppelin attacks on England, after an interval of several weeks. The last previous raid, with the exception of a minor attack on Harwich early in July, was on June 15, when sixteen persons were killed and forty injured. In all, there have been seventeen of these attacks, resulting in the death of sixty-two persons.

HINTS AT COTTON CONTRABAND RULE

Lord Robert Cecil Says the Allies Must Cut Off Their Enemies' Supply.

JUSTIFIES IT IN ADVANCE

Cotton Not Less Liable to Classification as Contraband Than Copper, He Asserts.

OUR GROWERS CONSIDERED

He Admits That They Must Have Neutral Markets, Even if Adjacent to Germany.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—In an official statement given out here tonight by Lord Robert Cecil Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs. Lord Robert makes plain that the Government is giving close attention to the position of American cotton growers, and that when a decision is made it will embrace full consideration of their predicament. In some quarters here the impression prevails that the statement is preparatory to the issuing of a declaration that cotton is to be considered contraband.

Lord Robert points out that inasmuch as the Government recognises that neutral European countries have a right to import cotton and America to export it to them, the British Government must protect itself against reshipments of cotton to Germany.

The Government has been conducting an investigation to ascertain what is the normal consumption of cotton by the neutral countries, and the inference is permitted that in the future a sharp line will be drawn so that no cotton above that quantity will be allowed to go to Norway, Sweden, and other neutral countries. Thus, while the British Government admits the right of America to ship cotton to European neutrals, it also reserves the right to say where shipments overlap the absolute necessity of neutrals, and beyond this point the Government will cling to its right to seize shipments. The Government insists on the privilege of deciding what the normal consumption of neutral nations may be at the time, so that no controversy may arise over shipments for which the British Government may have to pay.

This is no reflection whatever upon the integrity of American shippers, who the Government assumes are not in a position to know as well as the Government here exactly how much cotton is actually needed for the consumption of neutral countries, and how much out of any surplus might go on to Germany. In the opinion of officials, whatever cotton is now being reshipped to Germany from neutral countries is only that which is able to slip through.

Formal Interview Accorded.

By The Associated Press.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—Lord Robert Cecil, Parliamentary Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, in the course of a formal interview today, defining the British Government's attitude in the complicated cotton situation, made this statement:

"The Allies must by all lawful means prevent cotton reaching their enemies. It may be considered necessary to make cotton contraband."

At the same time Lord Robert studiously refrained from any hint that the commodity would be removed from the non-contraband list at any specified date, or that the Government had evolved any solution to meet the demands of American cotton growers and neutral consumers. He stated explicitly, however, that if cotton were made contraband England would consider the act legal and internationally justified.

His statement being the first on behalf of the Government outside Parliament relative to cotton, and coming at a time when the public is clamoring for drastic action to shut off the supply now reaching Germany, is taken in some quarters to presage such a step in the near future. Lord Robert's statement, which is prefaced with the explanation that it describes the Government's position concerning cotton, "so far as it is at the moment possible to define it," is as follows:

Lord Robert Cecil's Statement.

"The British Government, acting in conjunction with its allies, is giving the cotton situation its continuous and most earnest consideration. The Government is fully aware of the importance of cotton to America, we fully understand that upon a satisfactory adjustment of the matter depends to a considerable degree the welfare of nearly a quarter of the population of the United States. The welfare of the whole population of Great Britain, however, also is involved, as well as that of all Great Britain's allies, for whom the British Government is acting in these and other matters concerning contraband and trade.

"The fundamentals of the situation are quite clear. The Allies must by all lawful means prevent cotton reaching

Germany Hoards Cotton; No Strings for Parcels

BERLIN, (via London,) Aug. 13.—The German Government has promulgated two regulations intended to check the consumption of cotton. The first regulation limits the work in cotton mills, weaving mills, and establishments using cotton, wool, flax, hemp, and jute to five days each week. The other orders dealers, under penalty of expropriation, to dispose of stocks of cotton refuse within a fortnight to manufacturers who may work only on army and navy orders.

On account of the shortage of hemp and flax the shops no longer tie parcels.

PACIFIC MAIL SHIPS GO TO ATLANTIC LINE

Mercantile Marine Pays $8,000,000 for Five Biggest and Best Vessels.

RESULT OF SEAMEN'S ACT

Foreign Registry Probably Will Be Sought—One American Ship on Pacific.

The Pacific Mail Steamship Company has begun to disband its fleet owing to inability to compete with Japanese steamship lines in the Pacific trade under the La Follette seamen's law, which goes into operation in November.

The company has sold five of its larger steamers, the Manchuria, Mongolia, Korea, Siberia, and China, to the Atlantic Transport Company of West Virginia, a subsidiary of the International Mercantile Marine Company. No terms were mentioned in the announcement given out by the two companies, but it was estimated by shipping men yesterday that the price probably was about $8,000,000.

This transaction removes the Pacific Mail Company from the trans-Pacific trade and leaves one steamer to fly the American flag on the Pacific Ocean, the Minnesota, owned by the Great Northern Steamship Company of Seattle.

The book value of the Pacific Mail's thirteen steamships was given recently as $11,298,000, and it is understood that the eight remaining steamers, now engaged in the coastwise trade between San Francisco and Panama, will be disposed of before the end of the year.

Last Sailing Aug. 25.

The first news of the transfer of the ships from the Pacific to the Atlantic trade was made last night at the Pacific Mail office, 165 Broadway, by Frank Galpin, the Secretary, who said:

"The Pacific Mail Steamship Company announces the sale of five ships of its trans-Pacific fleet, namely Manchuria, Mongolia, Korea, Siberia, and China, to the Atlantic Transport Company of West Virginia. The last sailing from San Francisco by any of these vessels to Oriental ports on account of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company will be the steamship Mongolia on Aug. 25, 1915."

P. A. S. Franklin, Vice President and General Manager of the International Mercantile Marine Company, who is also President of the Atlantic Transport Company of West Virginia, said last night that the five steamers would be used in the Atlantic trade and in the Panama Canal service between New York and San Francisco. In an interview later he said:

"The two larger boats, the Manchuria and Mongolia, were originally built in this country for the Atlantic Transport Line, and were sold off the stocks to the Pacific Mail in 1904, so that we are only buying them back again. It is probable that both these steamers will be put into the Atlantic trade as soon as they are taken over, and operated under the American, British, or any other flag depending on which gives the lowest cost. The Korea and Siberia are two very fine ships of high speed, and may be used on the Panama Canal service.

Work in Sight for the Ships.

"We bought the ships because we can use them to advantage. The Manchuria and Mongolia are too large for the Panama Canal trade, but they will pass through on their way from San Francisco to New York. The first of the five to be delivered to us will be the Korea, which is expected in New York in September."

Mr. Franklin added that his company had no thought of operating a trans-Pacific service.

Mr. Franklin made it clear that new financing to pay for the purchase would not be necessary. It is expected that the International Mercantile Marine will arrange for payment out of earnings. In the first six months of this year the company earned $11,000,000 net, compared with an average of $2,656,387 annually in the six years ended with 1914.

The Manchuria and Mongolia are steel twin-screw steamships of 13,638 gross tonnage, 600 feet long, 65 feet 3 inches beam and 31 feet 1 inch depth of hold, and have an average speed of 17 knots. They were built at Camden, N. J., in 1904.

The Korea and Siberia were built at Newport News for the Pacific Mail in 1901, and no expense was spared in their equipment. They have accommodations for 300 first-cabin passengers, with spacious saloons and private suites and the latest equipment for safety and comfort at sea. They have made the passage from Yokahama to San Francisco under ten days and can average twenty knots at full speed. They are 551 feet 7 inches long, 63 feet 2 inches beam, 36 feet 8 inches depth of hold and 11,276 gross tonnage.

The China is a steel twin-screw steamer of 5,060 gross tonnage, built at Glasgow by the Fairfield Company in 1889, and purchased by the Pacific Mail when George J. Gould was President. She has accommodations for 250 first-cabin passengers, and all her saloons and cabins are fitted in solid Spanish mahogany. Her dimensions are: Length, 440 feet 4 inches; beam, 48 feet 1 inch, and 32 feet 8 inches depth of hold.

Impossible to Compete.

When the new Seamen's act was passed Pacific Mail officials said its trans-Pacific service would have to be abandoned because the act made it impossible to compete with the Japanese lines. The crews of all Pacific Mail steamers are Chinese, with American officers. Under the new law the crews must be men who speak the same language as the officers.

The Pacific Mail has operated a regular service to the Orient for more than forty years. It was looked upon as the pioneer of the American mercantile marine, and most of its officers in earlier days came from the United States Navy. Up to the last the Pacific Mail retained its discipline, and was regarded in San Francisco as next to the navy in the dignity of its officers and the upkeep of its ships.

PLAN $500,000,000 CREDIT FOR ALLIES

Bankers Deem It Necessary to Enable Them to Pay for War Supplies Bought Here.

EXCHANGE RATE ALARMING

Demand Sterling Drops to $4.70¾ to the Pound, Lowest Price in the Memory of Brokers.

Further pronounced weakness in foreign exchange yesterday caused such concern in Wall Street that the project of the establishment here of a British credit, which had been taken up from time to time without tangible results, received serious consideration. There were not lacking indications yesterday that bankers who had been handling financial matters in which Great Britain, France and Russia were interested had gone actively to work on plans for meeting a situation that had already become acute, and which, unless relieved soon, threatened to exert a depressing influence on this country's export trade.

Yesterday's discussions had to do without a much more imposing credit arrangement than that which was brought forward when J. P. Morgan paid his last visit to London. At that time the balance of trade against Europe had not assumed such large proportions and it was proposed to advance $100,000,000 in credits here. Yesterday's discussion turned on the possibility of arranging a credit of five times that amount.

International bankers have taken the stand in the last few days that when the bulk of the war supplies now being turned out goes forward the final payments then due will be so large as to make a credit of $100,000,000 ineffectual in stemming the decline in exchange. For that reason it has come to be accepted as a fact that arrangements should contemplate the provisions of $500,000,000. Not only would the supplying of such a sum make it unnecessary to draw exchange for the payment of war bills, but the fact that the money was ready here would be expected to stimulate purchases of sterling for an [illegible] It is now suggested that the credit [illegible] for the deposit here at [illegible] An effort has been made in Great Britain to collect such securities, but the response made by investors has not been encouraging. It is understood in the financial district that the securities sent to J. P. Morgan & Co. in connection with the recent gold shipment totaled more than $30,000,000. The plan now receiving consideration contemplates the mobilization of a much larger amount of American securities, which would be sent here to be held as collateral for money advanced. Collateral notes based on the advances would probably be offered to investors.

To facilitate the deposit of American bonds it may become necessary for the British Government to adopt unusual measures, such as the infliction of a special tax on American bonds, to be remitted only when such bonds are deposited with the Bank of England. It is proposed as part of this plan that the collateral should consist in part of British and Canadian bonds, possibly in the proportion of 25 per cent. in foreign issues and 75 per cent. in American.

The foreign exchange market fell into a condition approaching demoralization yesterday morning when heavy offerings of sterling and franc bills appeared, drawn against shipments of goods abroad. Brokers said after the rush of selling had abated that it was the most unsettled period of trading experienced since our rising trade balance caused exchange rates to drop to low levels last Winter. Demand sterling quickly broke down to $4.70¾ to the pound, a decline from the previous day's closing figure of 2¼ cents, and the lowest rate in the recollection of exchange brokers. Paris checks sold as low as 5f. 87c. to the dollar, an overnight decline of 6c.

Around noon rates showed signs of growing firmer, but the call for exchange continued so light that in the afternoon quotations for sterling and francs dragged bottom until the close. Rubles, on the other hand, at 33 cents each, were 3 cents higher than on Wednesday, and reichsmarks also held up steadily.

THUGS SHOOT YOUTH WITH GIRL IN PARK

Two Men Drag Joseph Lucey to His Feet and One Fires Bullet Breaking His Jaw.

The shrieks of a girl for help, the report of a pistol shot, and then more screams, sounded through Bronx Park shortly before 11 o'clock last night and brought several young men and girls running to a bench on Blue Ridge, a pretty and quiet spot in the park near the lake, where they found a hysterical girl and a youth whose upper jaw had been shattered by a bullet.

"Two men attacked us," cried the girl. "They were highwaymen, and they ran after they'd shot Joe."

The other girls quieted her while the young men assisted the wounded youth toward Fordham Hospital, only a few hundred feet away, and whence Dr. Eiss, who had heard the report of the shot and the cries, was already running toward the park.

He met the party and led it to the hospital. While the wounded man was put on the operating table the now quieted girl was questioned by nurses and physicians and by policemen who had been called in.

She said she was Miss Meta Grove of 2,122 Valentine Avenue, and that her companion was Joseph Lucey, a student in the New York College of Dentistry, living at 382 East 199th Street.

Miss Grove said she and Lucey had been seated on a bench, when two men, roughly dressed and wearing peaked hats, rushed from a thicket and confronted them, flourishing revolvers. One of them, addressing Lucey, exclaimed:

"Stand up! Throw up your hands!"

Both Lucey and Miss Grove thought the men were practical jokers, and both laughed, neither obeying the order. Then one of the thugs dragged the young man to his feet, thrusting a revolver close to his face, and as Miss Grove, thoroughly frightened now, screamed for help, the man fired. Then both he and his companion ran as Lucey fell back on the bench.

The police failed to trace the men.

HINDENBURG NOW SENT TO TAKE KOVNO; RUSSIAN LINES IN NORTH ADVANCING; RETREATING CENTRE QUITS SIEDLCE

Limit to German Pursuit, Says General Marwitz; May Stop at Russian Second Defense Line

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BUDAPEST, Aug. 13, (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—All signs indicate that the Austro-German armies will not follow up their advantage any further than the second line of the Russian defenses after the fall of the Russian fortresses, but will reorganize themselves behind Warsaw and await further developments there, strengthening and rebuilding the defenses behind them.

This theory is not only borne out by the fact that a further advance would be suicidal, owing to the marshes, but also by a statement of General Marwitz, commander of the Tenth German Army Corps, who is undergoing a cure in Hungary at present. He received a Hungarian journalist, and in answer to a question on the subject said:

"If the Russians repeat their strategy of 1812 by devastating and burning everything behind them, they can do so without, however, compelling us to repeat the strategy of Napoleon. The tactics of the Russians to retreat when in dangerous positions will not persuade us to follow them into dangerous positions. For themselves continuous retreat is detrimental to the morale of their troops, and, as far as can be judged from a distance, one may presume that the spirit of the Russian Army is broken already.

"As to the 1812 tactics, I am perfectly safe in saying that our armies will only continue the pursuit as long as their communications are not threatened and the work of supplying the army goes on unhindered.

"Up to now, six of the Russian fortresses are in Austro-German hands, and dozens of others have to be taken before the object of establishing themselves in the Russian lines of fortifications is accomplished. This object seems to be the final aim on the eastern front, and, in fact, one cannot see how anything more could be accomplished under the circumstances. All available strength has been concentrated on the long line, and the immense losses suffered will not allow embarking on another daring enterprise. Neither Germany nor Austria-Hungary has another 500,000 men to sacrifice for theatrical purposes, such as a move toward the interior of Russia would undoubtedly demand, apart altogether from the fact that such an invasion would mean two separate movements north and south of the marshes.

"The strength of the Central Empires has lain in the mobility of their armies up to the present, and in the railway system which permitted swift reinforcements and unexpected attacks. This would not be the case if they moved toward the east, even though the Russians pretended to be unable to make a stand on the Brest-Litovsk line."

VIENNA HOPES FOR BIG HAUL

Says Czar's Warsaw Armies Are Being Pushed Together, Making Escape Difficult.

LONDON, Saturday, Aug. 14.—Field Marshal von Hindenburg, upon whom the most difficult tasks are imposed, has personaly taken command of the German Army attacking Kovno, and, according to the German official report issued last night, has made further progress in the fighting against the Russians in that region.

The selection of Germany's national hero for the duty of capturing the fortress of Kovno, which stands between the Germans and Vilna and the Warsaw-Petrograd railway, is an indication of the importance the German general staff attaches to this operation.

The news that the civilians had commenced to evacuate Kovno as well as Vilna led to the belief in many quarters that the Russians either had decided to give them up or had no hope of holding them. Now, however, they are fighting hard to retain both cities, and in the latest official report from Petrograd it is claimed that the Russians have repulsed the German attacks, except at one point where a desperate artillery engagement is in progress.

Germans May Be In Trap.

Further north, between Poniowitz and Dvinsk, where General von Bülow a week ago was advancing rapidly toward the railway, the Germans apparently have suffered a setback, for the Russians now speak of pressing them, and declare they have reoccupied the town of Toviny, which is considerably west of the point to which the Germans had penetrated.

In fact several army groups in this operation have fallen into the trap of Grand Duke Nicholas and are in the gravest danger, according to The Daily Telegraph's Petrograd correspondent.

"At the moment," says the correspondent, "one of the most interesting points on the Russian front is between the Dvina and Niemen Rivers, where the Russians, by the capture of the village of Toviny, have cut through the German line, thus separating the German armies operating around Poniowitz and Vilkomir. The latter army is in a dangerous state and executing a frantic retreat in an effort to extricate itself and either reconnect with the Poniowitz group or join hands with the troops operating around Kovno.

"The German army operating in the vicinity of Poniowitz also is in a dangerous position, with its right flank exposed to a Russian attack, which could only have the most serious results.

South of Riga also the Germans are said to be doing little more than holding their own, so that the talked-of advance toward Petrograd seems to be developing very slowly.

On the other hand the Germans continue to drive in the Russians to the northeast and east of Warsaw, and with the capture of Siedlce are within a short distance of the Bug River, one of the main supports of the Brest-Litovsk line, which it was believed the Russians originally intended to hold, but which the German offensive to the northeast may prevent.

Field Marshal von Mackensen, who commands the Germans in the southeast, between the Wieprz and the Bug, again is reported to have been held up by a Russian counterattack, and it is declared in military circles that if he is not further south than he was a week ago, he certainly is not further north.

The military critics disagree as to the probable line on which Grand Duke Nicholas will elect to make his stand, but a majority of them consider it hardly likely that he will try to hold the Brest-Litovsk front.

Successes Claimed by Petrograd.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 13.—The Russian war office in an official communication tonight admits the evacuation of the towns of Sokolow, Siedlce, and Lukow, to the east of Warsaw, but claims that the Germans in the region of Riga have been driven back, and that near Kovno, under the pressure of the Russians, they have abandoned their attack.

The almost exclusive attention of military observers has recently been directed to the operations at Kovno, which is the first strong Russian fortress attacked by the method employed at Antwerp—a system devised by the Bavarian General Sauer. This consists of a cyclonic attack with heavy artillery on one point without an attempt at investment.

Liebknecht Gives Notice of Pointed Peace Query

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 13.—Dr. Karl Liebknecht, one of the Socialist leaders in the German Reichstag, has notified his Government from his post in the eastern war theatre, according to a dispatch received here, that he will ask at the opening of the Reichstag "whether the Government is willing entirely to abandon the idea of the annexation of conquered territories and enter into immediate peace pour parlers if the other belligerents are similarly inclined."

From a Staff Correspondent.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 13.—The official denial in the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung of the reports that Germany had made a peace offer to Russia through the King of Denmark is the political sensation of the hour, and gives the whole German nation an opportunity for a veiled discussion of the forbidden topic of the ultimate object of the war and the conditions of peace. It cannot be too strongly emphasized, however, that under cover of the peace talk, with the consequent tightening of lines of parties and factions for a big fight on the question of annexation, there is no sign that Germany is weakening or that her people are weary of war or ready for peace at any price.

On the contrary it is a new proof of the Germans' absolute confidence of winning, which has never been so strong as since Warsaw was taken, and of the national belief that the eastern campaign was going to be decisive in the world war, and that the beginning of the end was at last in sight. The significance of the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung's announcement lies in the fact that for the first time the phrase "peace proposal" was used.

Almost unanimously the German press approves the statement that reasonable peace offers would not be rejected, particularly as the announcemen is noncommittal as to what would be regarded as reasonable terms and leaves every German to read his own wishes into it.

The statement that the time will come for Germany to make peace proposals on its part only when hostile Governments see the futility of continuing the war is taken as a notice to a small but occasionally loud-voiced minority of Germans against harboring premature hopes of early peace.

Nevertheless, in view of the German military position, it is thought that this must be regarded as an important step toward the ultimate goal peace.

Commenting on the reports of German proposals to Russia through the King of Denmark, the Kreuz Zeitung, which speaks for the Prussian military party, says:

"It is curious that such rumors could find credence anywhere, since the moment when one is engaged in pushing a great military action, promising rich successes, to its logical conclusion is hardly the one that Germany would choose to make peace offers to the enemy."

The Morgenpost says:

SERBS OBSTINATE ON CONCESSIONS

Allies Redouble Pressure to Obtain Territorial Grant for Bulgaria.

REMIND THEM OF SUPPORT

Delayed London Message Is Not Too Optimistic of the Result.

ROME, Aug. 13.—It was learned here today on good authority that representatives of Great Britain, France, Italy, and Russia were exerting further pressure on Serbia in the hope of inducing her to make the desired territorial concessions to Bulgaria.

Serbia has been reminded of the support which she has received since the beginning of her difficulties with Austria last year.

Assurances have been given to Serbia that the Allies will assist her at the time of peace negotiations, provided she now yields to their desires.

The Bulgarian Minister to Italy, D. Rizow, discussing in the Tribuna the negotiations between the Balkan States and the Quadruple Entente, characterizes as unjust statements that Bulgaria considers herself indispensable to the Allies and is bargaining on that basis.

Bulgaria, the Minister asserts, has not changed her program. She was tricked into signing the treaty of Bucharest of 1913, under the terms of which she ceded to Rumania nearly 3,000 square miles of territory. What Bulgaria now wished, he continued, was reparation based upon the principle of nationality for which the Quadruple Entente was contending.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 13.—The Sofia correspondent of the Temps cables extracts from the Bulgarian press, showing that all parties agree that the Allies' terms are likely to prove acceptable if Greece and Serbia can be induced to make the desired concessions.

London Less Hopeful of Outcome.

LONDON, Aug. 12, (Delayed by Censor.)—There are strong indications that Serbia will give a flat refusal to the demands, announced by the Bulgarian Premier, Vassil Radoslavoff, three weeks ago, and that the hopes of the Entente Allies of bringing Bulgaria into the alliance will come to naught, according to some diplomats here.

Serbia's formal reply has not yet been given, but those best posted in diplomatic quarters say that Bulgaria's demands far exceed anything that Serbia would possibly yield.

The outcome is being watched with the keenest interest by the Chancelleries throughout Europe, as Bulgaria is the chief obstacle to united action by the Balkan States in joining the Entente Allies and thus throwing the Balkan barrier between the Central Powers and Turkey.

Bulgaria contends that by a treaty with Serbia the latter ceded to Bulgaria about 7,000 square kilometers of Macedonia, which Bulgaria was compelled by the great Powers to relinquish during her enfeebled condition after the second Balkan war. Bulgaria now insists that the original treaty be carried out, and that unless she obtains the return of Macedonia she will refuse to join the other Balkan States in assisting the Allies.

The present issue has renewed the smoldering feuds among the Balkans and much bitterness is said to have developed in the course of the negotiations, all pointing to Serbia's refusal to yield Macedonia, and to Bulgaria withholding her support from the Entente Powers.

Officials of both sides say, however, that the negotiations have not yet been abandoned, and that much depends upon mans appear now to be definitely held in check, and the Russians are again in full command of the situation, if indeed they ever lost it. The German plan aimed at surrounding the Russian armies and compelling a decisive battle. It failed utterly. The Russians are now fifty miles behind Warsaw in unbroken strength, and the Germans have all their work to do over again.

The Russian line runs roughly from Lomza to Wlodava with a convex face toward the enemy that is being steadily flattened backward. The progress of the fighting indicates that both wings will hold fast stubbornly until the main forces in the centre have reached their appointed positions.

On both wings the Germans continue to deliver most determined attacks, while the centre apparently is almost unmolested. Between the Narew and the lower reaches of the Bug the enemy is astride the main line from Warsaw, near Malkin, but is steadily held off further from the railway the further northward it runs.

The Fortress of Kovno is evidently requiring an enormous concentration of German forces, for its reduction according to the stories of local peasantry impressed for excavation labor by the Germans, but some of whom managed to escape to the Russian lines, the Germans have been laying down emplacements for monster artillery for at least a month past on the west bank of the Neimen eight or ten miles distant from the fortress itself.

These monster artillery positions are solid beds of concrete six feet thick, with steel columns inserted vertically. On top of the concrete is a stone foundation. Roads have been carefully laid from the nearest railway line with a concrete surface to bring up the monster guns. These were drawn by three traction engines at the rate of one mile an hour. These roads, which run under cover, also serve to maintain the ammunition supply during bombardment, the shells being brought up in motors.

The peasants employed to excavate were dismissed under guard to the rear when the digging was done and the German engineers completed the rest of the work.

Still Hope to Capture Russian Army.

AUSTRIAN HEADQUARTERS, Aug. 13, (via London.)—Despite the resistance which the Russians are offering to the pressure of the Austro-German armies on the northern and southern flanks, the Russian armies in Poland are steadily being jammed and crowded together into a mass the underground retreat of which is becoming more and more difficult.

On the southern wing where signs of breaking were observed in the battling around Lubartow the enveloping allied forces again have inflicted a number of severe blows and driven the Russian rearguards in upon their main body.

The Prussian guard corps particularly distinguished itself in the fighting in the difficult swamp and scrub country westward of the Bug. It has broken the most energetic Russian resistance in this region and accelerated Field Marshal von Mackensen's whole advance against Brest-Litovsk.

It is hoped by the German commanders that the effect of this pressure will soon be seen in the capture of increased numbers of prisoners, guns, and supplies.

Russians Check Teutons North and South, While Warsaw Armies Continue Retreat.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 13.—The War Office today issued the following:

In the region southeast of Mitau the Germans have been driven back by our troops beyond the River Aa. In the course of the enemy's retreat we made prisoners. In the direction of Jacobstadt, Dvinsk, and Vilkomir we have also continued to press the enemy, overcoming his desperate resistance.

In the Kovno district the Germans have temporarily abandoned their attack. An artillery engagement continues.

On the front between the Narew and the Bug our counterattack delivered on the 11th has helped our troops in the sector north of this front in their retreat on the positions situated further back.

In the middle Vistula region in conformity with the exigencies of the general situation we have evacuated Sokolow, Siedlce, and Lukow.

In general on the front on which our troops are operating on the left bank of the Bug there was no important engagement yesterday. On the right bank of the Bug and on the Zlota Lipa and Dniester Rivers there is no essential change in the situation.

Germans Claim Progress at Kovno.

BERLIN, Aug. 13.—The War Office today issued the following bulletin:

Eastern theatre of war: The troops of Field Marshal von Hindenburg, which are before Kovno, made progress. In the Dvina section the Russians made repeated attacks without success.

Between the Narew and the Bug we made further advances, although the enemy continually brought fresh attacking troops to this front, and his resistance had to be broken from section to section.

The army of General von Scholz took 900 prisoners yesterday and captured three cannon and two machine guns. Since Aug. 10 the army of General von Gallwitz has captured 6,350 Russians, including eighteen officers, nine machine guns, and one pioneering depot.

The troops of Prince Leopold of Bavaria have reached the district of Sokolow during continuous fighting, and after having captured the city of Siedlce last night, reached the Liwiec section.

VIENNA, Aug. 13, (via London.)—The following official communication was made public tonight:

In Eastern Galicia and in the region of Vladimir-Volynskyi there is no change in the situation.

Westward of the Bug the Austro-Germans continued their pursuit of the enemy, who is gradually retiring.

Northward of the Lower Wieprz the Austro-German troops have reached Radzyn, and the Germans are approaching Vlodava.

SET VLADIMIR ON FIRE.

Central Part of City Destroyed by Retreating Russians.

BERLIN, Aug. 13, (by Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—"The first real Russian, not Polish, town of some importance entered by the Germans was Valdimir-Bolynski," says an item given out today by the Overseas News Agency. "Retiring Cossacks set fire to the buildings. As the Cossacks galloped away German cavalry arrived at the other end of the town. The incoming troops tried to stop the fire, but with small success, and the central part of the city was entirely destroyed, the burned buildings including stores, restaurants and hotels.

"The suburbs and surrounding rural districts, the officers' residences, barracks, messes, schools and churches were spared.

"The German cavalry commander immediately restored order and established a military and also a civil government, the latter by appointing three administrative presidents, one of whom was a Pole, another a Russian and the third a Jew.

"At each false alarm at the return of the Russians the Jewish inhabitants fled in great panic, replying to the Germans who tried to stop them, 'If the Russians return we shall be killed.'

"The German general commanding next day appointed two additional presidents, one of whom was a Pole and the other a Jew. The refugees gradually returned to their homes.

"The German military authorities, on the suggestion of the Citizens' Committee of Warsaw, has declared a general amnesty of political prisoners there and set them free. Among these was the widely-known Russian labor leader, Medien."

RUSSIAN INQUIRY STARTED.

Officials Responsible for Munitions Shortage to be Punished.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 13.—Details given to the press of a secret session of the Duma on August 10 showed that an inquiry was initiated to determine the responsibility for the deficiency in war supplies.

The session engaged in a discussion of a committee report on military and naval affairs relating to the matter of recruiting for the coming year. During this discussion the question of defense came up. In the course of debate on this a number of members called attention to the alleged irregularities in supplying and in the failure to supply munitions for the army and navy.

The demand was made for an immediate cessation of irregularities and a correction of the shortage. All speakers on the subject emphasized the necessity of calling to account all persons responsible, regardless of how high the positions they may occupy or which they may have occupied.

General Polivanoff, the Minister of War, declared that for the purpose of an impartial inquiry into all these he had taken place to bring the army into its difficult situation there would be appointed a Commission of Inquiry, and that an investigation would be set on foot with the assistance of this Commission. In its inquiry the Commission would have the aid of both the members of the Duma and the Council of the Empire.

The Duma applauded the resolution. It has been informed that the Council of Ministers will visit the Grand Duke Nicholas at headquarters and lay before him the results of the Duma's secret session.

PORTE RECALLS ENVOY AT KAISER'S REQUEST

Diplomat Told Saltan That Germany Might Make Him the Scapegoat.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ATHENS, Aug. 10, (Dispatch to The London Daily News.)—Mukhtar Pasha, the Turkish Ambassador at Berlin, has been recalled at the Kaiser's request because he reported to Constantinople that Germany and Austria were in the last stage of exhaustion, and that the first serious German repulse would bring destruction.

He recommended the Porte to employ discretion, pointing out that if Germany lost, she would use Turkey as the scapegoat.

General von der Goltz, on hearing of the report, immediately cabled, demanding Mukhtar's recall.

RUSSIA TO TAX INCOMES.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—A dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from Petrograd says that the Finance Committee of the Duma has approved a government bill for the imposition of a graduated tax on incomes. The tax proposed is 6½ rubles ($3.25) on incomes of 1,000 rubles ($500), 325 on 10,000 rubles, 6,000 on 100,000 rubles, and a super-tax on each 10,000 rubles over 100,000.

SPIRIT OF HOPE BUOYS ALL RUSSIA

High and Low, Rich and Poor, Ready for Any Sacrifice and Confident of Victory.

FULLY LOYAL TO ALLIES

British Salvation Army Colonel Gives His Impressions Gained in Many Cities.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Saturday, Aug. 14.—Colonel Theodore Kitching of the Salvation Army Headquarters communicates to The Daily Chronicle his impressions of Russia at war. The article, which is dated Petrograd, July 24, says:

"Within the last eight months I have visited many European countries which are affected by the war. In each case I visited the capital as well as smaller cities, and have seen something of the underworld of poverty and sorrow and death which pervades the homes of the lower classes, as well as the grief and tears and sacrifice that reign in the homes of refinement and luxury. But of the fact of the war more evident, and that at every turn, than it is in Petrograd. It is impossible to get away from the memory of the war.

"I had hardly boarded an electric car outside the Finnish railway station after an all-night train ride from Helsingfors, before a detachment of wounded soldiers hobbled by. The Nevsky Prospect, that great pulsating avenue of commercial life, was dotted on both sides of the way with little groups of wounded. Never did you see one wounded soldier alone; always there were at least two, and invariably a Red Cross nurse was with them, responsible for their safe transit through the busy thoroughfares and for their safe return to hospital.

Wounded Soldiers Everywhere.

"On the great bridges spanning the Neva more wounded soldiers and more nurses. In the Churches of St. Peter and St. Paul, Resurrection, and St. Isak more wounded soldiers and more nurses. In the little chapels in railway stations and at the crossways of the great avenues in which holy pictures with lights ever burning before them claim the worship and alms of the passer-by, more wounded soldiers and more nurses. Everywhere wounded soldiers and nurses.

"And yet hope reigns, not despair. There are countless sad faces, but the sadness they wear is rather the expression of sober determination than of grief or anguish. It is something that is typically Russian. It is something you feel you have seen before, but you know not where; have seen it years ago in some war picture of Vereschagin, and as you look again the very look makes you clinch your teeth and set your chin and throw your shoulders back and say to yourself: 'Yes, we must go on whatever the cost; we must go on to the end.' Sadness and hopefulness combined—that is the chord that one hears struck, and it makes music.

"My first night in Petrograd I slept in a slum by choice, just without the eastern gate of the city. Despite the squalor, in the slum as well as in the mansion of the aristocrat, is that same spirit of hopeful expectancy. Salvation Army slum officers at whose table I sat told me of the courage which they find everywhere in the hearts of the poor as day by day they go in and out among them in the back streets teeming with thousands of those to whom a kopecks means a meal. Many are women whose husbands are at the front, children whose fathers will never return, old men and women whose sons will be seen here no more. The father of little three-year-old Lisette, eating porridge from a wooden spoon on the slum Captain's knee, will never see Lisette again, and Lisette's mother is in the hospital, where she is doomed to die.

"In the street beneath my window the tramp, tramp of workers going to or from their work was ceaseless all night long, late at night and early in the morning. All to whom I spoke—horny-handed munition workers, some of them—had the same story to tell: hope always, fear never. Warsaw may fall, Riga may be lost—what of that? It is but for a moment. Our cause is just; wait; we shall triumph in the long run. God will see to that. We have been disappointed, bitterly disappointed, it is true, but we do not despair. Right alone is true in might. You must have to wait, but if you will only wait you will see.

"This spirit of hopefulness, of resolute determination, of unshaken and unswerving confidence as to the ultimate issue, was well put by an accomplished student, proprietor of large estates, with whom I conversed.

"'It is true,' said he, 'our brave troops have had to fall back on some of our fronts, and they may have to fall back still further, but we have plenty of room to fall back to. If we fall back from Warsaw there is still Dvinsk in the marshland, and if we fall back from Dvinsk there is still Kiev, and if we fall back from Kiev there is still Kharkov, and if we fall back from Kharkov there are still half a dozen places from which to fall back before we fall back from Saratov, and if we fall back from Saratov there is still Vralsk and all Asia to fall back into.'

"And in the Government departments, Ministers, permanent officials, and junior clerks all breathed the same unchanging spirit of hope and of confidence. As to Russia's loyalty to her allies in their great cause there is no possible question, nor can there ever be. All talk to the contrary is so much claptrap, the sensational outpourings of discontents and misleaders. Especially is this true of Russia's fealty to England. The fact that I was an Englishman claimed and won for me wherever I went the respect, courtesy, and co-operation of every individual. Official, clerical, and private alike, they counted me their brother in a great and mighty cause.

The Feeling in Moscow.

"It is difficult to imagine two cities in one empire approximating so nearly to one another in size and so widely different from one another as are Petrograd and Moscow. Each place has points in which it excels over the other, but after a lapse of fifteen years or more since I was last in the ancient capital, I expected to see many modernistic improvements in street and home, which, however, I still found wanting. Petrograd is Western, pushing, and of favorable comparison with any city of Western Europe. Moscow is conservative, sleepy, and almost Eastern in her slowness. Moscow is Moscow. But the citizens of Moscow, proud as ever of the Kremlin and those impossible streets of rough-hewn cobbles, are unequaled within or without the Muscovite Empire for their loyalty to the Allies' cause and for their deep-seated hatred of Prussian barbarism and oppression.

"Moscow are not a German, Sir," ejaculated a retired naval commander, white-headed and back-bent, but with a voice that was still as clear as the sound of a bell, as he heard me stammering out an order in a restaurant, but of which I knew of my origin he clasped my hand as though I were a benefactor of his race. Quoth an unshorn Orthodox priest, picturesquely clad in his long girdled robe, to whom I expressed the hope that Prussian intolerance might never have sway over the fair fields through which we walked in his little parish hundreds of miles beyond Moscow: 'From such a thing may the Lord deliver us.' From more than thirty homes in his little parish husbands, fathers, and sons had gone to serve their colors, and this is but typical of thousands of such parishes throughout the length and breadth of the land.

"As we chatted an old man passed us, driving a load of sweetmeat stuff from his shop to a distant village fair. Father Dimitry hailed him, and a triangular conversation ensued.

"'This is an English gentleman,' said the priest.

"'An Englishman, Batuchka. Then he is my ally, my brother!' and I thought the old man was going to fall upon my neck. Three of his four sons he had given to the war.

"'This Ian Hamilton of yours, he is a great man,' said a Russian general officer to me as we dined together. 'He must be of our Russian blood. He ought to have been named Ivan, not Ian. He is one of us.' And then followed stories told with flashing eyes of brave deeds he had himself witnessed of Russia's bravery. On his coat were half a dozen medals and ribbons and insignia of nearly as many orders.

"The droschky driver who drove me from station to station over those cobbled Moscow streets was of the same mind, calm, hopeful, and resolute. 'You must have to wait, but if you will only wait you shall see.'"

GERMAN ATTACKS VAIN ON THE WESTERN FRONT

Infantry Assaults Fail at Nieuport and in the Argonne Forest.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—German infantry attacks near Nieuport and in the Argonne, which are reported to have been repulsed, and artillery actions in Artois, the Woevre, and the Argonne, were features of a night and a day of comparative quiet on the western front.

Following is the report issued tonight by the French War Office:

The day has been comparatively quiet.

In the region of Nieuport a German attempt has been repelled by our fire.

There is nothing to report along the rest of the front, except artillery actions in Artois, on the Apremont front, and in the Forest of the Argonne, where the cannonade has been accompanied by fighting by means of hand grenades and petards.

This is the text of the French afternoon report:

In the Artois district a German attack last night to the north of the château of Carleul was easily checked.

In the Argonne the Germans, late yesterday afternoon, renewed their attacks in the sector between the road from Binarville to Vienne-le-Chateau and the ravine of La Houlette. They were repulsed after a very spirited fight, in which hand grenades and bombs were used.

There is nothing to report from the remainder of the front.

The statement of the War Office in Berlin says:

In the Argonne several French attacks on Martinswerk, which was taken by us, were repulsed.

British Hold Up Coal.

STOCKHOLM, Aug. 13.—The British Government has refused to permit two shiploads of coal purchased by a Swedish firm for the Swedish Navy to leave England.

The incident has brought forth much bitter comment from the Swedish press and is absorbing the attention of the public.

REPLY TO AUSTRIA DENIES ARMS PLEA

To Put Embargo on Munitions Sales Would Be Unneutral Act, Vienna Is Told.

NOTE CABLED YESTERDAY

Document Outlines Stand the Administration Will Take When the Question Arises in Congress.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—The State Department today cabled to Vienna the answer of this Government to the Austrian note of June 29, making representations tantamount to a protest against the shipment of arms and ammunitions from the United States to enemies of the Teutonic Allies. The official text of the reply will be given out here on Sunday for publication in newspapers on Monday morning.

This communication has additional importance, in that it embodies the position President Wilson will take it an attempt is made in Congress to require the Government to stop munitions shipments to Europe. It is important also in its amplification of the declarations heretofore made by the President and William J. Bryan, then Secretary of State, that to stop munitions shipments would be an unneutral act in its discrimination in favor of Germany and Austria, and against Great Britain and her partners in the European struggle.

Generally considered, the note is a reiteration of the position assumed by the United States in Secretary Bryan's answer to a memorandum left at the State Department by Count von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, in which it was suggested that the shipments of munitions to Germany's enemies was not in accordance with the spirit of neutrality, and in Secretary Bryan's letter to Senator William J. Stone, Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, answering criticisms of persons of pro-German sympathies concerning the course of the United States toward the various belligerent governments. The note to Austria, however, amplifies and emphasizes the attitude of the Administration.

Some time ago President Wilson told a delegation of women of German birth or blood, who called on him to ask that he stop the shipment of munitions of war, that to do so would be an unneutral act, because it would be plainly for the benefit of one of the belligerents. The note to Austria will make clear that this is only one of the reasons that justify the United States in not interfering with the trade in war munitions. It will be indicated also that the United States feels that it has a perfect right to stop such shipments if that course is necessary for the benefit of the United States, but would be guilty of unneutral conduct if it stopped the shipments with the intent to injure or benefit one or the other of the belligerents. This attitude of the Government might be used as an argument by those who are insistent that the export of munitions be suspended as a reprisal against Great Britain, for her interference with American trade, and it is not doubted that it will be contended in Congress, particularly by Senators and Representatives from the cotton States, that the stoppage of ammunition shipments to Great Britain would not be unneutral, but would be justified on the ground that it was a necessary step for the benefit of this country.

The argument probably will be advanced, on the other hand, that the intent of such a course would be to injure Great Britain in a way that would be of corresponding benefit to her Teutonic enemies, which are not in a position to get war supplies from America, and would be unneutral for that reason.

The statement made by the President to the delegation of women has been construed as meaning that in no circumstances would the United States be justified in placing an embargo on shipments of munitions of war to Europe. But the position of the Government is that conditions might arise where this country might find it desirable for its own interest to take that course. To place an embargo on shipments of munitions to Europe as a means of reprisal against Great Britain on account of her interference with American trade would be to the great benefit of Germany, according to pro-German admission. As this Government views the matter, however, the United States would not be guilty of unneutral conduct unless this intent was to develop or hurt one or the other parties to the conflict abroad.

But it is evident from the context of the note to Austria that this Government adheres to its position that it is not violating neutrality in permitting war shipments to Europe. Trade in firearms and other munitions of war between a neutral country and a belligerent nation has never been construed as a violation of neutrality on the part of that neutral nation. This trade, it has been held, is as legitimate as trade in any other contraband, and nations have even established this principle by treaty agreements. Shipments of munitions of war are subject to capture and confiscation, and the shipper takes the risk of having his cargoes fall into the hands of the enemies of the country to which they are consigned. But it is not encumbent upon the neutral nation of export to stop the shipment of such munitions merely because they are consigned to one Government with which it is on friendly terms for use in hostilities against another Government with which it is also on friendly terms.

The position of the United States as set forth in the note is intended as much for American as for Austrian consumption. It is the Administration's answer to those persons who are behind the propaganda to have an embargo placed on munitions.

FRYE NOTE IN BERLIN.

Gerard Was to Deliver It to Foreign Office Last Night.

BERLIN, Aug. 13, (via London.)—The American note to Germany concerning the sinking of the American ship William P. Frye by a German commerce destroyer has been received by the American Ambassador, and will be presented to the German Foreign Office this evening.

FOUR STEAMERS SUNK, THREE LIVES LOST

One Woman Among Those Drowned When Submarine Blows Up British Freighter.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—Announcement was made today of the sinking of the British steamers Osprey, Summerfield, and Jacona, and the Norwegian steamer Aura. The chief engineer, the mate, and the mate's wife of the Summerfield were drowned. The others on board the four vessels were landed.

It also was announced that the trawlers Thrush and Humfrey had been sunk. The crews were saved. The men from the Thrush were at sea for three days in small boats before they were picked up.

The Summerfield, of 687 tons gross, was built in 1913 and owned in Liverpool. There are five steamships named Osprey. Shipping records mention no Norwegian steamer Aura.

The Jacona sailed from Middlesbrough, England, on Aug. 11 for Quebec. She was owned by the Cairns Line of London. She was built in 1889, was 318 feet long, and of 2,969 tons gross.

Urge German Civilians to Quit Belgium.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—The correspondent at Amsterdam of the Central News says the German authorities in Belgium have advised all German civilians to return immediately to their country, presumably to avoid hardships during the Winter in Belgium.

TRY DASH INTO ITALY ABOVE THE CLOUDS

Austrians Detected in Alpine Passes 10,000 and 11,000 Feet High.

ATTACKED AND PUT TO ROUT

Italians Also Win Skirmishes in High Valleys of Cadore and in Carnia Fighting.

ROME, Aug. 13.—The effectiveness of Italian Alpine troops in repulsing two Austrian attempts to cross the frontier through passes of the Alps at an altitude of 10,000 feet is praised by the Italian War Office in its latest official statement, issued under yesterday's date. The announcement says:

In the steep, rugged zone of the Furva Valley the enemy, who, on the 4th, had reconnoitred by patrols which were immediately driven back through the Vioz Pass (10,000 feet high,) delivered an attack on the night of the 9th across the Forno Glacier against our troops posted near the hotel of the same name, while another detachment advanced through the Zevolaio Pass (10,000 feet) against those of our troops who occupied Capanna Cedes.

The watchfulness of our Alpine troops, who, notwithstanding glaciers and high peaks, are incessantly active, succeeded in frustrating this bold double manoeuvre, and the enemy was soon repulsed. He was then counterattacked and forced to flee.

In Cadore small encounters turning in our favor are reported in the high valleys of Ansier and Visdende. In one of these fights we took as prisoners forty light infantrymen.

Isolated infantry and artillery actions also took place in Carnia, in the valley of the torrent of Fontebbana. An Austrian detachment trying to climb the Italian slope was attacked and put to flight.

On the Carso plateau during the day of the 11th no event of special importance occurred. Only small skirmishes are reported.

The exploit of Austrian troops chronicled in the communication called for audacity and endurance, which Italians concede rival feats of their own Alpine soldiers of whom they are so proud. The Austrian mountaineers succeeded in penetrating Italian territory for some distance before they were driven back.

The Austrians made their advance through the Furva Valley. They were obliged to cross granite mountains 11,000 feet high covered with snow. They also made their way over the Forno Glacier, the largest of sixty in that region, being eight miles wide.

After surmounting these difficulties the Austrians succeeded in penetrating five miles beyond the border, but when detected and attacked by Italian troops were forced to fall back.

Hostile Lines Close in Cadore.

A later bulletin, dated today, was made public tonight. It reads:

In Cadore the close proximity of our lines to those of the enemy, as a result of the progress made by our recent offensive, has resulted in slight attacks and counterattacks by each side.

On the night of Aug. 11-12 the enemy, after great artillery preparation, advanced against our new positions on top of Col di Lana, on upper Cordevole, but was repulsed.

On the other hand, our troops succeeded in dislodging the enemy, who was intrenched on the western slopes of Monte Piano at the head of Pallerieng.

On the Isonzo front the enemy made demonstrations, which were easily repulsed, against our positions on the spurs of the Rieme and Mrail, in the Monte Nero Range, and against heights recently conquered by us east of Plava.

On the Carso front the night of the 12th during a violent storm the enemy tried to surprise our advance works most menacing to him, but without any result.

VIENNA, Aug. 13, (via London.)—Concerning the operations on the Italian front the War Office tonight gave out the following statement:

Yesterday and last night the enemy on the coastal front of the Italian theatre again attempted some approaches, which, however, were repulsed by the fire of our artillery. An Italian camp near Cormons was successfully bombarded. On the Carnia frontier region there is no change.

Fighting continues on the Tyrol frontier south of Schluderbach. Here also hostile attacks were unsuccessful, and the defenders remained in possession of all their positions.

In the Etsch Valley an Austrian armored train expelled hostile guards from the villages of Serravalle and Chiozzola.

RAID ITALY'S PORTS AGAIN.

Austrian Destroyers Damage Molfetta, San Spirito, and Bari.

VIENNA, Aug. 13, via London.)—The following communication was issued today:

The Naval Commander reports that early Wednesday our ships bombarded the Italian Littoral Railway from Molfetta to Seno San Giorgio. At Molfetta four factories and two railway viaducts were heavily bombarded. One viaduct was shattered and one factory set on fire.

At San Spirito the station and several depots were burned to the ground.

At Bari the Castle Signal Station and five factories were bombarded. One of the latter was destroyed. The whole of Bari was covered with clouds of dust and smoke, and the population was panic-stricken. Italian guns of medium calibre fired ineffectively on our destroyers. An attack by a hostile submarine also failed.

The railway viaduct at Seno San Giorgio was badly damaged by our fire.

Our vessels all returned undamaged. With the exception of submarines off Bari, nothing was seen of hostile naval forces.

ATTACK ON SERBIA RESUMED BY TEUTONS

Orsova Bombarded and a Vain Attempt Made to Land at Ogradena.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BUCHAREST, Aug. 13, (Dispatch to The London Daily Mail.)—All Tuesday morning the Austrians violently bombarded Serbians at Orsova.

An attempted landing by Hungarians at Ogradena did not succeed.

Orsova is a town in Hungary on the border of Serbia and close to the Rumanian frontier. It is in this region that a Teuton army is said to have been massing for an attempted drive through Serbia to aid the Turks.

BARON BURIAN IN BERLIN.

Austrian Foreign Minister to Confer on Balkan Situation.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 13.—Baron Burian, the Austrian Foreign Minister, arrived in Berlin this morning for a conference with the Chancellor. Diplomatic circles believe the visit is in connection with the Balkan situation.

Commenting on Rumania's lifting of her embargo on cereals and petroleum, the Vossische Zeitung says:

"Far be it from us to see in this action a friendly and conciliatory step on Rumania's part. Our only answer can be this—to subject grain from Rumania to the existing maximum prices and not allow it to be imported into Germany so long as Rumania maintains the export tax, which constitutes unconcealed blackmail. A state which is suffocating under its unexportable grain cannot dictate terms to us if we are to take its grain.

"At the time when we were forced to subject our civil population to the most rigorous frugality in the use of bread and flour Rumania placed an embargo on grain and refused to allow grain previously purchased to go over her border. Today we are no longer anxious about our supply. We can easily do without Rumania's grain, and it is necessary to show ourselves firmly resolved in this."

RUMANIA LIFTS EXPORT BAN.

Grain and Petroleum Can Be Sold, but Gasoline Is Still Barred.

BUCHAREST, Aug. 13.—The export prohibitions on grain, beans, lentels and peas and petroleum have been discontinued and their export will be allowed against payment in Dutch gold.

The export of gasoline, however, is still prohibited.

LONDON, Saturday, Aug. 14.—The Daily Telegraph has received this dispatch from Bucharest:

"Rumania has replied to the German threatened prohibition of Rumanian imports by removing all Rumanian restrictions on the export of grain and reducing export duties. Prompt action to stimulate exports was made necessary by the fact that it was impossible to find storage for the new crops on account of the unexported balance of last year's harvest.

"There is no indication of Rumania yielding to the German demands for the transit of munitions."

BULGARIAN LOAN HELD UP?

Austro-German Bankers Reported Unwilling to Advance It in Gold.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—A Rome dispatch to The Daily Telegraph says:

"New difficulties have arisen in connection with the payment of the first part of the German loan to Bulgaria. Austro-German bankers are imposing extraordinary conditions which Bulgaria cannot accept. It appears that the bankers cannot dispose of so much gold and offer an equivalent amount in German and Austrian paper. In fine, the loan runs the risk of postponement or abandonment.

"Difficulties of a similar kind have also arisen between Bulgaria and Turkey in regard to the Dedeagatch-Adrianople Railway. Turkey is proposing conditions which are extravagant and unacceptable."

their enemies. That is a vital military necessity, which all the world will recognize. At the same time and equally important, consideration must be given to a great cotton-producing country like America and to consuming countries like Sweden, Norway, Denmark, and Holland. A policy must be devised which will respect the legitimate rights of neutrals and yet safeguard the legitimate interests of the Allies and inflict as much damage as possible upon our enemies.

Justification for a Cotton Embargo.

"Cotton has not yet been declared contraband, but under our blockade, all cotton which is believed to be destined for Germany is stopped. It may be considered necessary to make cotton contraband. There is a demand in the allied countries that this should be done. There is assuredly ample justification for the action if it is deemed necessary.

"Cotton is a very important, an essential ingredient, in fact, of propulsion explosives. Copper was contraband by all the laws of the nations, and yet in the present war cotton has been shown to be more important than copper. There may be a substitute for copper in making munitions of war. For cotton there is no known substitute. If American cotton goes through to Germany the Germans use it to kill allied soldiers. Therefore, cotton must not go to Germany.

"Making cotton contraband would be a distinctly legal action and can be internationally justified be ond protest. So far as American cotto, is concerned, however, the problem of marketing cotton on this side would undergo little change. American cotton destined for Germany is now stopped. If the product were made contraband it would be stopped in the same manner. The principal difference would be that if cotton were contraband, shipments from America, which were suspected of being for Germany, would be seized and would be liable to confiscation by prize court procedure if proof were obtainable of German destination, whereas now the cotton is seized, but not necessarily confiscated.

"In any case, whether cotton is contraband or not, the Allies must permit neutral trading in this product. American growers must be given their market in neutral countries even if they are adjacent to Germany, and the industries of those countries must have the cotton required for their own needs. How to permit this supply to move forward and yet safeguard the Allies' interests by making sure that none of it will go to the enemy constitutes a complicated problem of great dimensions.

"We are interested only in keeping cotton out of Germany. We not only do not object to its going to neutral countries, but we, in fact, are anxious that it should go in order that there shall be minimum inconveniences to the neutrals concerned.

"It is obvious what the loss of German and Austrian markets will mean to American cotton growers. We fully realize that if there is no German and Austrian outlet prices may go down, and that Americans will suffer unless some means are devised for compensation. Proposals in that direction have been made and are receiving careful consideration. What will come of them I cannot say at this time. Certainly I am not at liberty to imply that favorable action will be taken, nor will I say that it will not.

"All Americans must be fully aware of the complicated and gigantic character of any scheme of this sort and the study it will require before being put into operation. I hope America will not be impatient, but will rest assured that the Governments of the Allies will give every consideration to the legitimate interests of all neutrals."

COTTON GOODS EMBARGO.

Rumor of Coming Restriction on Exports Stirs Manchester.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—The Manchester correspondent of The Morning Post sends the following dispatch:

"A report that the Government War Trade Committee is about to restrict the export of cotton piece goods, on the ground that they may reach the enemy through neutral countries, has caused excitement in trade circles. The Manchester Chamber of Commerce is negotiating with the committee in an endeavor to limit the restrictions to certain markets abroad. The manufacturers want to keep the markets open in India, China, and other countries not contiguous to the enemy. The order is expected next week, and traders are anticipating a congestion of products."

WAR DEMANDS MUCH COTTON.

Huge Quantity Goes Into Explosives, but No Statistics Are Available.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—Evidently to prepare for possible advances in price, cotton manufacturers are showing great interest in the amount of cotton being consumed in making high explosives. The Department of Commerce is deluged with letters, asking if the Census Bureau has kept up with the flow of cotton into this new line of manufacture.

The Census Bureau has not been able to obtain the necessary data. It is known that a large amount of raw cotton and linters obtained from cottonseed oil mills is being bought by concerns which make explosives, but just how much apparently cannot be ascertained. The law requires the bureau to obtain every month the statistics of the amount of raw cotton consumed in general manufactures. The amount that goes into the manufacture of explosives cannot be separated from the general mass of cotton. Some manufacturers buy the raw cotton and purify it in their own plants. Others buy it after it has passed this stage. Some linters is not used for explosives, but enters different lines of manufacture.

To trace the crop through all these channels, Director Rogers of the Census Bureau says, is impossible. All he is willing to say is that an enormous amount of cotton is going into explosives.

NEW BARRIER AGAINST TRADE WITH HOLLAND

Trust Handling Imports Must Be Satisfied Former Consignments Were Not Exported.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—Further restrictions on commerce to Holland were reported to the Department of Commerce today by Commercial Attaché Erwin W. Thompson, assigned to Berlin, but temporarily handling United States commercial interests at The Hague.

Mr. Thompson cabled that the Overseas Trust, which handles all imports into the Netherlands under an agreement with Great Britain that none of the goods will reach Germany, had decided to issue licenses only to importers able to satisfy the trust that former consignments had been consumed in Holland. Only shipments consigned to the Overseas Trust are allowed to pass unmolested by Great Britain.

Dutch importers will be required hereafter to dispose of their goods under the immediate supervision of the Overseas Trust, which has formed a new committee for the purpose.

Mr. Thompson advised the department of an opening for American coal in the Netherlands market. Heretofore no coal from abroad has been allowed to enter Holland, but agitation resulting from a shortage of fuel has influenced the Overseas Trust to issue important licenses for the American product.

EXPECT EARLY BRITISH ACTION

Contraband Ruling Would Not Surprise Washington Officials.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—The Government has had no positive information as to what the attitude of the British Government would be in connection with the cotton situation; but from what they have heard on the subject, officials here are inclined to believe that unless the British authorities feel that they can sustain with neutral countries the course they have taken in holding up cotton shipments to Germany and neutral countries contiguous to German territory, while cotton is not on the contraband list, they will declare cotton absolute contraband.

Officials have heard also that Great Britain might finance the cotton crop of the United States as a means of placating cotton interests in this country, but it is not understood that this information came with any show of authority. As the case stands, the British Government cannot long delay positive action, and a speedy declaration is looked for.

The rejoinder of the United States to the latest British notes, which were in answer to the American protest against the Orders in Council and their application to the detriment of American trade with European countries, has been practically completed by the State Department. This Government will adhere to its previously expressed contention that the British blockade of German ports is not effective in that commerce is carried on between Scandinavian countries and Germany, and that the ship and cargo detention policy of the British Government is unfair in that it does not bear equally on all neutrals.

The suggestion of the British Government that, as Great Britain contented herself with a protest during the civil war over the action of the United States in seizing British ships bound for neutral ports on the ground that the ultimate destinations of their cargoes were ports of the Confederate States, and as Great Britain was willing to have the questions involved passed on by an international tribunal after the war and accepted the findings of that tribunal, this Government should be willing to follow a like course, has appealed to the United States as a strong point; but it is argued in the note about to go forward to London that the circumstances are not exactly parallel.

This Government is willing to admit that where it can be shown that goods shipped from Germany ostensibly to a contiguous neutral country were in reality intended to be shipped to the United States, they may be seized by Great Britain. But it is held that where goods are sent to Holland, for example, from Germany and duties paid on them in Holland and their cost paid by persons in Holland, such goods cannot be construed as of enemy origin and thus subject to seizure.

The contention of this Government is that the goods became Holland-owned goods and their reshipment from Holland to the United States does not make them properly subject to detention or seizure on the ground that they are of enemy origin. In the same way it must be clearly shown that goods from the United States, consigned to neutral countries of Europe contiguous to German territory, are destined ultimately to reach Germany in order to make them proper subjects for detention or seizure.

FOES' CAPITALS SCOFF AT PEACE

of peace useful to us has already been largely solved in the east, and we shall soon be able to turn where the rest of the task is to be solved," meaning the western battle front.

On this point the Morgenpost adds:

"The eastern victories have brought Germany a good way nearer peace."

The Lokalanzeiger, which is frequently inspired, sees in the peace report a not too gentle reminder to Russia of the Triple Entente's covenant not to make a separate peace. It adds:

"It cannot be put too strongly that Germany, which is on the point of getting possession of all Poland, has the least occasion of all to make peace proposals to Russia. Whoever believes the contrary overlooks the daily increasing straits of the Russian armies underrates the irresistible will to win of the German forces on land and sea.

"We do not need to break our heads over the exact date when our enemies will make peace proposals to Germany, which we and our allies will then receive and consider. Only when it develops that the political, military and economic security of the German Empire has been attained can the eagerly longed-for word 'peace' become a fact. To talk of it today is, unfortunately, premature."

The Berliner Tageblatt says:

"It is self-evident that no peace proposals can emanate from Germany so long as the Allies assert or hope that they can conquer and even annihilate Germany."

Count von Reventlov, in the Tageszeitung, writes:

"That Germany should intend to rob herself of the fruits of victory by peace proposals is laughable. That such rumors should emanate, spread and be believed by our enemies should be a lesson, however, that in Germany one should not talk of peace. Peace talk merely strengthens the

ITALIANS CANCELED BIG WHEAT ORDERS

Chicago Hears Government at Rome Is Limiting Prices and Putting Ban on Speculation.

MARKET TAKES A PLUNGE

High Rate of Exchange Between the United States and Italy May Divert Trade to Argentina.

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—Authoritative explanation was obtained tonight for the sensational action of exporters in suddenly canceling during the last forty-eight hours contracts for large amounts of wheat purchased in the United States, roundly estimated at two million bushels. The announcement of the cancelation caused wheat prices to break wildly here today, the downward plunge at one time amounting to as much as 4½ cents a bushel, smashing the market to $1.07 for the September delivery.

Most of the contracts canceled were on wheat that had been intended for Italy. The buyers, however, according to one of the largest exporters here, found all prospective profits cut off by a plan of the Italian Government to fix maximum prices or otherwise circumvent speculation. A careful statement of the situation resulting was made this evening by an exporter. He did so after consulting with a prominent Italian here who is in a position to know the facts. The statement, in full, is as follows:

"It has been said that the Italian Government had authorized repudiation of onerous outstanding purchases of wheat. While there seems no doubt cancellations were effected, the occasion thereof should no doubt be laid to a different cause.

"In the first place the Italian Government could not lawfully authorize such a procedure, and even if such authority was vested in the authorities at Rome, to exercise it would be the beginning of the destruction of her credit in the United States.

"What has happened is very probably this: There has been in the last few weeks quite a large amount of wheat bought by Italian firms or private individuals and to such parties the Italian Government may have issued an order prohibiting or regulating speculation by the Italian grain dealers with millers and consumers throughout the kingdom. On this account the Italian importer may have figured greater advantage in sacrificing the profit on purchases from the United States than in letting the contracts be shipped showing good paper profits, but which and more might be lost by efforts of the Italian Government to give the consumer as cheap wheat as possible. Much of the wheat bought by Italy last Winter was resold to the consumer at cost.

"Just now, the Government of Italy is not likely to buy wheat in the United States, not only because they think our prices soon to high, but on account of high exchange. The exchange basis between the United States and Italy is about 22 per cent. over normal. The basis between Argentina and Italy is approximately normal, and some well-informed Italians predict there will be no buying of wheat by their Government until next January or February, unless there is a sharp decline meanwhile in price. If there is no substantial decline in North America before next Winter the Italian demand will then probably fall on Argentina instead of the United States, provided Argentina has a crop."

Lays It to Speculators.

The denial that J. P. Morgan & Co. as purchasing agents for the Allies had canceled any of the contracts placed with Chicago houses for grain for export was adhered to yesterday. Wall Street houses having Board of Trade memberships had another theory for the extreme weakness in grain at yesterday's opening, which was not lessened by reports from Baltimore that several contracts for execution there had likewise been canceled.

C. C. Taylor, grain export for Rensdorf, Lyon & Co., said his advices from Chicago confirmed the cancellation of grain orders, but he was of the opinion that the total amount of grain affected was relatively small. Mr. Taylor suggested that the canceled contracts were of a semi-speculative nature, which had been undertaken by individuals.

"There has been a great change in the belligerents' purchasing methods this year," said Mr. Taylor. "When the war began all the nations concerned scrambled for grain, with the result that their competitive bids pushed prices up very rapidly. Now the buying for Government account for the Allies is all done through J. P. Morgan & Co.'s steel department. That means that one buyer will deal with a large number of sellers. There will be no stray orders.

"Furthermore, France has prohibited the importation of wheat to prevent her importers from raising the advance by competitive bids. All of the wheat for French consumption will be contracted for through a Government agency and resold at a fixed price, in order to insure cheap bread.

"Grain could not hold the high level it reached last year. This country then exported 80,000,000 bushels. This year Canada has grown upward of 130,000,000 bushels more than in 1914, which will be taken abroad before our surplus is called for, and the prospect of the release of Russia's stock with the capture of the Dardanelles must be considered. In normal times we sold around 150,000,000 bushels per annum to Europe, and I look for a big shrinkage from last year's record figures as a result of the changed conditions. Argentina is not able to get our grain through neutral ports the export demand will be still further lessened."

NO LONDON CANCELLATIONS.

England Anxious to Get All the Grain That Is Available.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—Inquiries in London today failed to confirm the report that large grain shipments had been held up in Chicago through any war contingency. On the Corn Exchange the THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent was informed that so far as members were able to ascertain, nearly all the grain ordered here had been already shipped and either was here or on the way across the Atlantic.

W. P. Wood, senior member of one of the leading firms shipping grain from America, said: "The likelihood of any grain shipments being held up in America for any reason seems to me to be ridiculous. We need all the grain we can get. Certainly no shipper has advised holding up any shipments, and it is quite improbable that the Government, which acts independently of the shippers, has done so. I understand that almost the entire amount ordered by importers here has been received or is actually on the way here. We now are looking to this year's crop of grain in America, and huge orders are in."

No confirmation was obtainable in official circles that any grain shipments had been held up by the Government. The fact is that grain prices here have been constantly rising, and everything apparently is being done to get all the product obtainable.

CHICAGO PUZZLED.

Connects Horse Cancellations with Grain Situation.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Saturday, Aug. 14.—The Herald points out this morning that the cancellations of grain orders have now also included orders for horses for war purposes, the steamship Devonian of the Leyland Line, which sailed from Boston for England, and the Cambrian, which sailed the day before, having unloaded more than 2,000 remounts for the English Army which they had on board. The Devonian, however, carried some grain.

"On top of the cancellations," the paper says, "Lasalle Street buzzed with the rumor that the Allen liner Corinthian, flying the British flag, which sailed last Friday from Montreal for Havre, France, had met with disaster in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. No confirmation of this could be obtained.

"It was the general impression in the wheat trade that there was something back of the attitude of the foreign Governments and speculators, but what it was they could only conjecture. As a result of the uncertainty there were unusual fluctuations in both grains and stocks. Seaboard exporters who have been heavily long in September wheat in Chicago and other markets were free sellers for delivery today and were largely responsible for the break of 4½ cents a bushel from the close of Thursday.

"One house sold 1,000,000 bushels of September and bought nearly as much December. Speculators who bought September wheat became scared and unloaded. The low price today was $1.07 and the finish $1.07⅝, a loss of 3½ cents a bushel for the day.

"Cancellations have been made largely by individual importers who have been speculating on what the foreign Governments might do in regard to securing wheat supplies. This is admitted by those in a position to know.

"Chicago exporters declared that, as far as they knew, J. P. Morgan & Co. had bought no wheat and had no trades to cancel. Italian speculators have been the largest buyers of wheat for some time past. Liverpool also has done some speculative buying."

CANCEL HORSE SHIPMENTS.

Two Scheduled to Go from Boston Are Rescinded.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Aug. 13.—The steamship Devonian of the Leyland Line sailed from here today for Liverpool with a full general cargo. The liner was booked to carry out a shipment of 1,100 remounts for the British Army, but word was received last night from the representative of the British Government at Montreal that no horses would be sent by the Devonian. The Cambrian, which left for London yesterday also had her shipment canceled and this gave rise to the report that 3,000 more horses were to be sent to England from this port.

John H. Thomas, local Manager of the International Mercantile Marine Company, said this afternoon that he had received no information which would lead him to believe that the ships of the line would not carry their regular allotment of horses in the future.

The Devonian has on board 32,000 bushels of wheat, 17,000 bushels of corn, and 40,000 bushels of barley.

ALLIES AT GALLIPOLI WIN MORE TRENCHES

Now Operating on an Extensive Scale—Lose 300 Yards at Ari Burnu.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—An Athens dispatch to The Daily Chronicle says:

"Operations on an extensive scale have been resumed on the Gallipoli Peninsula, and the latest news is on the whole very favorable. The battle has been general in the region around Krithia.

"The Allies, having been strongly reinforced, attacked the Turkish positions, and in brilliant fashion won two lines of trenches which, according to French officers, possess considerable strategic importance.

"In the region of Atchi Baba artillery duels have been intense.

"At Ari Burnu a British battalion was forced to retire for some 300 yards before a particularly violent attack, but the position is none the worse for that occurrence. During this attack three enemy aeroplanes flew over our lines, directing the Turkish fire."

SAY FEW ALLIES LANDED.

Reports to Berlin Belittle Latest Operations at Dardanelles.

BERLIN, Aug. 13, (by Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—The Overseas News Agency today gave out this dispatch from Constantinople:

"Reliable reports from the front state that the last landing operations of the French and British were relatively unimportant. At Karanfali 350 men tried to land, but were repulsed. Twenty of them were killed. The others regained their ships.

"At Anaforta (Suvla) Bay 1,500 British landed and attempted to outflank the Turkish position at Ari Burnu. They were repulsed without making any progress."

In an interview with an Associated Press correspondent at Constantinople on Monday, Enver Pasha, the Turkish Minister of War, estimated that the forces landed by the Entente Allies in their last operations totalled about 50,000 men.

ENVER WOULD FIGHT ITALY.

Young Turk Council Overrules His Proposal for Immediate War.

ROME, Aug. 13.—Reports have been received from Constantinople that the Young Turks held a meeting at which Enver Pasha, the Turkish War Minister, argued the necessity for breaking relations with Italy, and thus freeing Turkey from the "leading spy," namely, the Italian Ambassador, and simultaneously adopting severe measures against the Italians.

After a long discussion, it is reported, the meeting decided to postpone a definite decision, meanwhile sending Deputy Karasso to Italy to investigate the situation.

TURKS CLAIM SUCCESSES.

Report the Capture of 100 Yards of Trenches at Sedd-el-Bahr.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 13, (via London,) Saturday, Aug. 14.—The War Office today made public the following official communication:

Within three days we have captured eight machine guns and munitions near Ari Burnu (on the Gallipoli Peninsula).

Our artillery has hit a hostile warship off Ari Burnu.

Near Sedd-el-Bahr, on the right wing, we took 100 yards of trenches by storm.

FINDS LISSAUER REPENTANT

British Correspondent Cites His Explanation of "The Song of Hate."

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—The Amsterdam correspondent of The Daily Chronicle says:

"Even Ernst Lissauer appears to be becoming ashamed of his Song of Hate. He writes to the Berlin Tageblatt saying he agrees with its view that the song is not intended for the young, and he has often advised against its publication in school books. The Song of Hate, he writes, was written as a result of a passionate impulse in the first week of war, when the impression created by England's declaration of war was fresh.

"'The song,' he writes, 'is a political poem directed, not against the individual Englishman, but collectively against the English will to destruction which threatens Germany. In the excitement of those days my feelings were deeply stirred by this. Whether these feelings can continue with the cool consideration of practical politics is another question.'"

GERMANS FEAR SPECULATION

Banks Asked to Discourage It as Menace to War Loan.

BERLIN, Aug. 13, (via London.)—The Central Union of Banks and Bankers has sent a circular to its members calling attention to the forthcoming third war loan and declaring that it is the duty of bankers to work against the tendency toward speculative investments and market speculation.

The circular suggests that the bankers refuse to accept commissions to buy stock on margins, and advise clients no tips or advice regarding the purchase of stocks or otherwise encourage speculative dealings.

4 DIE; 14 PROSTRATED IN HUMIDITY AT 98

Hottest Aug. 13 in 33 Years and Warm Wave May Remain Several Days.

FLOORWALKER DIES ON DUTY

Italian Overcome in Street Becomes Insane in Hospital—Baby Succumbs in Go-Cart.

The heat, accompanied by high humidity, caused three deaths in Brooklyn and Long Island City and one in Corona, L. I., yesterday, and the police records showed fourteen prosirations in the city. The temperature reached the high mark of 84 degrees at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon. It had dropped off to 76 at 11 o'clock last night, but the outlook then was for more hot weather today and tomorrow. The weather forecast promised fair weather with "gentle to south and southwest winds."

An "advisory hurricane warning," issued by the Weather Bureau at Washington, D. C., was given out at the local bureau last night because of a severe storm on the southwesth Florida coast, but there was little danger predicted of high winds in this section. Shipping along the coast was advised to "take every precaution," however.

The Dead.

MALEINSKI, PETER, 50, cigarmaker, Forty-second Street, near Hayes Avenue, Corona, L. I.; overcome and died at Fillmore Avenue and Forty-third Street, Corona.

OAKLAND, CHARLES, 34, 866 Montgomery Street, Brooklyn, floorwalker in Woolworth Store, 540 Fulton Street, Brooklyn.

SKEIBECK, FRANK, 8 months, 153 Greenpoint Avenue, Long Island City; died in a baby carriage at Long Island Railroad Farry, Long Island City.

WILKINSON, HAROLD, 3 years, 1,327 Sutter Avenue, East New York; overcome at home; died at Bradford Street Hospital, Brooklyn.

The Prostrated.

ALTHEIN, SAMUEL, 33, 1,505 East New York Avenue, Brooklyn; St. Mary's Hospital.

EGAN, THOMAS, 41, laborer, 15 Prospect Place; overcome in yards of Pennsylvania Railroad, Seventh Avenue and Thirty-seventh Street; Bellevue Hospital.

FARLEY, BERNARD, 63, laborer, no home; overcome in City Hall Park; Hudson Street Hospital.

FILAN, LUKE, 51, 349 Lexington Avenue, Brooklyn; overcome at Bridge and Willoughby Streets; Brooklyn Hospital.

HOPKINS, WILLIAM, 59, 285 Ellery Street; overcome in front of 260 Hooper Street; home.

MYERS, MARY, 56, Chevrick, N. Y.; overcome at Fort Hamilton Avenue and Forty-fourth Street; Brooklyn; Kings County Hospital.

WOCKER, GEORGE, 34, 42 Charles Street, Manhattan; overcome in paper factory at 667 Kent Avenue, Brooklyn; home.

Mr. Oakland collapsed while at work in the store. He was carried into an ante room and Dr. Ferguson was summoned from Brooklyn Hospital. Mr. Oakland was unconscious when he arrived and died a few minutes later.

Of those who were overcome Paginini became violently insane while walking along Kenmare Street last night. An ambulance was summoned from Bellevue Hospital.

At 8 o'clock yesterday morning the thermometer registered 72 degrees and the humidity was at 98. The temperature soon got near the 80 mark and first touched 84 at 2:34 in the afternoon, remaining at that point until shortly after 4 o'clock. At 8 last night the humidity had dropped off to 62 per cent. The average temperature yesterday was 77 degrees, 5 degrees higher than the average last year and 4 degrees above the average for the same day for the past thirty-three years.

HURRICANE IN JAMAICA.

Heavy Damage to Fruit Crops by High Wind and Rain.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

KINGSTON, Aug. 13.—Jamaica was visited yesterday evening by the severest hurricane since 1903, and though details are lacking owing to the dislocation of telegraph and telephone service, it is known that the damage is considerable.

Throughout Thursday rain and heavy winds prevailed in the northeastern section of the island. At 5 o'clock the wind was reported to have shifted north by west, and an hour or two later the full effects of the blow began to be felt. Reports from northern parishes of Jamaica came in until about 5 o'clock, and then ceased. All night and until 10 o'clock today the wind held steadily along the northern coast, sweeping at least seven of the fourteen parishes of the island. In Kingston the highest velocity recorded was fifty miles at 3 o'clock this morning. The Weather Bureau states the speed of the hurricane must have been much higher in other parts of the country. Kingston is not damaged, but practically all banana and much cocoa, coffee and cocoanuts are gone.

About noon the barometer was reported rising, and the worst part of the hurricane was over, but the rain kept falling everywhere, with every indication of continuous showers.

MUST NOT FLY OVER CANADA

Aviators Warned by Gov. Hammond on Advice of Secretary Lansing.

ST. PAUL, Aug. 13.—A warning to aviators of Minnesota to cease flying over the international boundary line into Canada was recently issued by Governor Hammond, and today it was stated at the Governor's office that further complaint regarding the matter was not expected.

Several times since the opening of the European war aviators cruising along the border districts have crossed the line despite statements of Canadian officials last Fall that the practice would not be tolerated.

Governor Hammond's attention was called to the matter last week in a letter from Secretary Lansing. Ambassador Sir Cecil Spring-Rice informed Secretary Lansing that a Canadian Order in Council was adopted Sept. 17, 1914, setting aside prohibited areas over which aeroplanes could not fly.

In future aviators flying these aeroplanes will be in danger of gunfire by Canadian soldiers, it was stated.

ALBANY, Aug. 13.—Governor Whitman today received a letter from the British Ambassador, Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, calling attention to the fact that American aviators were flying over the international boundary and that he feared this practice might give rise to regrettable incidents, in view of the fact that Canada was in a state of war. The letter stated that a similar communication had been sent to the Governors of all the border States.

THINKS HENRY JAMES DISLIKES OUR POLICY

Dr. White, American, Writes of Author's Feelings, But Hopes He Has Not Misrepresented Him.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Saturday, Aug. 14.—Dr. William White, in a letter to The Spectator, gives his interpretation of Henry James's action in renouncing his American citizenship.

"I have no authority to speak for him," he says, "but I have ample reason to believe that, in addition to the very genuine feelings and motives he has already made public, there was another and probably controlling factor that made him reach his decision at this juncture. This was his intense dislike for and disapprobation of the official attitude of America. Since the beginning of the war he has watched with increasing disapproval the loss of opportunity after opportunity to assert and defend not only the rights of all neutral nations, but the principles of civilization and of humanity."

D. V. White then reviews the correspondence between the United States and Germany and criticises the American Government for what he calls its continued attitude of friendliness toward Germany, despite the latter's ignoring of its reiterated demands. As regards the last American note, Dr. White, after commenting that its tone was "almost as polite as the first one," says that the gist of it was that if Germany murdered any more Americans it would be regarded as an unfriendly act. He goes on to:

"Ascribing the weightiest possible significance to that term as used in the devious and obscure language of diplomacy, it seemed to him [James] so far from meeting the requirements of the situation, so far from upholding the honor and dignity of an outraged and insulted nation, that he did not desire any longer to bear even the one hundred millionth part of the responsibility or the shame. I wonder how many Americans abroad and at home, who have thought over this record of the last six months have felt ashamed for their country. It is safe to say that unless acts, not words, are soon to characterise America's policy toward Germany there will be millions of Americans who, though they would not follow his [James's] example, would understand and sympathize with his desire to throw in his lot with a country that is at least fighting, not talking. I hope and believe, that the Americans who are 'too proud to fight' mostly wear petticoats, and that there are very few even of them.

"Some of us have lost all faith in any spontaneous action on the part of our Administration, which shall properly represent and transform into deeds the best and highest impulses of our people; others are more hopeful. But when an American, hitherto as loyal and as representative as Henry James, finds impelled to renounce his citizenship, and when hundreds of others abroad and millions at home cannot avoid a sense of shame at the position of their country in this greatest of all crises in the history of the world, it is time for thinking and earnest Americans to bestir themselves and to try to find some way of transmitting their profound beliefs into honorable and worthy performance."

Dr. White concludes by expressing the hope that he has not misrepresented Mr. James. "This has been written without a word of consultation with him," he says, "although I have seen him frequently."

PULITZER IN A WAR BIPLANE.

New York Newspaper Man Sees Shelling on the French Front.

PARIS, Aug. 13.—Ralph Pulitzer of New York yesterday flew from a suburb of Paris to the fighting front in a new type of double-motor biplane, which was operated by a military aviator. Mr. Pulitzer and the pilot covered more than 150 kilometers (about ninety-three miles), getting within sight of the German lines and so close to the earth that they could see the German trenches and distinguish the bursting of shells.

After a trip along the firing line the biplane flew back to the capital, where it landed safely.

Mr. Pulitzer is the first newspaper man to make such a trip.

shall not be drawn from the decadent and odious Clericico or reactionary party."

Losing Patience with Carranza.

This Government is losing patience with Carranza's course of opposition to the appeal from the United States and the six Latin-American countries, but is not saying so publicly. Denial was made at the State Department today of a report that Carranza's agents here were persona non grata and might be sent away. What the American program would be if Carranza definitely refuses to heed the appeal has not been disclosed in any authoritative way, but the intention of the Administration is to ask other factional leaders who show a responsive spirit to hold a convention for the purpose of choosing a Provisional President and setting up a government which can be recognized by the nations concerned. Armed intervention is not contemplated in any present purpose of the United States, and the impression sought to be created by Carranza that an invasion of Mexico from this country is threatened has no foundation in fact.

The Government intends to wait the outcome of the concurrent effort to induce the Mexican factionalists to get together before it undertakes any further step to bring the troubles of that country to an end.

NO MORE TROOPS TO BORDER.

Carranza Agency Blames Local Politics for Disorders.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—After a conference today between President Wilson and Assistant Secretary of War Breckinridge it was announced that General Funston, in command of the American border forces, had not asked for more men and that until he did so no additional troops would be sent to him. Governor Ferguson will be informed of this decision, and unless he informs the President in the constitutional way that the disorders in Texas are beyond his control and asks the President to take charge of the situation, things will rest as they are, at least for the present.

The State and War Departments are equally convinced that the raids in Texas in which a number of men have been killed and wounded are not of an international character. Some Mexicans may have taken part in the shootings and robberies, according to information here, but many, if not most, of the raiders are American. There have been hints that a local political feud was at the bottom of the trouble and these suggestions were more or less confirmed by a dispatch from the border, given out by the confidential Constitutional agency here this afternoon.

According to this dispatch, Frank C. Pierce, "a native-born Texan and a prominent attorney of Brownsville, has declared that not a single Villista or Carranzista soldier has taken part in the disturbances, which are the outgrowth, the dispatch implies, of a feud between the Sheriff of Cameron County, of which Brownsville is the county seat, and the Police Department of Brownsville. Mr. Pierce is quoted as saying that "unscrupulous politicians" in the vicinity of Brownsville have tried to drag in soldiers of both warring Mexican factions "because of the effect it would produce on the international situation."

The Constitutionalist agency received today a denial from General Emiliano Naffarete, the Constitutionalist commander at Matamoros, that 1,000 of his men had crossed the American border and were participating in the disorders in Texas. He has only 500 men, says the General, and he can account for them all.

"I am entirely willing to co-operate with the American authorities," says General Naffarete, "in capturing any bandits who may cross into Mexico and I will turn them over, immediately upon capture, to the proper American authorities at the international boundary for trial."

THREE OF FAMILY KILLED.

Two Survivors Escape After Great Hardships in Mexico.

The dangers of life in Mexico since the overthrow of the Madero administration were vividly depicted last night by Miss Gertrude Grose, who, after surviving gunshot wounds and much deprivation, is now safely settled at 217 West Fifteenth Street, where she arrived a few days ago from Galveston, which place she reached by Government transport from Vera Cruz.

When Villa and Carranza began their march on Mexico City in 1913, Miss Grose, who is an Englishwoman, was in Veladamia, Chihuahua, with her brother, Henry R. Grose, a mining engineer; his wife, and his two children, Henry, 6 years old, and a girl 2 years old. In May of that year Mr. Grose thought it wise to attempt to escape to Mexico City, and the entire family left by train. The train was held up by Mexicans, who, Miss Grose said, were of Villa's army. The men fired into the train, killing Mr. Grose and his little daughter, who was in Miss Grose's arms when shot through the head. Henry Grose, the boy, was shot half a dozen times in the leg, and Miss Grose was shot twice, in the leg and shoulder.

Miss Grose saw her sister-in-law attacked and then killed by the Mexicans. She and her nephew were held prisoners without medical attention for three days, but finally they escaped through the connivance of a friendly guard, whose heart was reached by the boy's appeals. Wounded and scarcely able to walk, the woman and little boy dragged their way on foot for two and a half days, until they reached Mexico City, where they were received by the Red Cross Society and cared for in a hospital for six months.

Miss Grose said that the Mexicans of all factions bore a deadly hatred for Americans.

LOAN TO MEXICO CITY BANKS.

Food Now Going Into the Capital, Carranza Minister Reports.

A cablegram received yesterday by F. S. Elias, Consul General of the Constitutionalist Government in New York, from the Carranza Foreign Minister, under date of Aug. 12, says:

"General Pablo Gonzales yesterday, under instructions from the First Chief, loaned 2,500,000 pesos to banking and commercial houses at Mexico City in order to relieve the monetary situation and benefit the people and trade in general. The banks have sent a cordial note expressing gratitude to the Constitutionalist leaders and expressly conveying the warmest thanks to General Carranza.

"Associations charged with relief work are taking further steps to reduce the price of bread and other necessities. Extensive distributions of free food are made daily. All organizations are working in harmony. Governor de Lara has bought a large quantity of supplies in outlying districts which are now arriving in the city. A solid train of food left this city yesterday and will be hurried to Mexico City, while another train now loading leaves tomorrow.

"General Francisco Coss has defeated the Zapatistas again and captured the towns of San Nicolas, Contreras and Ajusco. Not a single complaint has been made of any interference with or infringements of the rights of citizens since the occupation of the city. The Government has begun exchanging valid currency for that of the Villa-Zapata regime of wholesale counterfeiting by the Convention Government.

"The report from New Orleans regarding the alleged request of Consul Canada to leave Vera Cruz is entirely without foundation. A manifesto and State Department correspondence will be issued by the First Chief after the result of the A B C conference is known."

TRAP MEXICAN BAND CROSSING RIO GRANDE

Armed Posses Closing In on Them —Another Band Still Eludes Rangers.

BROWNSVILLE, Texas, Aug. 13. — Twenty men crossed the Rio Grande from Mexico tonight near Mercedes, about forty miles up the Rio Grande from here.

American officers, warned that such a crossing would be attempted, had disposed armed posses at several points where the attack was expected. Late tonight three of these posses were closing in on the Mexicans, expecting to surround them.

Search for a band of about thirty Mexicans, some of them known to be direct from Mexico, was made tonight in the mesquite brush about fifty miles north of Brownsville. Meanwhile 1,600 United States cavalrymen and 1,000 infantrymen on patrol duty between Brownsville and Laredo, Texas Rangers, and peace officers used a swift and effective type of border justice, which rapidly ran down fugitive Mexicans of bad records who were accused in connection with recent raids.

The Mexican raiders north of Brownsville include men alleged to have read aloud a proclamation announcing that they were attempting to conquer a part of Texas. At least thirty-five of the original members of this band came from the Mexican side of the Rio Grande, it is said by officers here.

Facts about these raiders were obtained by Sheriff W. T. Vann of Cameron County and by Captain A. V. P. Anderson of the Twelfth United States Infantry.

Apprehension in Brownsville is felt on account of what the Mexicans may do in raids, and reports that in case of any repetition of the Americans landing at Vera Cruz an attempt will be made by Carranza troops in Matamoros to sack Brownsville, in reprisal. So strong is this belief among some leading citizens that pressure will be brought to bear to obtain more troops at Fort Brown, near here, to protect the city.

Although the number of Mexicans killed in the raids is given officially as between fifteen and twenty, it is known that more have been killed. Several Mexicans have been shot while resisting arrest or trying to escape. While the Texas communities are living day and night under the guard of United States Army rifles, rangers and peace officers regard with instant suspicion any Mexican who is caught armed. If he is slow to explain his life is in immediate danger, and if he makes any threatening move his life is forfeited.

So thorough has the Rangers' search been that there is good reason to believe that nearly all of the marauders have been driven out of the Brownsville section or are so frightened that they will remain peaceful until they get aid from Mexico.

Manuel Rincones, who said he was forced to join the Mexicans, is said to have given Captain Anderson a written statement which described the brush where the Mexicans hide as being so thick that it was necessary to roll their water barrel to get it into camp. This gang carried a white flag with the yellow letter "E" embroidered upon it. Some of the Brownsville Mexicans asserted this "E" stood for Procopio Elizondo, one of the chief officers of General E. P. Naffarte, Carranza commander at Matamoros, opposite here. Elizondo denied that he or his name had any connection with the raids.

Chiefs of the Mexican band, the Rincones statement said, were named Luis, Miguel and Gabriel. Miguel, he said, shot and killed one of the wounded members of his band whom he considered too badly injured to be taken with the outlaws.

Ranger Captains Fox and Sanders, who have been working in the section north of Brownsville, have had their men running down clues to identify the raiding Mexicans. It can be said on good authority that one of the clues indicates that some Mexicans in the interior of Coahuila, a Mexican border State, south of Texas, brought word in advance to their compatriots in Texas that the recent outbreak was about to occur. There was evidence also that some of the principal leaders of the raids have gone back into Mexico.

FEAR LARGE INVASION.

Border Towns Hear of Plan to Attack if Vera Cruz Is Taken Again.

SAN ANTONIO, Aug. 13.—A committee of citizens, headed by Representative John H. Garner of Texas, today made a report to Governor Ferguson and Major Gen. Funston, commanding the Southern Department, concerning conditions on the Mexican border.

Speaking for the committee, Mr. Garner said:

"The constituted Mexican authorities are believed by leading business men along the border to be prepared, in the event American troops again are landed at Vera Cruz, to make a dash into Texas, and the large bodies of Mexicans in Northern Mexico available for immediate use in case orders are given to attempt to carry out the plan of San Diego would enable the Mexicans to brush aside the troops at present guarding the border and penetrate a considerable distance into Texas. Of course, they would be defeated and driven back, but before sufficient American troops could be sent into the border country the Mexicans would have destroyed valuable American life and property."

HUERTA IS SCORNFUL.

Latin Nations Working Against Their Own Interests, He Says.

Special to The New York Times.

FORT BLISS, Texas, Aug. 13.—From his prison here General Victoriano Huerta issued a statement today on the A B C peace proposals and conference. He said:

"The A B C conference is a mistake diplomatically and politically. It is working against its own interests and in favor of an anti-nationalist movement. Today it feels proud of its part in the affairs of Latin America, but tomorrow the conference may be turned against any one to decide its fate as it is deciding the fate of Mexico.

"Armed intervention as threatened would be painful for us, but we would show how deep is our love of freedom and country, and our brothers of the South would withdraw as did England and Spain in the French invasion, leaving France an inglorious and defeated part in the invasion. History would record another such phenomenon similar to the tri-party agreement of the past, and the invaders would be driven out."

TRACING HUERTA'S FINANCES.

Nothing Added to Reports of Alleged German Activity.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—The Department of Justice is following up clues suggesting that General Huerta's alleged attempt to start a movement in Mexico was financed in the United States. The clues point generally to a plan for financing the former President of Mexico on the part of certain New York bankers, or, at least, of persons in New York with money to lend. The intimations today were, however, that not much hope was entertained of unearthing a complete explanation of the financial end of General Huerta's undertaking.

Nothing was admitted at the Department of Justice today indicating that the clues now being investigated pointed toward German activities. Some time ago a report was made to President Wilson that Count von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, and Captain Boyed of the German Embassy, had aided General Huerta so as to increase the difficulties of the President and perhaps involve the United States in such a way that American munitions would remain on this side of the water.

This report was flatly denied by Count von Bernstorff in a note to the State Department. The department made a brief statement at Count von Bernstorff's request and added that it had never received any information of the kind described.

SAY MISS KNOLLYS MAY STILL BE ALIVE

Strange Rumors About Niece of Lord Knollys, Supposedly Drowned Five Days Ago.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—It is four days since Miss D. L. Knollys, niece of Lord Knollys, Secretary to the late King Edward, was reported to have been drowned while bathing with two women companions in the lake at Chirk Castle, Denbighshire, a seat of Lord Howard De Walden.

The Daily Chronicle says divers have been at work and the lake has been dragged, but no trace of the body has been found. The same paper's Oswestry, Shropshire, correspondent reports village rumors to the effect that Miss Knollys may still be alive and says extraordinary stories are being circulated concerning her disappearance.

The Daily Chronicle interviewed Sir Henry Knollys, K. C., V. O., another uncle of Miss Knollys, on the subject. He said:

"I have authority to state on the most indubitable evidence that any rumors accounting for the disappearance of Miss Knollys, otherwise than by drowning, are and must be entirely destitute of foundation."

FRENCH PRAISE OF COLONEL

Paris Temps Calls "Preparation" Speech That of "a Great Citizen."

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 13.—The San Francisco correspondent of the Temps compares Colonel Roosevelt's war preparation speech with ex-Secretary Bryan's pacifist utterances. Mr. Bryan appears to him to be sincere, but seems to combine the characteristics of an actor and a clergyman. His listeners belonged chiefly to the foreign element which left Europe to avoid military service and expects to find peace in America.

"The America of today," says the correspondent, "is not the America of the War of Secession. For forty years it has been invaded by a horde of immigrants of inferior quality."

Among Bryan's supporters were some rich persons pleading peace for fear of losing money. Roosevelt, the correspondent says, aroused greater enthusiasm and evidently still has devoted adherents, but "if Bryan's words were too beautiful to be true, Roosevelt's were too true to be beautiful." The Temps writer says the latter is fighting the latest German scheme "to present the odious side of war in order to dissuade Americans from vigorous measures, and that Roosevelt's re-election as President might not mean war, but it would mean some form of military service. The correspondent concludes:

"In speaking his mind Colonel Roosevelt may have committed a fault in electoral tactics, but he was acting like a great citizen."

Nobel Prizes May Be Held Over.

STOCKHOLM, Aug. 13, (via London.) —The amount available for the Nobel prizes this year is 144,000 kroner ($38,000) each, but it is possible that the distribution will be postponed. Next year the amount will be reduced by 20,000 kroner, this sum representing the amount of the new Swedish defense tax.

LOSSES BY LIPTON, LTD.

Sir Thomas Arranged to Conserve Company's Capital.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Saturday, Aug. 14.—The Daily Mail says that a rather startling report is issued by Lipton, Ltd., for the year to March 13, 1915, and an exhaustive examination has been made by the new Directors, with the result that discrepancies in certain of the stocks have been discovered. The report says:

"These with the losses, realized on certain investments, which have been made, and the costs incurred in connection with various matters, which formed the subject of litigation, has diverted a substantial amount of the working capital from the ordinary requirements of the business."

The Mail adds:

"Sir Thomas Lipton, it appears, has himself made arrangements whereby the company will not suffer any loss of capital in regard to these matters, but it is suffering pretty severely, nevertheless. In addition to £41,877, charged against accounts for depreciation, it is necessary to make special provision for further depreciation to the tune of £220,889. In these circumstances it is not surprising that there was no dividend on the ordinary shares for the past year."

$10,000 NECKLACE STOLEN.

Mrs. S. Rosenthal Robbed at the Saratoga Race Track.

Special to The New York Times.

SARATOGA, N. Y., Aug. 13.—The theft of a diamond necklace valued at $10,000 at the race course this afternoon was reported to the Pinkertons tonight by Mrs. S. Rosenthal, wife of a Fifth Avenue jeweler, who lives at the Ansonia. Mrs. Rosenthal was at the track this afternoon and occupied a box with a party of friends.

She had put the necklace in a handbag, which just before the last race she laid over the back of the box. In the excitement of watching the race she forgot the handbag, and after the race, when she turned to get it, discovered that it was missing.

A reward of $1,000 was offered tonight for the return of the missing necklace.

MOTOR TRUCK KILLS GIRL, MAIMS SISTER

Struck as They Leave Shadow of Railroad Track in Park Avenue at 115th Street.

CHAUFFEUR UNDER ARREST

Witnesses Assert His Machine Was Racing Down Hill at the Rate of Thirty Miles an Hour.

One girl was killed and another seriously injured when a motor truck speeding down Park Avenue struck them as they came from under the elevated tracks of the New York Central Railroad, at 115th Street, shortly before 8 o'clock last night. Sarah Dieckman of 151 East 133d Street was crushed to death, while Rebecca Schulzinger of 75 East 114th Street, protected by her companion's body, was thrown to one side, instead of being run over. The truck was driven by James Rooney of 227 East Forty-sixth Street for the Westcott Express Company. Rooney was locked up in the East 104th Street Police Station on a charge of homicide.

The girls were stepsisters. They had returned late from their work in a tailor shop and after dinner decided to go for a walk. At 115th Street Park Avenue has a down grade of fifteen degrees, and over the centre of the street run the railroad tracks. The girls were passing from under the shadow of the track when the truck hit them.

Miss Dieckman was crushed almost beyond recognition, one of the wheels of the vehicle mashing her head flat. Her companion, on the far side from the truck, was thrown twenty feet against the elevated structure pillars.

Patrolman James Corkran of the East 104th Street station was at 116th Street and saw the accident. He ran to the scene and arrested Rooney. Two men in an automobile, who had stopped to pick up the two girls, were directed to take them to the police station.

Rooney told the police he was not going more than ten miles an hour. Raymond Karekes of 491 East 155th Street and David Schiffner of Forsythe Street, who saw the accident, said he was going at least thirty miles an hour. The three-ton truck was loaded with four trunks, which were being taken from the 125th Street branch of the express company to Grand Central Station. Rooney said he had been driving for the company for more than a year.

Detective Carmody of the Third Branch Homicide Squad notified David Schulzinger of the accident. The father of the injured girl identified his daughter and also the body of Miss Dieckman. Miss Schulzinger was then taken to the Harlem Hospital. She suffered contusions of the head and legs, and her ribs were crushed. At the hospital it was said the exact extent of her injuries had not been determined.

Where the accident occurred the street is poorly lighted, and it was almost impossible for the girls to have seen the approaching truck because of the big pillars which hold up the railroad tracks.

THOMAS ANDERSON KILLED.

Noted Golfer Plunges Over Bank with His New Auto.

Special to The New York Times.

ORANGE, N. J., Aug. 13.—Thomas Anderson, 30 years old, professional golfer at the Montclair Golf Club and open champion of Pennsylvania, was killed today when the high-powered car which he bought two weeks ago struck a rut in Prospect Avenue on First Mountain, near here, and pitched over the side of the road into a gulley ten feet deep.

The machine turned over and landed on top of Anderson, killing him instantly. Thomas Ward, steward of the Montclair Golf Club, and William H. Mitchell, a negro automobile demonstrator of Newark, were thrown out of the car, Ward escaping with lacerations and Mitchell suffering a broken leg.

Anderson had held the open championship of Pennsylvania for two years in succession. He had been professional golfer with clubs at Glen Ridge, N. J., and Pittsfield, Mass., and with the Inwood Club of Long Island and the Oakmont Club of Pittsburgh. He was a brother of the late William Anderson, Jr., who was four times open champion of the United States, and a son of the late Thomas Anderson, who was professional golfer at the Montclair Golf Club. He leaves a mother and three sisters in Scotland and one sister in this country.

Sons Win Prizes, Not Knowing of Their Father's Fate.

SPIRIT LAKE, Iowa, Aug. 13.—R. E. Donaldson of Milford, Iowa, owner of a racing car, which won places in Indianapolis and Omaha races, was killed instantly in an automobile race here this afternoon. Mechanician Wilcox probably was injured fatally.

Donaldson's two sons won first and second places in the race after the death of their father, not knowing he had been killed.

KNIFE CURES CHILD CRIPPLE

With Part of Ankle Bone Removed, Marion Sullivan is Able to Walk.

Marion Sullivan, 4 years old, a patient at Fordham Hospital since July 4, was able to walk for the first time in two years yesterday as the result of an operation which it is believed will cure her permanently of a form of infantile paralysis.

The operation, known to the medical profession as astragiectomy, was performed on July 6 by Dr. Alfred B. Taylor of 115 West Fifty-fifth Street, assisted by Dr. John R. Lynch, house physician of the hospital. A part of the astragalus or ankle bone of the left foot which had pressed upon and affected a nerve, was removed.

Since the operation the child's foot had been incased in a plaster cast, and the surgeons waited anxiously until the proper time to remove this covering came. It was decided to take it off yesterday and the child's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Sullivan, were notified. Marion was able to walk for a considerable distance with only a slight limp, and there was every reason to believe her troubles were over. She will remain at the hospital for another ten days, and if her condition is then favorable, will be permitted to go home.

The little girl was crippled two years ago by a fall which injured the ankle bone of her left foot and soon after that began to suffer much pain. Finally, because of the pressure on the nerve she became very ill and was unable to walk at all. Her case was generally diagnosed as infantile paralysis.

Marion's father is a chauffeur employed in Brooklyn.

McDONALD GOES TO ALBANY.

Uncertain as to Future Plans in Row with Warden Osborne.

Special to The New York Times.

OSSINING, N. Y., Aug. 13.—Patrick H. McDonald, confidential agent of Superintendent of Prisons, John B. Riley, who was acquitted at 2 o'clock this morning of the charge of assault on Warden Thomas Mott Osborne of Sing Sing, left for Albany later in the day, after a consultation with his counsel, Benjamin Fagan. He said he did not know what further steps, if any, would be taken in the case.

Warden Osborne refused to discuss the case further than to say, as he had said when the jury brought in its verdict, that he had expected some such decision.

SAILOR DROWNS IN IRONS.

Body Found Off Stapleton with Ball and Chain Attached.

While fishing for crabs in a rowboat off Stapleton, S. I., yesterday afternoon, Charles Muller of 5 Maple Avenue, Stapleton, found a body, dressed in a sailor's uniform, in low water near the shore. Muller could not lift it and he hailed men in two other rowboats and together they hauled the body to the surface. Then they found around the right ankle an iron cuff attached by a chain to a fifteen-pound ball, with the name, "Nailsea Court," on it.

The body was removed to the police station at Stapleton, where a report had been received on Wednesday from Captain Arthur Lange of the Nailsea Court, of Hull, England, which was in the municipal dock off Canal Street, S. I., that William Needler, a seaman, had fallen overboard and been drowned on that day.

Captain Lange told detectives from the Stapleton station that Needler had not been in irons and that he was working in the bow of the boat just before he disappeared. Captain Lange said that Needler must have removed the ball and chain from the ship's brig with the purpose of committing suicide.

BANKER'S WIFE SAVES BOY.

Removes Skirt and Shoes and Swims to His Assistance.

Bathing in Newark Bay, off Thirty-eighth Street, Bayonne, yesterday, Walter McCann, 11 years old, of the Boulevard, became exhausted and shouted for help.

Mrs. Henry M. Mansell of 97 West Thirty-eighth Street, whose husband is a New York banker, was seated on the shore watching bathers. She removed her skirt and shoes and went to the boy's assistance. She reached him just in time and swam ashore with his arm clasping her neck.

ELUDES POLICE GUARD.

Gangster Boldly Walks Out of Homicide Bureau and Gets Away.

Among several persons who walked from the office of the Homicide Bureau on the fourth floor of the Criminal Courts Building yesterday was a short stocky man wearing a dirty straw hat. He seemed bent on important business and in such a hurry that he would not wait for the elevator. He used the stairs and was seen to pass out of the building through a side door.

Not more than a minute after his departure three Central office detectives were rushing down the stairs from the fourth floor in pursuit of an escaped prisoner who had quietly slipped out of their hands while they were awaiting the return of Assistant District Attorney Deuel.

It then became known that the escaped prisoner was Barnett Potlin, an East Side gangster with a long criminal record, who was to be tried for highway robbery in General Sessions on Aug. 19. He began his criminal career when he was 14 years old, and since then had served successive terms for burglary in Elmira, the New York Penitentiary, and Sing Sing. He was last arrested on May 16 for robbing Hyman Seigel in the basement of the latter's home at 176 Avenue B.

Detectives Weber, Sheahy, and Blanch had charge of the prisoner. Weber left Potlin in the custody of Sheahy and Blanch, and he disappeared while their backs were turned.

SUBWAY BLAST KILLS A MAN.

Second Laborer Mortally Injured in Central Park Shaft.

One man was fatally hurt early last evening in the subway construction work in Central Park, near Sixth Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street, and another is dying in Flower Hospital from injuries suffered when they descended into the 300-ft shaft just after a blast. A rock rolled down upon them and crushed them.

Ioasaire Lormatis, 45 years old, a laborer, of 343 East 109th Street, suffered internal injuries and a fractured leg and died soon after his arrival at Flower Hospital. Angelo Livie, 39 years, a laborer, of 310 East 106th Street suffered internal injuries and his left leg was crushed. The leg was amputated in Flower Hospital. It is said he will die.

Both men were employes of the Degnon Construction Company of 30 East Forty-second Street.

OBJECT TO BURIAL COST.

Heirs of Rockefeller Housekeeper Attack Accounting of Her Estate.

J. F. Couch, an attorney, was appointed by Surrogate Cohalan yesterday to determine whether $427.50 was too much for funeral expenses and whether $516.27 was excessive counsel fees in clearing up the estate of $3,051 left by Sarah D. Scott, who was once housekeeper in the home of John D. Rockefeller.

Samuel J. Wagstaff, special guardian for Miss Scott's great nieces, Verna Van Gelder and Mary E. F. Smith, had filed objections to the items in the accounting filed by the executrices, Eleanora Hall Mora and Florence Ruppert.

Mr. Wagstaff recites, among other things in his papers, that the decedent received a salary of $75 a month at the Rockefeller home, 4 West Fifty-fourth Street.

CATHEDRAL TRUSTEES SUED

Mutual Life Wants to Foreclose $170,000 Mortgage.

The Mutual Life Insurance Company yesterday started a foreclosure suit in the Supreme Court against the trustees of St. Patrick's Cathedral as holders of title to property between Eleventh and Twelfth Streets, east of First Avenue.

The complaint recites that the trustees mortgaged the property for $170,000 on Feb. 8, 1910, and agreed to pay the principal sum by Feb. 8, 1913, with 4½ per cent. interest, payable semi-annually.

Frederick L. Allen, attorney for the plaintiff, bases the suit on the failure of the trustees to pay up the principal. It was impossible to learn anything about the transaction last night from the trustees of St. Patrick's Cathedral.

Woman Held for Theft in Church.

Mrs. Elizabeth Reilly, 35 years old, a waitress, of 188 Hoyt Street, Brooklyn, was held in $1,500 bail in Harlem Court yesterday afternoon, charged with stealing a purse worth $102 and $22 in cash, from Mrs. Elizabeth McSweeney of 213 East Ninety-sixth Street, in Saint Francis de Sales Church, 185 East Ninety-sixth Street.

Drawings for Newport Tennis.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 13.—With eleven of the best players in the country, including Champion R. Norris Williams, 2d, and Maurice E. McLoughlin, the first man in the ranking list of the American players, the first invitation tennis tournament at the Casino will commence Monday morning, the draw having been made today by the Tennis Committee—Craig Biddle, Charles E. Sands, and J. Gordon Douglas.

With a total of fifty entrants, there were eighteen matches and a bye drawn in the first round and six matches and a bye in the second. The top men have been well separated in the draw, McLoughlin being at the bottom of the first round and Williams at the top. The drawings follow:

M'LOUGHLIN LOSES TO KARL H. BEHR

New York Tennis Player Startles Californian with Defeat in Three Straight Sets.

MATCH BITTERLY FOUGHT

All Three Sets Go to Deuce—Behr Breaks Through "Mac's" Serve at Critical Times.

SEABRIGHT, N. J., Aug. 13.—Maurice E. McLoughlin of California, rated as the world's best tennis player, has been defeated. Karl H. Behr of New York overcame him today in straight sets, 8—6, 7—5, 7—5.

McLoughlin wasn't literally worn out through playing series after series. He has been showing good form in the Achelis challenge cup tournament at the Seabright Lawn Tennis and Cricket Club courts here. And it was only yesterday that McLoughlin and Ward Dawson, another Westerner, won the Seabright Club's cups for doubles.

Every point of every game of every set was fought for furiously, and every set went to deuce. Here's the point score. It shows how hard the battle was fought that won unexpected tennis honors for the East from the West:

Everybody here today saw him straining every effort, using every artifice, studying his opponent's weaknesses, and trying to lead his opponent into traps, sometimes successfully. Then how is it to be accounted for?

McLoughlin was supposed to be invincible in everything connected with tennis. But it was when directing that merciless siege-gun serve that he was superinvincible.

Amazement was no word to describe the feelings of the spectators when Behr succeeded in dragging out the first set to the thirteenth game. But, of course, he didn't have a chance in the world. Then this thirteenth game—on Friday the 13th. It was McLoughlin's serve. The score was tied. Generous odds could have been had if anybody had dared wager that "Mac" would lose his serve, this time of all times. Nobody thought of the thirteen hoodoo.

The thing that happened was the impossible. McLoughlin lost the game; not that way—he didn't win a single point in the game. That thirteenth game on Friday the 13th was a love game, and a fatal one, for Behr won the next on his own serve and thereby ended the first set. McLoughlin didn't serve wildly, either, and didn't serve any doubles. He lost the first point of the game by driving a ball into the net—just a half inch below the top. On any other day it would have rolled over, and have been his point. The next point was lost when Behr succeeded in lobbing the ball over to the corner from which he had just chased "Mac." Then Behr hit the net with a ball, and it looked as if the jinx had disappeared. But the ball rolled over and scored 40 love for Behr. Friday the —. Behr placed another clever return an inch out of reach, and the game was his.

Even that wasn't enough for the jinx. Both men played fast tennis in the sweltering heat and the second set worked its way slowly up to that dreaded thirteenth game. This time the jinx played even a more fatal practical joke than before. The set was brought to a sudden end just as the thirteenth game was reached. The score had reached 40—30 in Behr's favor in the twelfth game and Behr missed fire on his first serve. It looked as if the game surely would go to deuce and "Mac" would have another chance. Then Behr served another—not an especially swift one—and "Mac" hit it back and was all ready to land on it hard when Behr returned to him. But the ball took a downward course in mid-air as it sped toward Behr and—landed in the net. Behr's game.

Any ordinary jinx would have been satisfied. Not this Friday the 13th jinx, with a red-haired man its victim. Behr won three straight games when the set commenced, after both players had taken a ten-minute rest. Then McLoughlin began to justify the expectations that 90 per cent. of the group of spectators packing the grandstands had placed in him. He won four games in succession.

"The boy's there at last," somebody shouted. "Now look out for him—that man is never beaten until the last point's settled!"

Behr, the California Comet's streak with the very next game, making the score 4 all. "Mac" fought like a demon and won the following game on his own serve. Fate switched her affections and favored Behr for the next-5 all. That ferocious serve of "Mac's" again—the eleventh game—but Behr won it after it had reached deuce, making 5 points to McLoughlin's 3, in spite of McLoughlin's serve.

The twelfth game of the third set—Behr won the first—three points by adroit placing, then knocked one out. Forty-fifteen, on Behr's serve. "Mac" ran up to the net after he had returned the next swift serve. It was at the net that McLoughlin made all the tennis world sit up and take notice. This year he has changed his style and has been playing deep in the court—a cautious game, for there were no more rungs of the ladder for him to climb, and it was his part to hold the place he had won. But now he was again playing that fierce net game that spelled doom for the tennis hopes of so many players in the past. Behr put the ball back in a spot that experience argued no human thing ought to be able to reach from the net, but McLoughlin, in midair, slammed it. The white ball did not show any signs of even a speaking acquaintance with Behr, did not go near enough to him to reach with a ten-foot pole. But it did pause long enough to tap the court within bounds before skipping over the fence, and the score was 40—30.

"Mac" won the next point when Behr, adopting "Mac's" original method and running up to the net, swung with all the force he could place in a flying jump and slammed the ball into the net. Deuce. Then the jinx. McLoughlin started the spectators applauding wildly by returning a difficult serve and catching a scientifically placed ball backhand. A fast volley followed, Behr placing most of the balls where McLoughlin had to hit them backhand. Finally McLoughlin lifted one, picking it up in amazing style when it had almost reached the ground, but it came groundward gently, near the net, and was easy meat for Behr. He slammed it out of McLoughlin's reach, and won the advantage. Behr served another. McLoughlin caught it fairly and sent it back forcibly. In precisely the same manner that the second set had ended, as it reached the thirteenth game this one ended. The ball struck the net a fraction of an inch below the top and did not roll over. It was Behr's game, Behr's set, Behr's triple victory, Behr's eabright Lawn Tennis and Cricket Club Tournament Cup, and Behr's opportunity to play the national champion, R. Norris Williams, 2d, for the Achelis Challenge Cup tomorrow.

McLoughlin and Behr walked up to the net and shook hands over it.

"You played a wonderful game," McLoughlin said.

Behr's face showed some signs of the surprise that everybody in the grand stands experienced. The spectators could hardly believe it was true, and apparently Behr was having a hard time convincing himself that it was true. Nobody noticed whether Behr pinched himself to see if he were dreaming, but he probably did. He congratulated McLoughlin on the sportsmanlike manner in which he had played throughout the game. When the two left the courts, R. Norris Williams, 2nd, whom McLoughlin beat seven times in succession before Williams defeated him for the national championship at Newport last year, was eying this slim man who wore eyeglasses and a handkerchief bandage about his head while beating the world's best tennis player. Williams, it was generally taken for granted, was to be pitted against McLoughlin the ninth time tomorrow. Suddenly things had switched about, and Williams saw a new opponent strolling across the court, a man who could beat the fellow who had beaten him—Williams—so often.

Williams beat Behr last year, but Behr didn't play the tennis then that he exhibited here today. Williams beat Behr the last time he played him, at Longwood in 1912. Ever since that beating Behr got from the great tennis player Behr has been getting ready to get back at him. This season he has not lost a match, and so today seemed an opportune moment to pay back the old score.

It was by relentless, even scientific, playing that Behr won his great game today. He proved a wonder at backhand strokes, rivaling Teddy Pell's famed ability in this respect. He showed speed at critical moments, when speed counted for everything, and he discovered the spots on his formidable opponent's left side which the latter's backhand strokes could handle but feebly. But more than anything else, Behr's victory over McLoughlin was due to his remarkable net playing. The new McLoughlin plays deep court, the old McLoughlin played the net. Behr beat the new McLoughlin with the old McLoughlin's methods.

McLoughlin saw this and, having once played the position, knew its weak point. Time and again he tried to lob balls over Behr's head to the rear of the court, but Behr proved too fast and got back far enough for them. He also exhibited a powerful method of returning these high flyers, and was able to hammer them as hard and high in the air and as accurately as when they came within easy reach. Ability to manipulate this vigorous overhead stroke of Behr's would solve many players' big problem. Finally, one of his most disastrous strokes was a mighty side swing, level with the shoulder, with which he caught balls that fairly sizzled as they passed close to either corner of the court or an inch inside of either side line that was unprotected momentarily. In his efforts to drive Behr back from the net McLoughlin lost many points, for he would loh the balls back to the line, and a minimum of the once Behr could not catch in midair went out a few inches.

McLoughlin was a little wild part of the time. He made a great many spectacular plays and won the applause of the spectators often, however. Most of these were made when he lofted a ball that he had to run across the court for and reached only a moment before it would have bounced the second time, when it was an inch or two from the turf. Behr, however, found most of the lofted balls easy and returned them to the side of the court McLoughlin had just left. McLoughlin didn't get back fast enough for them. The heat seemed to tell on him. His game was generally slower than when he defeated Niles yesterday or Throckmorton the day before.

When it was all over people began asking just who this fellow Behr was anyhow. There were a few of the "I told you so" chaps, but many had not considered Behr a very serious competitor. He was ranked last year as the third best player in the country. McLoughlin being ranked first and Williams second; he was a member of last year's Davis Cup team; he won the Middle States championship last year, defeating a long list of the country's stars. This year he won the Middle States championship again, at South Orange, though the young Rahway, N. J., high school boy, Harold Throckmorton, gave him a run for it, and the two had to play five sets before the match was decided.

Behr's victory over McLoughlin today throws a shadow of uncertainty over the outcome of the challenge match tomorrow. It was generally believed that McLoughlin would win today's match and have a comparatively easy time getting even with Williams tomorrow. But the upsetting of these calculations today centres great interest in tomorrow's match, for Williams will not have to bear the heavyweight of fearful realization of his opponent's past greatness, which may help him greatly; while many feel that if Behr can add the quality of consistent playing to his achievements and play tomorrow the game he played today, he will later be able to add the national championship itself to his record.

CHURCH AND MATHEY LOSE.

Griffin and Johnston Defeat Princeton Pair in Western Tennis.

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—Clarence J. Griffin and William M. Johnston of San Francisco, Pacific Coast champions, and Walter T. Hayes and Ralph H. Burdick of Chicago, Western titleholders, won the right today to compete in the finals of the national elimination doubles tennis championship.

The winners of tomorrow's finals will play Maurice E. McLaughlin and Thomas C. Bundy, the titleholders, later this month on the courts of the West Side Tennis Club, Forest Hills, N. Y., in the challenge match for the title.

Griffin and Johnston had a hard time today in disposing of George M. Church and Dean Mathey of Princeton University, Northwestern champions, the match being drawn out to the limit of five sets, four of the sets going to extra games. The final scores were 8—10, 7—5, 6—6, 4—6, and 7—5.

In contrast to this hard-fought match was the easy victory of Hayes and Burdick over Nat Thornton and B. M. Grant of Atlanta, Southern champions, the score being 6—1, 6—0, and 6—6.

The Griffin-Johnston and Church-Mathey match was more even on the court for more than three hours, and at the finish were worn down so that they could not cover the court effectively, though the former team showed the greater stamina. Nearly every point was hard fought, and game after game went to vantage before being decided.

Johnston and Griffin took the fifth and deciding set 7 to 5 after Church and Mathey had obtained what looked like a commanding lead. The winners took the lead at the start and soon had the score 4 to 2, but Church and Mathey braced and evened the set. In the eleventh game, with the score 5-all, Church and Mathey worked the score up to 15—40 in the vantage game, but could not get over the deciding point. Johnston and Griffin then easily ran out the match. In the next game. The point score:

TENNIS TITLE HOLDER WINS.

Miss Cassel to Play Miss Wagner for Long Island Championship.

Miss Clare Cassel, the playing through title holder, showed speed and power in the semi-final round of the Long Island tennis championship in women's singles yesterday on the courts of the Woodmere Club at Woodmere, L. I., and defeated Miss Margaret Grove two sets to one at 6—4, 4—6, 6—4. In the lower half of the draw Miss Marie Wagner, the New York State champion, defeated Miss Gertrude Della Torre in straight sets at 6—3, 6—1.

The contest between Miss Cassel and Miss Grove developed a splendid combination of the baseline driving game as opposed to a well sustained net attack. Although defeated Miss Grove made a fine stand by a brilliant series of rallies at close range, and forced the title holder to play hard for every point she won.

Miss Cassel had fine control of ground strokes and was just a shade better than Miss Grove. Thirty games were played, of which Miss Cassel won sixteen and fourteen were won by her opponent. Miss Cassel's cleverness in playing for undefended spots in Miss Grove's court materially contributed to her success.

Only one match was played in the doubles, and in this Miss Grove also failed to maintain her form. With Miss Ruth Schwab as a partner Miss Grove lost a straight set match to Mrs. Howard Vogel and Miss Lucille Weil at 6—3, 6—4. The playing of the winning combination has been one of the features of the championship tournament, and they are expected to make it very interesting for their opponents in the final round. The summary:

Long Island Championship, Women's Singles.—Semi-Final Round—Miss Clare Cassel defeated Miss Margaret Grove, 6—4, 4—6, 6—4; Miss Marie Wagner defeated Miss Gertrude Della Torre, 6—3, 6—1.

Women's Doubles.—Second Round—Mrs. Howard Vogel and Miss Lucille Weil defeated Miss Margaret Grove and Miss Ruth Schwab, 6—3, 6—4.

DULUTH OARSMEN WIN SIX RACES

Intermediate Single Scull Event Taken by Henry Heller of New York in National Regatta.

Special to The New York Times.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 13.—The blue-jerseyed oarsmen of the Duluth Boat Club made a clean sweep of the Connecticut River in the first day of the national regatta here today, winning each of the six events in which they were entered. The seventh event, the intermediate single sculls, was won by Henry Heller of the Metropolitan Rowing Club of New York by three lengths.

It is many years since one club has won so many honors in the national regatta in a single day. The Duluth club is coached by young Jim Ten Eyck, son of the veteran coach of the Syracuse crews. Horak, the Duluth oarsman who was entered in the intermediate sculls, was scratched, as he was stroke of the senior four, which was sufficient rowing for him in one day.

Another New York sculler, Waldo Smith of the New York A. C., rowed a strong race and took second place in the senior quarter-mile dash for single sculls, which was won by W. M. Hoover of Duluth by half a length. The events which Duluth won were senior double sculls, intermediate double sculls, intermediate four-oared shells, senior four-oared shells, senior quarter-mile dash, and junior eight-oared shells.

Hagberg and Hall brought in the first trophy for Duluth in the intermediate doubles. In the next race Duluth had no entry, and Heller of the Metropolitans took first place and cheered up the New York spectators. Heller pulled a fine stroke and finished three lengths ahead of Darling, the Boston entry. The senior doubles resulted in a fine test of strength between Osman and Kent for Duluth, and Kelly and Smith from the Vesper Club of Philadelphia. Duluth started strong and led a full length at the turning stake, but in the stretch the Vesper pair pulled slowly up on them. The dash for the finish line was exciting, and Duluth just managed to hold a short length to take the city boat. The times were 7:05 and 7:06.

There were only two crews entered in the fourth race, for intermediate fours, the Nonpareils of New York and Duluth. It resulted in another victory for the speedy Duluth men. The New Yorkers were well up in the race until Duluth stole away from them at the turn.

The special race for junior eights provided a sensational finish of the regatta for third place. Duluth was out in front with Detroit half a length behind. The Ingleside, Atlantas and Springfields pulled up to the line like one shell. The judges at the finish called it a dead heat between the Inglesides of Holyoke and the Springfield Boat Club, with the Atlantas of this city one second behind. Burns, the Springfield stroke, was hardly able to lift his oar in the last quarter.

The senior four shells brought together the best oarsmen of the day. In the Union shell from Boston were Withington of Harvard and Ferguson, the ex-Cornell stroke; the University Barge Club of Philadelphia was composed of Pennsylvania graduates. The Duluth four has not been defeated in four years. In this time they have won fourteen races. There was a close race for second place between the University Club and the Detroit Club, the Philadelphia men winning.

The last race was the quarter-mile dash with seven entries, five of which were from New York. Even with these odds against them, Duluth again came through to victory. Hoover, their senior sculler, finishing first. Waldo Smith of the New York A. C. was second place, and Heller of the Metropolitans was third. In winning this race Hoover broke the former record of 1:16, made by Shepherd on the Harlem River, Hoover's time being 1:08. Another new record was established when the Duluth oarsmen took the junior eight race in 5:55. The summary:

Senior Double Sculls.—Won by Duluth Boat Club, Duluth, by quarter length: Vesper Boat Club, Philadelphia, second; Riverside Boat Club, Cambridge, third. Time—7:03.

Intermediate Single Sculls.—Won by Henry Heller, Metropolitan Rowing Club, New York, by three lengths; Newton Darling, Union Boat Club, Boston, second; Frank Hardina, Springfield Boat Club, third; Henry C. Pike, Atlanta Boat Club, Springfield, fourth. Time—8:50.

Intermediate Double Sculls.—Won by Duluth Boat Club, Duluth, by quarter length; Union Boat Club, Boston, second; Rockrimmon Boat Club, Springfield, third; Atlanta Boat Club, Springfield, fourth. Time—7:47.

Intermediate Four-Oared Shells.—Won by Duluth Boat Club, Duluth, by eight lengths; Nonpareil Rowing Club, New York, second. Time—7:7 3-5.

Senior Quarter-Mile Dash, Single Sculls.—Won by W. M. Hoover, Duluth Boat Club, Duluth, by a half length; Waldo Smith, New York Athletic Club, second; Henry Heller, Metropolitan Boat

BROOKLYN DEFEATS GIANTS EASILY—YANKEES VICTORS IN TWELVE INNING GAME

GIANTS SHOW NO CLASS IN BROOKLYN

Dodgers Resume Their Romp Pennantward and Win Easily, 6 to 1.

All that Brooklyn has to do now to win the National League pennant is to play New York for the rest of the season. Beating the Giants has become a habit with the Dodgers. The manner in which they did it at Ebbets Field yesterday was 6 to 1. And the Giants had no business whatever with even their lonesome unit.

Once upon a time the Giants could ramble through a season, playing pretty good ball, with occasional slumps, but this year they have slumped through the season, and with occasional flashes of good ball. After watching the Giants yesterday you can readily understand why some folks in Brooklyn would refuse to pay a jitney to see a game.

In the first place the New Yorks found Jack Coombs going at a merry clip. The Colby veteran didn't appear to have much speed, but his curves had McGraw's men blindfolded. It wasn't their lack of hitting that made them look so frayed and worn. It was the St. Vitus style of fielding. Their fielding and throwing was as loose as quicksand. Red Dooin couldn't throw to second base often and Larry Doyle couldn't catch the ball when it did come anywhere near him, so all there was to do was to laugh with the Brooklyn fans. On the bases the Dodgers stole everything that wasn't nailed down.

The Giants were responsible for the weirdest play that has been seen around here in many a season. It was the third inning. Coombs favored with a nice hit to left. Hi Myers contributed another single to right, sending Coombs to second.

Ollie O'Mara laid down a bunt, with the idea of making a sacrifice. The ball dropped dead in front of the plate, and Dooin grabbed it with a chance of throwing to third and making an easy force play on Coombs. You should have seen that throw. It soared as high above Lobert's head that he couldn't have reached it on an elevator. It went to left field, where Burns was waiting for it. The ball nimbly sifted through Burns like water through a cheap raincoat. Of course, Coombs and Myers scored.

But what of Ollie O'Mara? Everybody had forgotten him in the excitement. After the two runs had scored, O'Mara was standing there near the plate as beautiful and still as a marble Greek statue. He was like a statue in more ways than one, for when several of the Brooklyn players grabbed and asked him for goodness sake to please come out of the trance and get a move on, he acted for all the world like a marble statue.

Then O'Mara enacted the prize marble-topped play of the season. After he had taken enough time to go home and get his dinner and return, he started for first. By this time Burns had caught up with the ball again. He threw it to Fletcher, who threw it over to first base, and O'Mara was waved out by Smiling Al Orth. Maybe it wasn't slumber that had Ollie under its spell, but it was something just as effective.

Yesterday was Friday, the 13th, but the Brooklyns didn't appear to be any more afraid of superstition than they were of Pol Perritt's pitching. With this Jonah day safely passed, the Brooklyn players will no longer be afraid of a wagonload of barrels, a cross-eyed girl, a bird flying over the infield, or any of those alibis which ball players like to say interfere with the normal conditions of the game.

That Brooklyn has reached the high-water mark of baseball insanity over its fighting club, was no more plainly shown than when the crowd broke into an outburst of applause at the first appearance of Hank O'Day, reupholstered in new umpire toggery. When baseball fans so far forget themselves as to give an umpire some deserving applause, you can see that they are a little hazy in the attic.

Perritt started to pitch for the Giants and in the second inning Zack Wheat ripped a bouncer at him which almost carried away a hand. Fletcher picked up the ball when it was sizzling hot, but by that time Zack was at first. Cutshaw forced him at second, Doyle just barely missing a double play at first. Cutshaw stole second. Stengel, who was back in the game for the first time since his recent injury, planked a double to centre field and scored Cutshaw. Stengel was limping so badly that he had to retire, Smyth running for him.

In the third inning came the marvelous display of Giant errors, which gave the Dodgers two runs and brought forth O'Mara's "ivory" play. In the fourth, with two gone, Getz got an infield hit, stole second, and scored on Otto Miller's single to left. Perdie Schupp went in to pitch in the fifth inning. Miller got a single off him in the seventh and Otto stole second. He went to third on Coombs's out and scored on Hi Myers's third hit of the game.

More Giant errors in the ninth. With one gone, Daubert walked and Wheat was safe on Doyle's error. Wheat was out stealing second, but, mind you, Doyle didn't take the throw this trip. Fletcher got the put-out. Cutshaw was safe when Snodgrass dropped his fly ball. He scored when Silent John Hummel slammed a three-bagger to right. Snodgrass, who has been in a bad slump for some time, had to be the "goat" for the Giants yesterday. He was up four times and each time there were Giants on the bases with two out. A hit would have meant tallies. Four times Snodgrass fell down, striking out on two of the occasions.

The only Giant run was scored in the eighth. Doyle singled and Fletcher hit a long fly to centre. Merkle was safe on O'Mara's error, Doyle going to second. Brainerd's single to left scored Doyle. The score:

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 13.—Cincinnati defeated Pittsburgh today, 4 to 3, getting three runs in the ninth inning on hits by Herzog and Griffith, a base on balls to Williams, and wild throws by Collins and Harmon. The three runs scored by Pittsburgh in the sixth inning came after an error by Herzog when he should have retired the side. The score:

Alexander Starts Badly, but Wins.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 13.—Philadelphia knocked Rudolph off the rubber in six innings today and defeated Boston, 5 to 3. Nehf, formerly of Terre Haute, finished the game in fine style for the visitors. Alexander was hit hard in the second and fourth innings and then settled down, the visitors not getting a man past first base in the last five innings. Score:

VICTORY FOR YANKS ON CALDWELL'S HIT

Athletics Defeated in Twelve-Inning Game at the Polo Grounds by 3 to 2.

Ray Caldwell wasn't the Yankees' pitcher in the game with the Athletics at the Polo Grounds yesterday, he was just plain Ray Caldwell, pinch hitter, and between his coming and going there elapsed no more time than one minute, but in that short period Caldwell won a ball game. Quaker strategy was confounded before his single that hummed to left centre and brought Maisel to the plate with the tally giving the Yanks a 3 to 2 victory over the Mackmen in a game prolonged to twelve innings. In the records Ray's hit goes as a single, but there is not the least doubt in the minds of those who saw the game that it would have been good for three bases or perhaps a home run if such a smash had been needed. His was the last dramatic touch to a game that had been full of excitement during every minute.

There might be interest in knowing just what Stuffy McInnis thought of the hit. You see Stuffy elected himself strategist of the Quaker team in that fatal twelfth, and his judgment missed fire because of a lapse of memory. For some reason he had forgotten all about Caldwell as a member of the Yanks. He overlooked the fact that there was a pinch hitter by that name who was in the habit of pounding out home runs when dire necessity demanded such things. When Fritz Maisel opened the last half of the twelfth inning with a sharp single to Kopf, and reached second when the Quaker City shortstop hurled the ball wide of first base, after making a wonderful stop, Stuffy began thinking how he could offset the damage. When Pipp's sacrifice advanced Maisel, the idea had crystallized and he walked over to J. Welden Wyckoff, who had been going along very well without any assistance from Stuffy's brain, and told him the great plan. What it was developed an instant later when Wyckoff, obeying instructions, sent in the inoffensive Doc Cook. It didn't seem possible that he was going to take a chance with Roy Hartzell, and Roy also walked, filling the bases. It was Daniel Boone whom Stuffy had decided upon as the easy mark for J. Welden.

The stage was all set to trot the plan, but just as Daniel was about to start for the plate there was a shout from near third base. Wild Bill was there and he called for Caldwell. When he heard it Stuffy nearly tumbled off the bag. What could poor J. Welden do? He had to pitch the ball to Shanks catapult and the result was the same as in the days of yore. There was one ball and one strike and then Caldwell swung the bat viciously in that old home-run style that you know so well. Every man on both teams took one look at the fleeting ball and started at once for the club house. There was never more than a perfunctory effort to field it, and there is just a bit of doubt as to whether it was ever recovered. That ends the review of "One Minute in a Ball Game," by Ray Caldwell.

But aside from Caldwell there were two others who stood out in the fray, Daniel Boone and Roger Peckinpaugh. They did real yeomen's duty in the field. They could have stopped the flight of a rocket yesterday. They reached out and got everything that came their way and accepted some chances that belonged to the fellow in the next tenement. It was this pair that executed two flashy double plays, and they tried about four others that missed by a margin that was less than the proverbial hair. In fact some of the fans found much fault with Silk O'Loughlin on one occasion. But Silk didn't mind. He never worries about anything when he is on the ball field, for he knows he can't be wrong. And Silk seldom is wrong. He is an efficient umpire.

And King Cole, it wouldn't do to forget him. He pitched a fine, heady game, and wasn't in the least flustered because two Quaker runs came in in the second inning, helped along by a wild throw of Nunamaker's. The score:

Red Sox Triumph in Ninth.

BOSTON, Aug. 13.—Boston won out in the ninth inning in a close game with Washington today by the score of 3 to 2. Singles by Lewis and Gardner, Henry's wild throw to check Gardner's steal, and a passed ball on which Lewis scored, made up the decisive combination. Washington used three pitchers, Boehling retiring in favor of Ayres when he became wild in the fourth, and the latter gave way to Johnson in the ninth. The visitors' outfielders cut off several hits. BROOKFEDS SCORE FREELY.

Kansas City Loses Final Game of the Series, 9 to 2.

The Brookfeds made it three out of four against Kansas City yesterday at Washington Park, when they captured the final game of the series, 9 to 2. At no time was the result in doubt. The locals opened up a big gap in the first inning and then piled up more runs with the aid of their bats and the visitors' errors. Tom Seaton, the former Phillies' star, was in the box and pitched in almost his old form. He was touched up for seven hits, but kept them well distributed.

The fielding of the Packers was very ragged, and they got all the bad breaks in the decisions. Only once did their protest have any effect. This was in the fourth inning, when Umpire Johnstone declared Kauff safe at third, on an attempted double steal. He changed his ruling and declared Kauff out when an appeal was taken to Umpire Langdon, who officiated at the plate. About 500 persons witnessed the game, of which about 300 were in the ten cent bleachers. The score:

Buffalo Scores Two Shutouts.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Aug. 13.—The Buffeds evened up the series today by twice shutting out St. Louis, 1 to 0 and 6 to 0, the two preceding games having been shut outs for Buffalo. Schulz outpitched Crandall in the opening game. The winning run was scored on Dalton's single and Louden's two-base hit. Anderson was splendidly supported in the second game, double plays retiring the side in three critical innings. Scores:

Newark Routs Chiefeds' Pitchers.

NEWARK, N. J., Aug. 13.—A terrific batting rally in which Newark pounded out seven hits, mixed with a pass and two sacrifices, sent Pitcher Brennan to the club house in the seventh inning today and netted six runs for Newark. Calscriffe's shutout was preserved by Roush's sensational catch on Westerzill in the seventh, and Rariden's daring throw in picking Mann off second base in the third. Brennan followed with a hit that would have scored Mann. The score:

EMBARRASSMENTS.

Sudden prosperity is an affliction which this country has so often survived that it knows perfectly how not to behave. In the ecstasy of great profits, in the delirium of counting unearned increment, it can be trusted even more than older countries to keep its head. But what is happening to it now is something very different, something for which there is no suitable word or description. To talk of economic luck seems rather out of taste, and luck, anyhow, is a weak and futile word.

The circumstances are so unusual as fairly to disconnect themselves from economic theory. This is the only country in the world that has anything to lend. It is the only one that can sell its goods on a large scale, because it alone can afford to give the buyers credit. It is the only country in the world that is not borrowing or desiring to borrow capital on a rising rate of interest. It is the only country of the first rank that has a free market in commodities and securities. We are the only people with a surplus of gold and credit. There is coming forward the largest cereal crop the United States has ever produced, with a premium in the world on foodstuffs; we have a potentiality in the manufactures required by war that so far as anybody can see is unlimited.

Europe owes so much for goods already bought or contracted for that foreign money is at a discount when it comes to be translated into dollars. To rehabilitate the pound sterling in this market England sent a great sum of gold and a quantity of American securities from Threadneedle Street to Wall Street via Canada; but on the day this treasure and collateral arrived the value of the pound sterling in dollars declined to a new low point, the lowest in a generation. The gold we do not want. We have already more than we can find use for. And yet for what we sell we have to take payment in gold or credit paper; the buyers cannot pay in other goods. More gold will come; more paper will be floated here. Bankers warn each other against the dangers of inflation and are almost powerless to prevent it.

That the effect so far has been confined to Wall Street speculation, that is, to gambling in the war stocks, only shows that the country does know how to keep its head. It needs to be on guard against itself. Temptations will increase. Too much prosperity is sometimes worse than not enough. To avoid an orgy of inflation in values and prices we need to think steadily of the tasks immediately in hand. The future will capitalize itself.

THE ANTHRACITE DECISION.

The Interstate Commerce Commission as a continuing body has now existed long enough to have memory and to have profited by experience. But there is in its decision in the Coal Trust case no indication of anything antedating the statute separating the interests of carriers from interests of owners of goods. "We cannot overlook the fact," says the Commission, "that some force has brought the production and sale of most of the tonnage of this commodity under their control," that is, the control of the companies whose rates are reduced.

In applying the statute the Commission orders reduction in rates on anthracite to an aggregate of $8,000,000. Will the consumers pay that much less for coal? Will the independents profit by the business diverted from the combination? Seldom on the down grade does the enlightened trust, the only sort which earns a right to live by public service, cut prices for the sake of slaughtering the independent. Big business is more enlightened than legislation and knows that it is on probation for its existence. There is no penalty for errors of legislation, but business gives irretrievable hostages for its every act. It may be a very popular decision, it may be a just one. The trouble is that the Commission fails to give adequate reasons for reducing the rates. Much of its reasoning is irrelevant.

The Commission itself indicates the difficulty in this case. The revenues of the defendant companies range between $16,000 and $40,000 a mile, and the Commission is under the necessity of dealing with all alike. It orders down all rates because some carriers make 200 per cent. profit, and the profit is excessive, although earned at the same rate that barely enables others to live. But the rate is only a single factor in the price of coal. If the one fixed now is right, straightway the struggle begins anew on some other factor of the price. It may be difficult to say what the next move will be, but that there will be another move is sure, if experience has value.

REVOLVING EVENTS.

The report that the Kaiser has proposed to the Czar a separate peace, Russia to have Galicia and the Dardanelles, Germany to have Egypt and a free hand with Russia's allies, ought to be true for the sake of rhythm in history. One hundred and eight years ago NAPOLEON met the Czar of Russia on a raft in the middle of the River Niemen at Tilsit, and proposed to divide up the world. Russia and Prussia were allies. They had been beaten by the French, the Prussians ingloriously and the Russians inconclusively. NAPOLEON wished to partition Prussia without making war upon Russia. The temptation he dangled before the eyes of the Czar was Turkey. To be revenged upon the Turk and to gain access to the Mediterranean are the two immemorial desires of Russia. The ultimate purpose of NAPOLEON was to destroy England. The Czar was to help, actively if that should become necessary under certain conditions and passively in the meantime by submitting to the Continental System, under which trade with Great Britain was forbidden. The Czar was persuaded. There was signed the treaty of Tilsit, which was a very bad bargain for Russia and too good a one for NAPOLEON to keep.

The division of the world was postponed. That fact and Russia's sworn friendship with Prussia caused the feelings of the Czar to cool, and then when NAPOLEON made an alliance by marriage with Austria instead of Russia the Russian ruler's vanity was hurt, which was a very good thing to happen. The alliance based on the Tilsit treaty perished gradually by attrition. There was already nothing left of it when the Czar refused any longer to conform to NAPOLEON'S boycott of England and began to admit British trade to the Russian Empire.

So in 1812 NAPOLEON resolved to crush Russia. There is an irresistible tendency to find parallels between NAPOLEON'S Russian campaign in 1812 and that of the Germans in 1915. There are, in fact, very few real points of similarity, except the geographical ones. The same rivers are crossed by the invaders, the same towns are objectives of progress, and the Russians retreat in an elusive, baffling manner; but everything else is so changed as to leave almost nothing of resemblance. NAPOLEON'S army never exceeded 450,000 men. It had no bases. Prussia was enemy. The French army had never, in fact, made war like that before, and did not know how to pack the beasts of burden. There were not only no railroads then; there were no "metaled" or stone-covered roads in Russia. The German host now invading Russia gets fresh bread daily from Germany. Railroads are vital. A modern army may know no more than NAPOLEON'S did how to pack its gear on horses for a march of several hundred miles, but it can build railroad mileage almost as fast as it can march. The struggle between Grand Duke NICHOLAS and the German General Staff is for control of the keys to Russia's western railroad system; and the keys are in great danger.

NAPOLEON'S objective was Moscow. The Germans' objective is Petrograd. They are trying at three points to cut the Warsaw-Vilna-Petrograd railroad, evidently with the idea that if they can succeed they will divert the retreating Russian forces from the capital. In the meantime, the Germans occupy the Baltic Provinces of Kurland and Kovno. Kurland was a Polish duchy in the days of CATHERINE II., and its acquisition by her was the first step toward pushing Russia's frontiers westward.

MISSING AMERICAN SENTIMENT.

It is a military legend that a German commander cannot be surprised. He knows everything beforehand, whether it is so or not. If he failed to find a fort where the War Office had placed it on the map, he would construct it on the spot according to specifications, and then destroy it according to orders. German propaganda evidently is conducted in the same prescient way.

The German propagandists, beginning with Dr. DERNBURG, had two things to find in this country, namely, German sentiment and English sentiment. They knew beforehand the character of each and treated it accordingly. Thus German sentiment was honestly, logically, and beautifully derived from German-American hearts and pro-German minds, (not necessarily of German origin,) whereas English sentiment was merchandise, delivered by a venal press in exchange for British gold. And the propagandists have been so preoccupied with flattering the one and first constructing and then denouncing the other that they have never discovered the existence of American sentiment. Indeed, they began by insulting it unawares. American sentiment has plenty of stomach for good fighting. It perfectly and sympathetically understands that heroic finality of spirit in which a people should say: "All those who cannot be for us are therefore against us." It cannot at all find the point of view of those who say: "All who are not for us, therefore, have been bought." That is to betray, first, an ugly and contemptuous opinion of public sentiment in a foreign land, and, second, to reveal an inverted understanding of the motives that govern the world.

Dr. JOHNSON said every man knew something worse about himself than he could be sure of about his neighbor. We should hate to think the blunders of the German propagandists were upon that basis. It is not necessary. Their delusion that every man who disagrees with them either has English gold in his pocket or has unthinkingly imbibed prejudice at a gold-corrupted source, may be accounted for by a theory of faith. It had to be so. The map could not be wrong. The same faith would equally explain the strange limitation of their perceptions. It would account for their being utterly unaware of an American sentiment that from the beginning was as neutral as the sentiment of a democratic country could be, free, impulsive, instinctively fair and tolerant. They missed it. Dr. DERNBURG and Dr. MEYER-GERHARD both missed it so completely that they evidently failed to report it to the Imperial Foreign Office. It was not only that they were too close to the mountain to see it; it was not their business to see it. Their work was confined to the contradictions in its topography, as that in the way of ascent there should be places down hill, from which it could be argued either that the mountain was not a mountain or that it had got turned upside down.

"EQUALITY" AT ALBANY.

Mr. WILLIAM BARNES, whom it is the easy fashion to label as a boss, is a man of strong and cultivated intellect and of deep and sincere convictions. He belongs, however, to a school of political and economic opinion which, for good or ill, is no longer in favor. His courage and belatedness appear in his proposed constitutional amendment prohibiting the Legislature from passing class legislation, expending public money for the benefit of a class, or establishing a minimum wage for private employés. His amendment, though not so intended, would be taken generally as a fetter on the humane, if sometimes ill-directed, purpose which is the characteristic popular temper and the source of so many bills and statutes. Irritation with Mr. ROOSEVELT and his program of "social justice" should not, and probably does not, blind Mr. BARNES to the prevailing tendencies of the people and the lawmakers. This amendment would probably wreck the whole scheme of constitutional changes finally adopted at Albany.

Moreover, his amendment has no legitimate place in the State Constitution. The Legislature and the Governor must be trusted to make laws that reflect public sentiment, the wishes of the majority. If they do not, on their own head be it. If any constitutional rights are impaired, the Judges and the courts, whose independence Mr. BARNES has defended so stoutly, will do justice to the injured and protect the minority. Unwise and costly, and even dangerous, laws may get on the statute book, wasteful experiments may be made; but the common sense of the majority, and behind that, if it fails at times, the constitutional guarantees, are a sufficient safeguard.

Mr. BARNES sees New York and the United States dedicated to "the ideal of equality," but in the United States, and in every State, the principle of equality which permits the manifold legislation interfering with free contract for the sake of a special class, factory laws, laws regulating the hours of labor of women and children, prescribing the times at which wages shall be paid, and so on, is "equal treatment of equal conditions."

There is a continual, strong, selfish movement to give exemptions and privileges to favored classes, rich in votes. Associations of farmers and laborers are so coddled in the Clayton act. The people can stop this sort of thing if they want to. As to State socialistic measures, the zeal with which they are enacted and accepted shows that the old doctrine of laissez faire is, so far as the present generation goes, a dead duck. There may be reactions. A philosopher like Mr. BARNES should have the patience to wait for them, and not play too harshly on the word "equality," which, like "liberty," has divers meanings and is meshed in a great net of limitations. American political equality came only in the nineteenth, in some States late in the nineteenth, century, property qualifications for a seat in one or both houses of the State Legislature and for the voter being the earlier rule. Neither social nor political equality had prevailed in the Colonies.

It is curious to find former Judge CLEARWATER of Kingston, a rather lonely supporter of Mr. BARNES in the convention, regretfully praising time past and the Puritans. Whatever the virtues of "our wise and pious ancestors," as the Massachusetts Constitution calls them, the Puritans had as little conception of political or social equality as they had of religious freedom. From the worshipful Magistrates and painful preachers to Goodman Nokes was a political and social distance immeasurable. For a time you had to be a church member to vote. Down to 1830 or thereabout you had to pay toward the support of the Congregational parson and meeting house, whatever your faith or want of it.

When we find Judge CLEARWATER shuddering at the "sensuousness" and other wickednesses of the moderns we wonder if his theory of the perfect Puritan would be changed by the perusal of a pamphlet by the late CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, wherein the peccadillos of "our wise and pious ancestors" and ancestresses Puritan are exhumed from the records of church discipline. When Judge CLEARWATER shudders at the coming of "the proletariat," we ask if his political prevision is any better founded than his idyll of the free and equal and virtuous Puritan theocracy.

THE BROOKLYN BRIDGE ACCIDENT

The wonder is that accidents on the Brooklyn Bridge have not been more frequent and worse in their results. The late Commissioner MARTIN opposed the introduction of electric trains because the cable plan spaced trains so much better, and spacing was necessary in traffic of such density. That was a counsel of perfection. The electric facilities were demanded with little regard for safety, but granted, as the result shows, without disregard of it. The scarcity of accidents of serious proportions attests excellent operation. It is probably safe to say that more were killed in the early panic on the promenade than in the railway operation in all the years since. Nevertheless the warning is not to be disregarded, and the remedy should be applied.

This accident happened on a straight track, and some reports say that the train was coasting, as is customary. The speed may not have been great, but must have had something to do with jumping the track, even if one wheel had a worn flange. Wheels climb the track oftener at high speeds than at low, regardless of the condition of the flanges. The breaking of an axle under the shock of the derailment is not surprising. Those operating the bridge service have had such marvelous success in operating it under conditions of congestion and a headway of seconds that they have become accustomed to conditions which invite trouble. The speed is said to have been within the limit. It is not said whether there is a special speed limit passing slip joints.

The occurrence would seem to call for modification of the speed limit and better control of trains, especially on descending levels. That would reduce the number of trains, but the time is approaching when the number of trains can be reduced over the Brooklyn Bridge without hardship. The number over the other bridges can be increased. There is lacking only a few hundred yards of track to enable the rerouting of all Brooklyn elevated road travel, enabling passengers to reach their destinations over other routes than suited them when the Brooklyn Bridge alone was working.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Eviction Would Be Cruel.

Though the old ship that has come to be known—of late more widely than ever before—as the Deep Sea Hotel has never quite paid expenses, it has come so near to doing it that the obnoxious "charity" element in the conduct of the enterprise has been pretty nearly invisible to any except professional visitors. Its guests, therefore, have not been humiliated by a too heavy sense of benefits received. Indeed, there is no reason why they should have been, for they had much the same right to kindly help as has the college student, and he is never at all troubled by the thought that his fees do not pay what his training costs.

The floating home, if made strictly self-supporting, would not serve its designed purpose, which is, or was, to provide a decent and happy home for girls too young and for the time being too unskilled to earn a full living wage. That the home it provided was happy as well as decent is perhaps the highest and finest merit of the Deep Sea Hotel; certainly it is a peculiarity that sets it far apart from the homes—or, as one instinctively writes, "homes"—established and managed by the consciously and professionally charitable.

The girls have really lived on the ship; they haven't just stayed there; and the rules they had to observe were few and only those which, under friendly and sympathetic advice, they naturally would impose upon themselves. They were regulations of the sort that exist in homes unnecessary to put in quotation marks, and not at all an institutional code.

It is little wonder that the Deep Sea boarders are filled with grief at the announcement of a soon-to-come termination of their tenancy, and no more wonder—for New York has a heart—that in more quarters than one plans are forming and efforts making to raise the money needed to keep the Deep Sea Hotel open. About $1,500 a year will be enough, it is reported, and that ought to be obtained without much more than half trying—say three-quarters. Whatever the fraction, however, the trying should be organized and systematic, though that way lies, of course, the danger that the old ship will be turned from the home for girls it is now into that very different thing, a Home for Girls.

Handed Him One of Some Warmth.

There recently appeared in The Milwaukee Sentinel an article on the duty to put and keep the country in a state of military readiness for resisting attack, maintaining its right and protecting its interests if occasion should arise. Now in Milwaukee, as in some other American towns, there are people who like to call adequate preparation of that sort "militarism," and to denounce it vehemently. One such person, writing over the modest self-description of "True Patriot," sent to The Sentinel, after reading this article, a letter severely condemning it for trying to lead its readers along the road that leads to war.

Whether this particular patriot is opposed to war on general principles, or only is apprehensive of a war turned in a direction where he would himself prefer to give aid and sympathy, The Sentinel does not reveal. Perhaps it thought, as is indeed true, that to do so was not worth while. Instead it is content, very quietly and very effectively, to answer an incautiously sarcastic inquiry made by "True Patriot." He asked whether the preacher of military preparedness was himself likely to enlist if war should come, and would himself take chances on the firing line. To this query The Sentinel replies that it doesn't know just what the writer of the article would do if there were now a call for soldiers; but it cuts short the cynical smile in which the "True Patriot" presumably indulged when he came to that admission, by adding:

"All we do know is that in the civil war he did enlist, and that he fought through four years, acquiring a commission and two wounds in that memorable conflict. We doubt if even 'True Patriot' could have done any better."

Probably that will keep The Sentinel's critic quiet for a while, but if he breaks out in a new place he might be told that the right to approve of vigorous policies, and of adequate and timely provision for executing them, is by no means confined to those who are prepared to take part in their carrying out. Inability to do that may be for any one of a dozen reasons, all good and all quite irrelevant to the facts adduced and the arguments offered. The merit of counsel is not determined by either the physical strength or the personal courage of the counselor.

Prohibition Hates to Admit It.

History supplies at least seeming support, and no small quantities of it, for that correspondent of ours who yesterday contended that whatever else might be said about alcohol, the nations marked by heavy indulgence in it have not also been notably inferior in either mind or body to peoples more or wholly abstinent.

Of course, as a matter of fact, the drinking races have been the ruling races of the world, and by no means merely by brute force, and our correspondent, when he asked if anybody could imagine a man like HINDENBURG satisfying his thirst from a bottle of pop, might have added that the imagining of any great poet or philosopher so contenting himself would be almost as difficult.

Yet the defense of alcohol was a dubious and qualified one, and well it might be. Drinking nations may have been and may be vigorous and efficient, not because strong drink gives strength—in absolute certainty it does nothing of the kind—but because it acts as an eliminating agent, putting at end to social strains in one way or another undesirable. Those whom it apparently spares may be what the doctors call "somatic freaks"—men with an idiosyncratic immunity—or the sparing may not be as real as it seems.

Vices, shocking as the statement sounds, have a use—they inflict on weaklings the penalty which the sensibilities of civilization are too tender to impose. LESSING, who was not always solemn and stately, wrote that "it is possible to drink too much, but it is impossible to drink enough"—a dark saying, not to be understood without some thought. When grasped, it will be seen to have an oblique bearing on this embarrassing phase of the alcohol controversy.

FOR THE DEEP-SEA HOTEL.

An Appeal for Ninety-seven Subscriptions to Average $15 Each.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I was deeply interested in the story that appeared in THE TIMES of last Saturday concerning the danger of the abandonment of the Arbuckle Deep-Sea Hotel for Working Girls. An item of news in this morning's papers indicated that the immediate preoccupation of the committee that has been formed for the purpose of saving the hotel is less with the raising of money than with the effecting of an understanding on the subject with the Arbuckle heirs.

This is as it should be, no doubt, yet it might possibly happen that at the last moment the necessary money might not be forthcoming. Would it not, therefore, be desirable that THE TIMES keep the matter before the public, and, in particular, that it give space to the mention of subscriptions to the fund? Nothing is as well calculated to bring out contributions as the knowledge that contributions are being made.

That so excellent an institution, self-supporting so far as ordinary current expenses go, should be in danger of being given up is a thing most unpleasant to contemplate. It ought not only to be maintained, but to serve as an example for other enterprises of the same general nature—whether afloat or ashore. To give it up would mean much more than the mere throwing away of the old ship and its material equipment; we have here a "going concern," an institution having its own life and traditions; and it is the human element embodied in it whose loss would be by far the most serious thing.

To keep the hotel going another year would require, the public have been informed, only $1,500; and during the twelve months thus gained, doubtless, arrangements could be completed for placing the enterprise upon a permanent footing. Surely there should be no difficulty in getting a hundred subscriptions of an average amount of $15 each for an excellent purpose. I am sending three subscriptions of $15 each—one from each member of my family—to Miss Minnie Walsh, Corporation Counsel's Office, Municipal Building, who is in charge of the committee's work, and I hope many readers of THE TIMES will do likewise. Conservation Upside Down.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Why not invest a substitute for war when Europe gets its fill? Instead of killing the most fit and destroying the best buildings and the best civic works, why not destroy the worst—the people with crooked intellects, and the poorest buildings? Or do the economists who stand on their heads hold that prosperity increases in proportion to destruction? M. J. SOYER.

WHEN WAR IS OVER.

When war is over—when no more
The deadly guns of battle roar;
When smoke of carnage fades away
And azure gleams show through the gray;
When all the dead are laid to rest
And in each grim survivor's breast
The calm of peace has glad domain,
What then will be the Kaiser's gain?

A ruined empire's crumbled throne,
Where memory reigns, shamefaced, alone!
Deserted lands with famine rife,
Towns devastated through the strife,
Depleted coffers, which no train
Can fill with excess wealth again,
A legion subjects, weakened, maimed,
Imperial honor grimed, defamed!

In every mart the empty sound
Of trade that has scant welcome found.
And while his hated emblem waves
O'er scores of unmarked soldier graves,
In every word, by land of sea,
Some taunt of his spent power will be.
When peace again has blessed the earth
How will the Kaiser count his worth?

LURANA SHELDON.

NATIONS IN YOUTH AND AGE.

Why the Chinese and the English People Are Racially Adult.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

While, as your editorial points out, a comparison of a nation to an individual is a figure of speech that must not be stretched too far, nevertheless there is nothing more commonly assumed in our international and every-day relations than that nations are individual personalities judgeable on the same standards as demanded of individuals. Departure from this close comparison, whether for corporations or for nations, is dangerous and unnatural, for both are merely collective persons.

A nation most certainly does acquire a collective soul and character, which, while perhaps blurred at the frontiers from mixtures, nevertheless in most nations has unity to such a marked degree that the characteristics are recognized even when facial and linguistic earmarks are erased. This is certainly true of Germans.

Perhaps I did not take time in my contribution concerning "the strange child heart of Germany" to review, first, the relation of a people's civilized age to its racial morals. Morals are not inherent in character—they are forged out of social, political and commercial relationships. And since the most universal and active relationships of the modern age are commercial, it is an interesting and hardly disputable fact that the position of a nation in the scale of morality is pretty accurately placed by the length of time which that nation has spent in extensive commercial relationships.

China is the oldest commercial nation in the world, and the honor of the Chinese merchant is perhaps the very highest in the world. The committee of leading Chinese men recently visiting America over and over again made the comment that we seemed to need so many lawyers, contracts and so much formality in any transaction. It is a daily occurrence in China to clinch a business deal affecting large sums with no "scrap of paper"—only a Chinese merchant's word. Japan recognizes the Chinese high moral character by preferring Chinamen over Japanese for financial posts of responsibility.

Next in volume and number of centuries of trade is England, which is generally admitted to lead the nations of the Western world in commercial integrity. I do not venture to indicate the nations second and third, but it is certain that Germany is not among them—nor even the United States. Our own commercial integrity has many blots to live down, not the least of which is the attempt to pass off inferior goods, under misrepresentation, to the Allies.

But Germany's position is next on the scale below that of the United States; and last of all comes Japan, the youngest and most unscrupulous of all trading nations of first class. Note, then, how the moral integrity of a nation bears an unmistakable relation to its years of age as an international trading factor of consequence. That nations once commercially powerful are now minor in the moral scale merely proves the ease with which a national moral character disintegrates when it loses its whetstone of great commercial activity.

Not only has Germany had too short a career of international trade relationship to reach maturity of international morals, but adolescence has been arrested by its triple feudalism—military, industrial, and political. It is unthinkable, for instance, to any adulthood, national or individual, that (as in Germany) an employer as a rule has more voting power than all his employes put together. The German international moral maturity has been prevented, stunted, even where it might have had opportunity for development. Excellent paternal care has prolonged and contented that adolescence and maintained a ready pliability of character toward constituted authority that cannot be described better than as juvenile.

Your editorial asks whether von Tirpitz is a child. Certainly not, in any personal sense. But his racial mind is juvenile—caught in the same lockstep of intellectual and moral limitation as the rest of Germany. International morality is an adult conception which the Germans, like the Japanese, have not yet been taught.

My plea for breadth of mind in the judgment of Germany is in exact keeping with our most modern principles of penology, for which reformers are now contending. A violator of law and moral principle needs first of all to be examined as to his environment, education, and moral starting point. The same influences which make one race internationally moral will make other races moral, if those influences are not checked, "verboten" and systematically starved. If there were some Olympian schoolmaster who could quickly tutor the juvenile races of the earth in the tried and proven standards of international honor, so that we would live in a completely adult world, what billions in blood and iron might we not save!

Discipline in the German Army.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The correspondent who wrote the article, "In the Backwash of Austria's Army," seems never to have left Bucharest. As one who has served in the German Army I want to say that when a German soldier has committed a crime—what apparently the soldier in question has not even done—he is put before a tribunal (Kriegsgericht) which, only, can condemn to the penalty of death. The execution then would be made by the fire of a squad of men under the command of an officer and not in such a butcherlike manner as your correspondent wants his readers to believe. If an officer should act as told by your correspondent, he himself would be put before a "Kriegsgericht" and very probably receive the just penalty of being put to death. The least that would happen to him is that he would lose his commission, be disgraced, and imprisoned. But the whole story is quite impossible. Do you believe that the high spirit of the German soldier could be kept up by such brutal and savage treatment as your correspondent reports?

Expediting Traffic.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As a good law-abiding citizen of New York and a taxpayer annually of several thousands of dollars, I wish to enter a very bitter complaint against that section of the police contingent of this town known as the Traffic Squad—those who direct traffic at street intersections. Let a gentleman driving his own car and be accompanied by ladies unconsciously not stop his car at the instant a whistle is sounded for traffic to stop, and the flood-gates of wrath will be opened against him and he will not be permitted to move on, and traffic in all directions will be held up until this "peace angel" in uniform has vented his entire wrath—much to the delectation of the ever-present corner gang to whom he glories in showing his authority. The other day I saw a policeman catch a pickpocket right in the act of plying his trade, and he was not talked to nor the insults heaped on him as is sure to reach the ears of an inoffensive automobilist. Yesterday my car was halted to let an express wagon pass; and as I was not quick enough with my emergency brake, I was made the target for a line of epithets and abuse, although I was accompanied by two ladies and a little girl. POLAND'S EYES ENGAGE A STAR.

Her Sympathies?—They Are But to Say, "Go Away, Barbarians"—A Debt the World Has Almost Forgotten.

By KAZIMIR DE PROSZYNSKI.

New York, Aug. 12, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

"Poland, where is your sympathy?" That is the question everybody puts to my fellow countrymen during these days.

I am not authorized to speak on behalf of my country—no one has such a right when the national representation does not exist—yet I am sure that every thinking Pole, be he rich or poor, prince or peasant, German, Russian, or Austrian subject, has only one indignant cry: "Go away, all! Go away from our home, barbarians that you are!" If I am mistaken let anyone protest, but I am convinced that this is the sentiment of all Poles who are not of foreign origin.

Personally, I am not inclined to hate any living individual for political reasons; hatred is a feeling strange to a Pole, in spite of all the wrongs he suffers. Rather, we esteem those qualities of our enemies which deserve esteem. But imagine, if you will, the invasion of your home, your sanctuary, on three sides by three quarreling brutes who use it as the place of their quarrel in order to save their own homes; who destroy the products of your labor and your civilization, use your children as a shield against the enemy, and when compelled to withdraw, burn and wreck everything or else carry it away with them! And on top of this to rob you of your name and your good reputation by falsifying your history and spreading over Europe false statements about your character, past and present!

Listen, all "free" nations. For 150 years you entirely forgot the debt you owe to your elder brother, to your unique ancestor of collective liberties and personal freedom. Your children grow up without the slightest knowledge of the existence of a people who cleared up the way to your freedom; who first, after the fall of Roman civilization, realized that all thinking men are equal in the sight of the nation; who through the centuries recognized the absolute freedom of speech, of conscience and religion. You forgot the nation that should be remembered by you as the unique example of peaceful evolution, the people that grew, progressed rapidly and reached individual rights not by revolutionary destruction, not through an outburst of the lowest instincts, but as the natural result of the free play of the human spirit. You forgot that this ancient civilization was continually defending you in your future civilization from the destruction and invasion of Eastern barbarians. Even lately, after Poland was conquered by three absolute rulers who were frightened at the ideas of popular liberty which were spreading from this country, the heirs of this spirit led the constitutional movements in every part of the world, personified by such individuals as General Kosciusko in America, General Mieroslawski in Germany, General Bem in Hungary, &c.

You have allowed yourselves to bury so deeply your gratitude that you are unconsciously helping in the movement to disgrace Poland's past and to obliterate the best efforts of Poland's present. In our sight this is an appalling thing to do; you are the destroyers of your own moral progress.

Shall I recall some of the fictions invented to excuse the conquest of Poland? There was the story of Poles oppressing peasants, and yet the real facts are that in an epoch of general oppression the lower classes of Poland enjoyed for those times the highest possible liberties; frequently whole villages of peasants, for the slight proof of their intelligence and loyalty, were rewarded with the highest freedom, i. e., with citizenship or "nobility," as it is called in Poland, these inhabitants obtaining even higher political rights than those enjoyed by citizens in the United States. You have assumed without question that Poland was the focus of anarchy, of massacres—"pogroms"—while in reality Poland's history is not stained with a single attempt on the ruler's life; Poland was the single country which admitted all immigrants—such as Jews, Hussites, Huguenots, Presbyterians — expelled from the rest of Europe, and tolerated their religions, and this, too, at a time of inquisition and general persecution. You condemn the noblest Polish institutions such as the "Veto" without knowing that the highest material and spiritual development of Poland began with the introduction of the "Veto" and led through 150 years to the Golden Age of Poland (in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries); this highest expression of the personal control of the government of every citizen was never abused nor corrupted until the intervention of intruders, who succeeded in conquering Poland by force and destroying her freedom. The statement that the "Veto" was the cause of the downfall of Poland is similar to the position of a burglar who might point out the inferiority of the house since it lacked anti-burglar devices.

This is our answer to the question "Poland, where is your sympathy?" In the light of our history can we make any other answer? To a person we believe that it is necessary to shake off the old despotism and to inaugurate a new era in our civilization. All the highest spirits of Poland like Mickiewiez, Krasinki and others have firmly believed that the old Polish political ideals may be made to form the basis of future politics which will revive and spread over all the world from our once forgotten country.

PEOPLE AND THEIR MONEY.

A Plan to Bring Into Closer Relations the Banker and Investor.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your editorial on the "War's Lesson in Thrift" with the resulting communication from Mr. Edwin B. Wilson is timely.

There is no doubt in my mind that the lesson you draw is the proper one nor that the detailed suggestion for a co-operative investment advertising campaign would be a move in the right direction.

Last September when there was general apprehension as to the effect of a flood of foreign liquidation of American securities, the idea of a co-operative advertising campaign to impress on the public the investment opportunity which had presented itself was seriously considered by prominent bankers and heads of investment houses. The intention was to stimulate in this country that instinct for general thrift and direct investment which centuries of a more difficult fight for life in more densely populated countries abroad have instilled.

At the time it was pointed out that such an advertising campaign would:

1. Act as a stimulus to business and all workers throughout the country.

2. Give corporations more stockholders—and every stockholder means a friend. Make the public see the human side of a corporation.

3. Impress the corporations with their responsibilities to the public.

4. Help every citizen of the world by providing a resting place for the flood of securities from abroad. Not a mere temporary bin hired by a syndicate in a New York safety deposit vault, but a permanent ownership which would keep them out of the market.

For a number of reasons this co-operative campaign did not materialize at that time but I feel certain that some time in the not distant future a co-operative investment advertising campaign such as has been suggested will be carried through in one way or another. I think the result will make a lasting impression and teach bankers and investment authorities generally the splendid results which can be obtained through such a progressive policy. JOHN MUIR.

Already a Woman's Civic Club.

I desire to call the attention of those who are interested in a possible city club for women that there is an organization of that kind already well established. The Woman's Municipal League was organized in 1897 by Mrs. Josephine Shaw Lowell "for the purpose," as its constitution says, "of promoting among women an intelligent interest in municipal affairs and to aid in securing permanent good government for the City of New York without regard to party or sectional lines."

It has had the support and active co-operation of a large number of the most influential women of the city. Under the efficient leadership of Mrs. Richard Aldrich and Mrs. Edward Ringwood Hewitt it has grown until it has now sixteen hundred members. It welcomes all women to its membership, and its committees deal with all phases of our municipal life and are in close touch with the different municipal departments. It has district organizations covering the whole city which are vigorous and effective. The leaders in the districts as well as the heads of the central committees are women of large experience who are giving much time to the work. The league has no party or political connection, nor is it devoted to any particular theory or scheme of public affairs. It invites the aid of all women who are ready to render such aid as women can to the bettering of our common civic life. It has been successful in its aim always to work with rather than against the city's responsible heads, and its aid has always been welcomed by them.

It has offices at 42 West 39th Street. Its expenses are small and were met even this past hard year without calling upon the public for the cost of a single ticket. The league this Summer is maturing plans for increased activities the coming season and would be glad to welcome to its ranks trained and experienced workers as well as those whose enthusiasm is as yet unorganized.

James R. Stowell in his letter appearing in THE TIMES says: "It would be a novelty to learn from any of your correspondents as to how German militarism has manifested itself in a concrete way." Has Mr. Stowell never heard of the Zabern incident, for instance? F. D. BROWN.

A MOTORIST AT CROTON.

What One Man Encountered in the Way of Disastrous Detours.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I read the article in your paper by Mr. M. Tiefenbrun, engineer in charge of the road under construction, Croton-on-Hudson.

The detour signs, such as he advocates, from two to four inches high are ridiculous. I came over, presumably through his section, only a few days ago, and am now laid up for repairs here, owing to a detour south of Dover. I am not sufficiently familiar with the names of the roads, but I was held up by some road builders, who said it would be impossible to go through, as they were reconstructing, and was told to go by a certain detour. On starting for this detour a farmer told me it was well-nigh impassable and dangerous to go there. Between the farmer and the road people I naturally had to take the advice of the latter. This road went on the side of a small mountain and was, as the farmer stated, well-nigh impassable. I had not gone more than a mile and a half before there were deep ruts impossible to escape, and in the centre of the road a projecting rock several inches high, which ripped out the casing of my generator, and only by great good fortune I got out without further trouble.

Arriving at Lake Mahopac I found that another automobile had been over the same road and suffered injury. Previous to my accident I met an automobile party who informed me that there were four automobiles out of commission somewhere in the neighborhood of Poughkeepsie. Not only is this very annoying and expensive, but likewise dangerous. It seems to me it is the business of Road Commissioners or engineers in charge to post detours not in letters of two to four inches high, but from four to six inches in black letters on a white surface, showing exact detours, and before these are determined upon they should be properly investigated.

MORGAN BELMONT IS TO WED TODAY

Son of New York Banker to Take Miss Margaret F. Andrews as His Bride at Newport.

BISHOP DORAN TO OFFICIATE

Ceremony at Rockry Hall to be Witnessed by a Company of 150 Relatives and Friends.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 13.—The marriage of Miss Margaret Francis Andrews, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul A. Andrews, and Morgan Belmont, youngest son of August Belmont, will take place at Rockry Hall at 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon. It will be witnessed by 150 relatives and friends. Bishop Doran of Providence, assisted by the Rev. James T. Walsh, pastor of St. Mary's Church, will perform the ceremony. A bridal luncheon will follow.

Miss Andrews has received many gifts, which will not be shown, but are stored in a bank vault. A rehearsal of the wedding was held today.

Mr. and Mrs. August Belmont gave a dinner tonight for the bride and groom, the wedding party and relatives, including Mr. and Mrs. Perry Belmont, Mrs. August Belmont, Jr., Mrs. Charles F. Curtiss, Jr., and their house guests. Other guests came in later for dancing.

On the lawn of Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt's residence this afternoon for the benefit of the Vestiare des Blessés, founded in Paris last August, Mme. Jane Catulle Mendes gave a lecture before a large delegation of Summer residents.

Mme. Mendes, who has done much to assist the wounded troops of France after their discharge from hospitals, comes to America for assistance, and her cause is being aided by Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, who is the President of the American Committee, and Mrs. Whitney Warren, Mrs. August Belmont, Mrs. R. Livingston Beeckman, Mrs. Craig Biddle, Mrs. Royal Phelps Carroll, Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., and Mrs. Leonard M. Thomas.

Mme. Mendes related her visits to the devastated villages of Nomeny and Gerberviller, telling of the conditions of the old men, women and children, and the prisoners returning from Germany.

Francis Roche, an official of the Lafayette Fund, which furnishes kits for French troops, has arranged to give an entertainment at Hill Top Inn Saturday night, Aug. 28, for the benefit of the fund. He was in conference today with Mrs. Barber completing details. The entire establishment has been taken over for a musical entertainment.

Mr. Roche is Honorary Secretary of the fund, and is working with the committee consisting of Mrs. John Jacob Astor, Mrs. William Astor Chanler, Mrs. John J. Chapman, Mrs. James B. Duke, Mrs. Archer M. Huntington, Mrs. Peter Cooper Hewitt, Mrs. Philip M. Lydig, Miss Janet Scudder, Mrs. Lee Thomas, Mrs. M. Orme Wilson, Mrs. Henry Rogers Winthrop, Miss Edith Minturn, Secretary; Robert Bacon, Treasurer; William Astor Chanler, Frederic R. Coudert, Rawlins Cottonet, Richard Harding Davis, Archer M. Huntington, Philip W. Livermore, Philip M. Lydig, John G. Milburn, W. F. Morgan, Gouverneur Morris, Ralph J. Prentis, Monroe Robinson, William Beverley Rogers, Charles S. Scribner, Jr., and Charles D. Wetmore. A French play will be given.

GOES TO PANAMA TO WED.

Miss Norris Becomes the Bride of William L. Urquhart.

The marriage of Miss Katharine Jean Norris and William Lester Urquhart was celebrated on Thursday in Ancon, Panama.

The bride is a daughter of the late Dr. Henry Lee Norris of this city and a niece of the late Miss Ada Louise Norris of Princeton, N. J. Her mother lives at 439 West 123d Street.

The wedding was to have taken place in the chapel of Columbia University, but the plans were changed, and Miss Norris went to Panama, where she met Mr. Urquhart, who has extensive business interests in Colombia, South America. He formerly lived in Glasgow, Scotland.

The ceremony was performed in the Episcopal chapel by the Rev. William Slack.

HENRY L. LIEBMANN WEDS.

Brewer Shows Nevada Divorce—First Wife Sued Last Winter.

Henry L. Liebmann, who gave his address as the Hotel Belmont, and Miss Ida Teichman of 228 West Seventy-second Street, were married yesterday by Alderman Frederick H. Stevenson in the marriage chapel of the Municipal Building. In his application for a license Mr. Liebmann filed a copy of the divorce papers granted July 27 last by Judge Frank P. Langan of the First Judicial District, Genoa, Nevada.

According to these papers, Liebmann was the plaintiff in the action against his wife, who offered no testimony in opposition.

Liebmann's first wife, Mrs. Clara Liebmann, sued for separation from him last December, basing her case on many alleged acts of cruelty. In his answer he set up a counter-claim, naming eight men. Mr. Liebmann was formerly a member of the brewing firm of Obermeyer & Liebmann. He gave his age as 43 and that of his bride 24.

WEDDING OF ARMY OFFICER.

Capt. E. W. Miller to Marry Miss Orma F. Smith Today.

The wedding of Miss Orma F. Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Myron A. Smith of Brooklyn, and Captain Edgar W. Miller, Medical Corps, U. S. A., is to take place this afternoon in St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Brooklyn.

Although the couple's engagement had been announced, they decided rather suddenly to get married. Captain Miller, who has been at Fort Ontario, has been ordered to Texas City with his regiment, and will take his bride there after a brief honeymoon. On Thursday evening Miss Smith gave a dinner at the Oriental Hotel, Manhattan Beach, for her friends, at which the wedding date was announced.

MISS SEELEY ENGAGED.

Will Become Bride of Robert Welles, Formerly of Paris.

The wedding of Miss Muriel Seeley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Graydon Seeley of Brookline, Mass., and Robert Welles, who has been living in Paris, will take place on Thursday at the Summer home of the bride's parents at Essex, Conn.

Mr. Welles is a son of F. R. Welles of Paris, who is here for the wedding, and was graduated at Amherst College, class of 1912. Miss Seeley is a graduate of Smith College, class of 1912.

Miss Lucy Cabot of Boston is to be maid of honor, and the bridesmaids will include Miss Anne Stedman and Miss Carlotta Welles, a sister of the bridegroom.

Paul Welles of New York will be his brother's best man, and the ushers are to be Philip L. Cook, Sargent H. Wellman, Henry L. Leeb, Harold S. Wilkins, all of Boston, and George Cheney Seeley, a brother of the bride.

The couple will motor to the Pacific Coast, and will live in Seattle.

DRIGGS—BRULATOUR.

The marriage is announced of Miss Marie Isabel Brulatour, daughter of Jules E. Brulatour of 490 Riverside Drive, and Robert Driggs, which took place on Thursday at the Church of the Sacred Heart of Jesus. Mr. Driggs is a son of the late Spencer Driggs, who was editor of The Musical Advance. The couple will live at 243 West 102d Street on returning from their honeymoon.

FOR BLINDED SOLDIERS.

American Aid Sought for a "Light-house" in Paris.

Mrs. Peter Cooper Hewitt, Secretary of the Committee for Men Blinded in Battle, has received a letter from Miss Winifred Holt, who is representing the committee in Europe and is establishing a lighthouse for the blind in Paris, detailed the work that is being done. "We have begun teaching in the hospitals," says Miss Holt, "and we have among our pupils two very interesting and grateful blind officers, who will make good teachers for the Paris Lighthouse. I estimate that there must be from 3,000 to 4,000 blind soldiers in this immediate neighborhood, but the Government knows of only 200. There is no doubt that we will have at least one building here, to be a salesroom, information bureau, census bureau, training station, &c., for the blind. We will have a home teaching force to find the men wherever they may be. We are now forming a French Committee, on which we will put the leading educators of the blind and representatives of the various departments of the Government. The Lighthouse is to be called 'Le Phare ou Comité International Franco-Americain pour les Soldats Aveugles aux Champs d'Honneur.'

"A corps of at least fifty teachers is needed to cope with our work. Funds are needed for salaries, materials for work, clothes—which the Government will not give us here at present—and to fit up the hostel for officers, which we will have in connection with the lighthouse for the men who are to train there.

"The Ambassador and Mrs. Sharp will aid us as much as possible, and we have already had offers of very able volunteer assistance. The Comtesse de Piennes has promised to send me the names of the soldiers who have been blinded in the Vosges and Meuse departments. They are very numerous, and without any help save the coming opening of a hospital for the blind, of which the head nurse is stone deaf."

The committee is carrying on a campaign to raise funds for the building of lighthouses for the blind in all the warring countries. Its headquarters are at 111 East Fifty-ninth Street.

RUSH WORK ON RIALTO.

Builders Subject to $1,000 Penalty Per Day Lost After Nov. 1.

The builders who have a contract for the new Rialto Theatre, which is to occupy the site of the old Hammerstein's Victoria, have begun a race with time. S. L. Rothapfel, Managing Director of the new theatre, has signed a contract with the builders which calls for the completion of the theatre by Nov. 1, with a penalty of $1,000 for each day beyond that time the playhouse remains unfinished.

As the demolition of the old building is not yet completed, a formidable task is ahead of the contractors. When it was decided by Oscar Hammerstein last Spring to remodel the Victoria and Mr. Rothapfel leased the theatre for motion pictures, it was planned to have the alterations finished by October. After the work of razing the building had been begun the Building Department condemned the walls, which the original plans contemplated using, and by the time the department had entered all its objections it was found that it would be necessary to completely demolish the old structure and build a new one. Changes in the building and fire laws since the Victoria was built necessitated a revision of the architect's plans, and this, coupled with the necessity of making other financial arrangements because of the greatly increased cost, brought the work practically to a standstill for several weeks.

Since the theatre is to be a movie house, no stage will be needed. Instead there will be a hanging garden of blooming plants surrounding the screen. Floral decorations will be used extensively throughout the auditorium.

First Frohman Rehearsal Monday.

Francis Wilson's return today from a trip to Honolulu will be the signal for the calling for next Monday of the first rehearsal of a Frohman company this season. With Marie Tempest, Ann Murdock, and Graham Brown, Mr. Wilson is to appear in a revival of "The Duke of Killicrankie" in the Lyceum beginning Sept. 6. With the old comedy will be presented a new short play by J. M. Barrie, entitled "Rosalind." The manuscript of this play arrived yesterday, and as it was in Sir James's own handwriting, Augustus Thomas fled to the country to spend the week-end deciphering it.

Cabaret at Luna Park.

Luna Park's Summer House, in which Coney Island is doing its part in keeping the fox trot and hesitation alive during the torrid season, is to have a cabaret entertainment, like the Broadway danceries, beginning tonight. It is entitled "Luna's Broadway Echo," and the first performance will be given in the Summer House at 8 o'clock. It will be repeated at 10, and two performances will be given every night during the remainder of the season.

Dinner for Mrs. H. M. Flagler.

Special to The New York Times.

ASHVILLE, N. C., Aug. 13.—A dinner for Mrs. Henry M. Flagler, who is spending the Summer at Grove Park Inn, was given by Mrs. Alice T. Connally, at Fernihurst this evening. Other guests were Mr. and Mrs. Richmond Pearson, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Settle, Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Memminger, Mr. and Mrs. Tench Coxe, Mrs. Thomas Chesebrough, Mrs. Harold Rees, Dr. S. Westary Battle, Dr. Pickney Herbert, Edward I. Frost, Dr. Thompson Frazier.

SPOIL CHINESE HONEYMOON.

Immigration Inspector Thinks Bridegroom, Yee Poy, Is Here Illegally.

Yee Poy, young and good-looking, who said he was connected with the Chinese Consular Service, and his pretty Chinese bride, roused so much interest in Pell, Doyers, and Mott Streets recently that Immigration Inspector Wylie decided yesterday to investigate. Upon finding that Poy was not connected with the Chinese Consulate and had no certificate of entry he arrested the young man on the charge of being illegally in the United States.

Commissioner Houghton put Poy under $5,000 bail, and, in default of a bondsman, committed him to the Tombs. Mrs. Poy, who has apartments at 33 and 35 Mott Street, said she came to this country when 15 years old, with her parents and was legally admitted. She is now 23.

LUCY STONE DAY OBSERVED BY 1,000

Suffragists Erect Tablet to the Memory of Pioneer Fighter for Votes for Women.

GATHER IN EAST ORANGE

In 150 Automobiles, Visit House Sold in 1858 Because She Would Pay No Taxes.

Lucy Stone Day was observed by more than a thousand suffragists yesterday at East Orange, N. J., where a bronze tablet was unveiled on the little house in which Lucy Stone lived and which was sold, with its furniture, fifty-seven years ago for the taxes she refused to pay, because taxation without representation was tyranny.

Lucy Stone was born in 1818, and was the first woman in Massachusetts to take a college degree. She was graduated from Oberlin College in 1847. She headed the call for the first National Woman's Rights Convention, held at Worcester, Mass., in October, 1850. About five years later she married Henry B. Blackwell and made a home in Orange. It was here in 1858 that her household goods were sold to pay taxes, and when the sale was over, with Alice Stone Blackwell, one year old, on her lap, she wrote her burning protest.

The visiting suffragists met at pilgrimage headquarters, the old Hawkesworth mansion, a Colonial house with huge white pillars, set on a green lawn, studded with towering horse chestnuts. Here they found ice cream and coffee at prices calculated to swell the fund for suffrage, and then proceeded in 150 automobiles to the little house where Lucy Stone had lived and written and where she held her little daughter, Alice Stone Blackwell, on her knee as she wrote in behalf of votes for women.

Many Sections Represented.

The units of the parade came from widely different sections. Dr. Anna Howard Shaw made her début in the new yellow suffrage car, presented to her at 10 o'clock yesterday morning at 505 Fifth Avenue by the National Woman Suffrage Association. There were no ceremonies, but a crowd had gathered about the gaily decorated car and was so insistent that Dr. Shaw finally made a brief speech. Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt came down from the Empire State Campaign Committee rooms to inspect the new car and to congratulate Dr. Shaw, and then the car started for Orange.

Miss Edna V. O'Brien of Tarrytown was the chauffeur. She, together with Miss Amie Hutchinson, were the chief instruments in raising the funds for this new car, named the Eastern Victory II., and also for the original little Eastern Victory that was sold in Pennsylvania for the non-payment of taxes and bought in by suffragists and presented to Dr. Shaw. The new car seats five and bears the owner's monogram.

A number of other autos went from New York. All were gayly decorated. The New York delegation included Mrs. Charles T. Nickelson, Mrs. Lavinia Walker, the Misses Portia Willis, Lucy Anthony, Eleanor Ewing, Rose Bower, and Mrs. Norman Marsh and Mrs. H. A. Grant of Tarrytown.

The procession also included an old-time "bus" of huge proportions from Middlesex County and several sight-seeing cars, one quite filled with goldenrod, and all of the cars carried more or less floral adornment in the suffrage color.

That part of Orange in which Lucy Stone made her former home is now the Italian quarter of East Orange, and the house itself is occupied by Matthew Masi, an Italian druggist, and its garden is kept as near as possible the same as it was in former years. The druggist and his wife, and the three children, all in white, did all they possibly could to make the suffragists welcome.

Tablet Unveiled by Her Daughter.

Alice Stone Blackwell unveiled the tablet to her mother's memory, but said her voice was not fitted for outdoor speaking and that she could best prove herself intelligent enough to vote by refraining from a speech. The tablet bore the following inscription:

In 1858, Lucy Stone, a noble pioneer in the emancipation of women, here first protested against their taxation without representation in New Jersey. It was erected by the New Jersey Woman Suffrage Association.

Dr. Shaw told how her grandmother, an Englishwoman, refused to pay tithes to the English church near her because she was not a member of it, and how year after year small pieces of her property were sold to pay the tithes. Turning to Miss Blackwell, she said:

"It was on this very stoop that your mother rocked you in the cradle that was sold for taxes."

Ex-Governor John Franklin Fort also made an address. He was the only male speaker, and he said woman suffrage was a matter of necessity as well as of justice, and also that the burden of proof was on the shoulders of the "antis."

Mrs. Feickert of Plainfield announced that President Wilson had promised her he would declare himself on woman suffrage before the New Jersey elections on Oct. 19.

After the unveiling exercises and speechmaking were over the suffragists returned to the headquarters at 5 o'clock, where Mayor David Standish of Glen Ridge made an address. The cars then went on through the Oranges, Bloomfield, Montclair, and Glen Ridge to Newark, where, in Military Park, a public meeting was held and where some of the women took occasion to criticise James Nugent, the Democratic leader, for his stand against woman suffrage.

TAFT GOES WEST TODAY.

At McAlpin Ex-President Talks of His New Grandson.

Ex-President William Howard Taft arrived in New York from Montreal yesterday afternoon and is staying at the Hotel McAlpin. At dinner on the roof last night, Mr. Taft told of his vacation of seven weeks just completed at Murray Bay, Canada, and of his contemplated trip West which starts at 4 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. Taft received a letter from his son, Robert Taft at Bar Harbor, Me., telling that the ex-President's grandson, born at Bar Harbor last Saturday, had been named William Howard, and that the parents were in doubt as to whether the boy should be called "Junior" or "Third," in view of the fact that the ex-President has a nephew named after him, who is called "William Howard II."

"That's a point that will have to be decided later," said Prof. Taft, "and although I am a doctor of laws, I am not prepared to make the decision offhand."

Mr. Taft will stop first at Rockville, Ind., then go to St. Louis for a two days' stay, speaking before the Chamber of Commerce at luncheon. In Salt Lake City he will address the American Bar Association. He will then continue on to San Francisco, and as President of the Unitarian Conference, will address their convention. He will also speak before the Red Cross Conference there.

On Sept. 9 he will address the American's Bankers' Association at Seattle. On Sept. 18 he will sail on the steamship Kronland from San Francisco, returning by way of the Panama Canal and reaching New York about Oct. 6.

PARIS STYLEMAKERS FAVOR RUSSIAN MODES

Showings by Callot Soeurs and Cheruit—A Train That Sways Like an Alligator's Tail.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 13.—Callot Soeurs at their opening yesterday showed Winter styles before a limited number of buyers, advancing the date from next week for the benefit of home-going Americans. It was by far the largest collection yet seen, there being as many models as before the war.

A feature of the collection which, buyers say, will cause a complete change in the style of outer garments, is the disappearance of opera wraps, which are displaced by Russian afternoon and evening full-length coats. Callot showed twenty-five models of such coats, all with different Russian names, such as "Petrograd," "Tsariga," and "Grand Duke Nicholas." They are made with enormous fur collars, wide fur cuffs, and full length godet to the bottom of the coat, with a wide fur band all around.

Another Callot innovation is a small shoulder pélerine or cape of Revolutionary or postillion effect, shown on afternoon dresses. The tailor-mades are rather simple and practical. The jackets are mostly belted in effect, the skirts short and full. The afternoon dresses are chiefly velours or faille in sombre tones, fur-trimmed.

Dinner and theatre gowns have the usual Callot lace effect. Débutante and dancing dresses are of mousseline de soie made in alternate rows to give a transparent effect. The evening gowns are little varied from the usual Callot style.

Cheruit's was the last important opening, with an average size collection. The jackets are short and the skirts have fullness and shirrings on the hips. None of the mannequins wore corsets, but wide belts gave an effect of fullness. The feature of the collection was the expensive fur coats in broadtail Kolinsky moleskin, all in Russian style, big and full length, with high collars, wide cuffs, and wide bands around the bottom in different furs.

Among the evening dresses one creating considerable comment was a white brocade gown with a long pointed train which swayed behind as the wearer walked like an alligator's tail. In afternoon gowns and tailor-mades of velvet and faille, light terra cotta was the principal color. Rich fur trimmings were used on all the models.

DEFER WIDOWS' PENSIONS.

No Funds for This Year, but Board Will Receive Applications.

At a meeting held yesterday at the office of Commissioner of Charities John A. Kingsbury, the recently appointed Board of Child Welfare of New York City, which is to have charge of the administration of the new widows' pension law, decided to take offices in the Municipal Building. As no funds have been appropriated for pensions to widows with children in the city, the board selected a Budget Committee consisting of Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, Chairman; Commissioner Kingsbury, Edwin P. Maynard, Miss Sophie Irene Loeb, and the Rev. William A. Courtney to begin at once the preparation of an estimate of the amount that will be needed to put the law into operation.

The board has decided to make no attempt to obtain funds to be used this year, but to devote the next four months to receiving applications and making investigations required by the law, with a view to preparing itself to begin granting allowances on Jan. 1, 1916. The board will act upon applications for allowances in the order that applications are received. The law provides that the widow receiving an allowance must be in each case in the opinion of the board a proper guardian mentally, morally, and physically to bring up her children; that she must have been a resident of the City of New York for two years immediately preceding her application, and that her husband must have been a citizen of the United States and a resident of the State at the time of his death.

The board decided yesterday that one of its first steps would be to make a careful study of the records of child-bearing institutions of the city for the purpose of returning their mothers all fatherless children who have been committed to institutions for no other purpose than that their mothers have been unable to pay for their support at home.

CITY MAY SAVE ON PHONES.

Experts to Study Means of Cutting Annual Cost of $300,000.

With a view of determining whether any reduction in the cost of telephone service to New York City, now amounting to about $300,000 annually, can be effected without detriment to the public interest, Mayor Mitchel and Controller Prendergast have directed that an intensive study of the situation be made. The investigation will be in charge of the following committee of city employes: Putnam A. Bates, Electrical Engineer in charge of the Bureau of Fire Alarm Telegraph of the Fire Department, Chairman; Michael R. Brennan, Superintendent of Telegraph of the Police Department; Robert B. McIntyre, Supervising Statistician and Examiner, and Chester M. Gould, Assistant Engineer of the Department of Finance.

It is intended to analyze the nature and value of the different classes of service rendered by the New York Telephone Company and to probe not only such technical points as routing of leased wires, the duct space allowed in the subways, the mechanical devices applied, &c., but also practical questions bearing on the departmental use of the city phones.

SUES ACTRESS FOR $100,000

Mrs. William Smythe Says Toby Claude Alienated Husband's Love.

Toby Claude, the actress, has been served with a summons and complaint in a suit for $100,000 for alienation of the affections of William Smythe, an actor, according to Herman L. Roth, attorney for the plaintiff, Mrs. Marie Nevins Smythe, wife of the actor.

Mrs. Smythe is suing her husband for an absolute divorce, naming Miss Claude as co-respondent. Lawyer Roth is trying to learn in what ship Smythe and Miss Claude sailed for Europe and whether they have in their custody Kathleen Smythe, the five-year-old daughter of Mrs. Smythe.

Supreme Court Justice Ford ordered the actor on last Saturday to turn the little girl over to her mother. Smythe promised to obey the order immediately, but up to the present Mrs. Smythe has been unable to learn the whereabouts of the child.

ACCUSES J. B. G. RINEHART.

Woman Says Lawyer Retains $15,000 of Her Money.

Magistrate Corrigan, acting upon the complaint of Emily Graham Dobyns, issued a summons yesterday requiring the appearance in the Tombs Court on Sept. 23 of J. B. G. Rinehart, a lawyer of 120 Broadway. Miss Dobyns said she had entrusted her Wall Street speculations to Rinehart and that he still had to account for $15,000 of her money.

Douglas Nicholson appeared in behalf of Miss Dobyns but refused to discuss the case or to give his client's address.

Rinehart is a graduate of Harvard University.

TEACHERS' PENSIONS NOT ALL DESERVED

Controller Tells of Many Who Wed After Retirement for Disability.

A EUGENICS LAW NEEDED

Criticises Board of Education and Cites Many Cases to Show Why Fund Is Bankrupt.

Controller Prendergast yesterday described some of the methods of the Board of Education regarding the Teachers' Retirement Fund. He says the fund is now bankrupt, and many of the pensioned teachers are face to face with hardships. The City Pension Commission has been making an investigation of the matter and has found, according to the Controller, much laxity in the granting of pensions.

The Controller said the Board of Education has acted illegally in retiring any teachers at all since Sept. 1, 1913. The law requires, he said, that the number of teachers retired should be so limited that the entire amount of the annuities should not exceed the income of the retirement funds, and this had been disregarded. The Pension Commission, taking the same point of view, holds that 684 retirements made by the Board of Education since 1910, when the annual income fell below the annual disbursements, are subject to serious legal doubt. As for the 203 pensions granted since Sept. 1, 1913, the Pension Commission says that they were indisputably illegal.

What the Controller calls "vicious methods of padding the rolls" are given. The law requires thirty years' service in cases of ordinary retirement and twenty years of service for retirement on the ground of disability. The Pension Commission's memorandum shows that one teacher was continuously absent 6 years and 4 months prior to retirement. Thereby her 18 years and 7 months of actual service were credited at 24 years and 11 months.

Another teacher was absent continuously 4 years and 4 months and so was pushed over the twenty-year limit. The Pension Commission gives several other cases of this sort. The Controller delved into several individual cases. One of these was that of a teacher retired on Feb. 1, 1908, who admitted to the Board of Retirement that she not only bought cocktails in a drug store near the school, but carried a flask of liquor into the school. Her retirement was recommended and was authorized by the Board of Education. She was retired on the ground of nervous inefficiency on a pension of $606.66.

Another teacher admitted at a hearing that a District Superintendent had told her that she would have to retire because she neglected her duties. He was the same Superintendent who recommended the retirement of the nervously inefficient teacher. In June, 1911, a first-year Principal's application for disability retirement, after she had served twenty-one years and nine months, was approved by the Board of Retirement. Under the established rules of the Board of Education the Principal would have been placed on the pension roll on Sept. 1, 1911, and would now be receiving an annual pension of $634.38.

On the advice of Dr. Maxwell, City Superintendent, however, her retirement was postponed until Feb. 1, 1912. In the interval, on Jan. 1, her salary was increased $938.38. The aggregate loss to the city was about $7,000. The second day after her retirement, which was on the ground of "disability," she was married.

Controller Prendergast in commenting on this case said:

"This is not the only instance. I know personally of a number of other cases where teachers retired for disability, have married. Either they should not have been retired or we need a eugenics law in this State."

PHOTOGRAPH GAS METERS.

New Device Expected to Insure Accuracy and Minimize Complaints.

Gas meters in New York are to be photographed by meter-readers in the future and the gas company believes by adopting this method it will insure an accuracy which it is hardly possible for the hand, eyes, and mind to attain in keeping such records.

A device has been invented for photographing the indicators of the gas meters. The readers will be equipped with a small camera and a spool of film, the entire outfit being not unlike the ordinary camera. The camera fits over the indicator in the gas meter and by pressing a button a flood of electric light is thrown on the dials and the exposure is made. The entire operation requires only a fraction of a second. A safety device prevents the making of double exposures so that the inexperienced meter reader will find little difficulty in snapping the photographs.

The readings will be made from the negatives by the bill clerk. Identification of each meter will be made by means of a numbered tag stuck on the side or below the dials which also will be contained in the photograph. The name of the new photographic meter-reading device is "factograph."

Miss Edith Colford.

Miss Edith Colford, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Jones Colford of 29 Hunter Avenue, Newport, R. I., died of pneumonia yesterday in this city, in her thirty-first year. She was born in Newport and until her illness two weeks ago was prominent in society and an active sportswoman. In addition to her parents she is survived by a brother. 1,100 ROOKIES WIN PRAISE FROM WOOD

Business Men's Regiment Amazes Army Commander by Drill on Plattsburg Plain.

PRESIDENT TO VISIT CAMP

Accepts Invitation to Inspect Recruits—Regiment May Come Here to Disband.

Special to The New York Times.

PLATTSBURG, N. Y., Aug. 13.—The drill plain of the United States military instruction camp was the scene this afternoon of a manoeuvre which regular army officers said was one of the most remarkable exhibitions ever seen in this country. All of the 1,100 and more business and professional men, who are here undergoing military instruction, participated in the drill, and the skill and precision with which they executed commands involving both marching and the manual of arms was amazing. Three days ago at least ninety of every hundred of these men were "greenhorns" pure and simple so far as military training is concerned, yet after less than three days' instruction they were able this afternoon to go into the field fully equipped and give an exhibition that would have done credit to a regular army organization.

The men drilled to music for the first time. The splendid massed band of the Thirtieth United States Infantry stood in front of the headquarters tent of Captain Dorey, the camp commander, and played stirring marches, to the accompaniment of which the bankers, lawyers, brokers, artists, authors, diplomats, journalists, doctors, and others who make up the enlisted personnel of the regiment performed military evolutions involving not only the squad and platoon but full company formations.

General Wood, seated in a big Government automobile, watched the drill from the edge of the drill plain. Rarely did his gaze stray from the remarkable picture of the plain before him. Never in his long military career, he said later, had he seen anything that could surpass it, when the short period of instruction and the previous knowledge of the men were taken into consideration.

"It represents progress the like of which I have never known," General Wood remarked as company after company, marching in perfect alignment, wheeled and turned, marched by fours and by platoons and by companies, every command executed quickly and correctly. Here and there a late comer would falter now and then, but these were the rare instances.

The drill followed immediately after retreat. The companies in full marching order, with the exception of the forty-pound infantry packs, formed in their company streets and as the last strains of the "Star-Spangled Banner" died away at the conclusion of the sunset ceremony, the company commanders gave the command: "Fours right, march!" As one, it seemed, the eight big companies wheeled into the battalion highways and headed for the grass plain on the shore of Lake Champlain. The head of the Thirtieth Infantry struck up, "It's a Long Way to Tipperary."

Company H reached the drill plain first, its men appearing in platoon formation, their marching lines straight and natural, each man with gun at right shoulder. Then came Company A with Mayor Mitchel in the first four, for this company came on the plain marching as fours. The other six companies followed in quick succession and in less than four minutes after retreat the entire regiment was on the drill plain. From end to end of the plain they marched, the officers using "whistle signals" instead of vocal commands. Captain Joseph H. Herron, Second Cavalry, U. S. A., whose squadron will arrive tomorrow from Ausable Chasm, rode into camp just as the companies marched out of their streets. Captain Lincoln C. Andrews of the Fifth Cavalry, the senior instructor of cavalry tactics here, greeted Herron and walked with him to the edge of the drill field.

"Come with me, Herron," said Andrews, "and I will show you the most wonderful sight you ever witnessed," and when it was all over Herron admitted that the sight was exactly what Andrews had said it would be.

"I never dreamed that such a thing could be accomplished in so short a time," said Captain Herron, who is a former Adjutant of the Military Academy at West Point. As the drill ended the companies swept by General Wood's automobile, marching in company front formation.

President to Review Troops.

Immediately after the drill it was announced that an invitation had been extended to President Wilson to come to Plattsburg and witness the work of the command, and that he had accepted the invitation. He is expected here in the last week of instruction. Secretary of War Lindley M. Garrison, Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels, and Major Gen. Hugh L. Scott, the Chief of the General Staff, also will be invited. Others who will receive invitations are ex-Secretaries of War Elihu Root, Henry L. Stimson, Luke E. Wright, and Jacob M. Dickinson, Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, Major Gen. John F. O'Ryan, commanding the National Guard Division of New York; the regimental commanders of the various New York regiments, Cornelius Vanderbilt, General Robert Shaw Oliver, George W. Wickersham, and the following Presidents of universities and colleges: Hadley of Yale, Lowell of Harvard, Hibben of Princeton, Denny of Alabama, Hutchins of Michigan, Wheeler of California, Schurman of Cornell, James of Illinois, and Drinker of Lehigh; Colonel C. M. Townsley, the Superintendent of West Point; Dr. John H. Finley, State Commissioner of Education, and Assistant Secretary of War Breckinridge. All who accept the invitations are expected here in the final week of the camp.

It was also announced this afternoon that a suggestion to disband the regiment in New York on Labor Day instead of disbanding here on the preceding day was under serious consideration. The plan is to take the entire regiment to New York on special trains, arriving at the Grand Central Terminal about 10 o'clock in the morning. Then the regiment, every man in uniform, carrying his full field equipment, will parade down Fifth Avenue to Twenty-third Street and thence to the Battery and to Governors Island, where the command will dismand.

There was no cessation of work at the camp today. There are no afternoons off, and even at night the men spend most of their time in listening to lectures on military science by officers of the regular army. They were to have listened to a talk on modern field artillery tonight, but a hard rain that came up shortly after supper caused a postponement until tomorrow night.

The first of two aeroplanes that are to be employed in the instruction of the recruits arrived today. It will be operated by J. C. Milliman. In working out the big war problems in the final period of the camp Milliman and another aviator will do the aerial reconoitring and endeavor to discover the masked regular batteries against which the civilian soldiers will operate.

About a mile south of the camp, in a big open field, the cavalry instruction is being given. The men in their preliminary work ride in rings. There are five big rings in the field, which give it the appearance of a deserted circus arena. The cavalry instruction was not prolonged today, as many of the new troopers were not so agile today as they were before yesterday's training.

Chevrons for Four.

Malcolm Stevenson, the polo player; William J. Clothier, the tennis player; Willard Straight of J. P. Morgan & Co., and Victor Mather were named acting Sergeants of Cavalry this afternoon. They are all experienced horsemen.

Sergt. Straight said in one of the few brief resting periods that the stock of the camp has gone up three points already.

"After three days of work such as we have had, which, despite its rigor and thoroughness, we have thoroughly enjoyed," Mr. Straight said, "the members of this camp realize that what General Wood said about the impossibility of training an army overnight is true in every sense of the word. We are grinding out things that we never dreamed existed, and we know now what they mean when army officers and others who know plead for a betterment of the national defense system. Personally I have been kept so busy that I have not even had time to read a newspaper or even write to my wife. You can appreciate the truthfulness of this statement when you remember that they are trying to give us in one month what it takes the regulars six months or more to learn.

Corporal Dudley Field Malone said that he had never worked so hard in his life.

"But I am enjoying every minute of it," he added, "and I want to tell you that this job of being a Corporal is the hardest thing I have ever tackled."

"How about the food?" the Collector was asked.

"Mighty plain and simple, but also mighty wholesome and good," he replied. "Couldn't be better."

Some of the late comers who were being drilled in the "awkward squads" in their eagerness to catch on quick and get in the companies have made some errors. In one of the squads a sergeant explained the command to present arms. He then gave the command and two of the rookies slowly and laboriously tried to execute it.

"Throw your guns away from your bodies," said the Sergeant quickly.

Two guns shot in the air and landed ten feet away. The "rookies" took the Sergeant at his word and when some of their comrades gibed them about their error one of them retorted, "Well, why didn't he tell us to hold on to them?"

New Recruits in Camp.

Many new faces appeared in the awkward squads this afternoon. Among them were Richard Harding Davis, Stanwood Menken, President of the National Security League; Travis H. Whitney, Secretary of the Public Service Commission in New York; J. P. Hogan of the Board of Water Supply, Commissioner of Weights and Measures Joseph P. Hartigan, and W. H. Perry of the Department of Bridges. Public Service Commissioner William Hayward will enlist tomorrow.

General Wood is going to New York for the week-end tomorrow. He will visit the artillery camp at Tobyhanna, Penn., on Monday before returning to the camp. General Wood said this afternoon that his remarks concerning the volunteer method of raising an army without reason had been construed in some quarters as a reflection on the National Guard. Nothing of the sort was intended, he said, and he added that under the law the National Guard was a part of the regular land defenses of the nation and would come into service on the same basis as the regular army in the event of trouble.

It was said today that if any man in camp desired to withdraw he first would have to submit his application to his company commander, who would forward it through regular channels to the proper authorities. The reason for the resignation would be given in the papers, with a record of the man's service, and this would be filed in the War Department at Washington. Nobody here, however, has any idea of quitting, and so the pigeon holes reserved for such papers are doomed to remain empty.

Men in Fine Condition.

The recruits in camp are in splendid physical condition. Up to date not one single case of illness has been reported. The only empty tent in camp is the big hospital tent.

"I have never seen a healthier body of men," said Captain Darby, the chief surgeon, this afternoon, "and I have never seen any who took better care of themselves or were more temperate in their habits."

The recruits will have an opportunity tomorrow to be inoculated against typhoid fever. No man will be compelled to undergo inoculation, but it was said tonight that practically every man in camp would submit.

The danger of typhoid is reduced to a minimum by the camp sanitary officers by a careful inspection and regulation of the water supply, but no camp officer can be sure of the water and milk a man drinks when not in camp.

It was said tonight that Mayor Mitchel had not yet received a summons to attend the meeting of the Board of Estimate on next Thursday. If the Mayor is compelled to leave camp he will return as soon as possible.

For the first time today several of the companies of recruits had sub-calibre target practice preliminary to the real work on the ranges next week. Ammunition of .22 calibre was used and the distance was about fifty feet. The targets were small and the proportions were such as to represent practice with the larger calibre of the Springfields at a distance of 200 yards and more. Two of the New York policemen made perfect scores. They were Inspector Bolan and Sergeant Goss.

FOR A VETERAN RESERVE.

Plan to be Offered at Former Soldiers' Convention.

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 13.—Lieut. Col. Robert S. Woodside left this city today with the Adjutant General's staff of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States to open headquarters for the national encampment in Detroit which opens on Monday.

Delegates from insular possessions and the Canal Zone are to be present. The country's foreign relations and the possible part that the veterans of the campaigns in Cuba, Porto Rico, China, and the Philippines again may be called upon to play will be discussed.

W. S. Voorsanger of this city will offer a plan for the organization of a veteran reserve, by the enlistment of several hundred thousand veterans of the campaigns of the last two decades as well as of the thousands of former enlisted men of the regular army.

DEFENSE TALK POSTPONED.

President Will Take Up the Matter Next Week.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—President Wilson has postponed discussion of the national defense question with Secretaries Garrison and Daniels until next week. Mr. Garrison is away for the week-end. The President will confer with Rear Admiral Benson, Chief of Operations, when he sees Secretary Daniels next week. He will not pass upon the war and navy estimates, however, until he has conferred with the Chairman of the Congressional Committee.

Secretary Daniels declared today there was an overwhelming sentiment in the country generally for large increases in submarines and aircraft.

"The people in inland States particularly seem to have come to the conclusion that there should be large increases in submarines and aeroplanes for our naval defenses," said Secretary Daniels. "Many of our citizens, who do not mean to attach that importance to dreadnoughts which naval experts do, or who doubt the navy judgment of the dreadnoughts, are satisfied that the next naval program should provide for liberal expenditure for under-sea ships and aircraft."

HUNTINGTON FUND IN COURT

Trustee Asks a Ruling on Bequest to Nephew Now Dead.

Surrogate Cohalan was asked yesterday by the Union Trust Company, trustee under the will of Collis P. Huntington, the railroad builder, who died on Aug. 13, 1900, to decide what to do with a trust fund of $30,000, left for the life benefit of Mr. Huntington's nephew, Collis H. Sammis and the latter's wife, Clara L., both of whom are dead.

The will directed that the fund be distributed to the children of the two beneficiaries upon the death of the latter, but none survive them. The trust company wants to know whether the fund shall be placed in the residuary estate or given over to all of Mr. Huntington's next of kin.

COHALAN DECISION DISCUSSES GIANTS

Says Players Can't Always Be Contenders in the World's Championship Series.

UPHOLDS BRUSH APPRAISAL

Surrogate Holds $265 a Share Is a Fair Valuation on Stock of the Baseball Company.

The 1,300 shares of the stock of the National Exhibition Company, which owns the New York Giants, was properly fixed at a valuation of $265 a share, or a total of $346,000 by the Transfer Tax Appraiser in assessing the estate of John T. Brush, President of the company, which held that amount of the stock, according to a decision of Surrogate Cohalan handed down yesterday.

State Controller Travis had appealed to the Surrogate from the appraisal, asserting that the stock was of much greater value. The decision reads in part:

"The principal items upon which the said valuation appears to have been based was the lease of the playing grounds used by the said company and the earning power of the company. The appraiser, Mr. Day, has sworn that said lease is of no value except as used for its present purpose. I think his conclusion is correct.

"While the earning power of the company for the years 1910, 1911, and 1912 shows a large return upon the capital invested. I find this return is by no means certain, for the reason that it is made up largely of the money paid by the public to see the post-season games called 'Worlds Championship Series.'"

While the Surrogate did not mention it, baseball fans who read the decision called attention to the fact that practically all receipts of the first four games of a world's series go to the players. The Surrogate's decision continued:

"The New York Baseball Club, the popular name for the said company, cannot in the very nature of things be a certain contender in this series every year, no more than any of the other seven clubs of the National League circuit. Hence the financial returns, as a result of being a participant in the world's championship series, are so completely speculative that they must be entirely left out of consideration in analyzing the earning power of the said company."

The Surrogate also declines to hold that the valuation of 899,498 placed upon the 996 shares of the When Clothing Company, held by the estate, is inadequate.

CHANCE FOR TRADE IN CHINA

British Effort to Shut Off Germany Opens Opportunity to Our Mills.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—The effort of the British Government to shut German firms out of the Chinese cotton-print trade seems likely to offer a great opportunity for American mills, Consul General Anderson, at Hongkong, in a report to the Department of Commerce, says that the German trade is virtually ruined throughout China by the new order.

German jobbers control the great bulk of the trade in cotton-print goods coming from England, and the stuffs are made with their particular "chop" on it, so that the Chinese are now entirely habituated to this line of goods and look for it as it meets their wants in quality, designs, and price. So it is that the British piece goods dominate the Chinese market, but the goods go through the hands of German firms.

If the Germans are not to be allowed to sell the English goods, the English firms must undertake to get the trade, which means that they must devise and use a new "chop" and work it up all over the empire to catch the imagination of the Chinese.

In the meantime the Germans are casting about to see if they cannot get in touch with cotton manufacturers in neutral countries and secure from them the style and quality of cheap goods that they have heretofore been getting in England and so retain their trade until the war passes by.

Mr. Anderson takes the view that British firms cannot hold the trade, or even get any appreciable part of it, and that the German firms will be able to hold it and get their stocks from neutral countries. Large orders are already going forward to the United States and elsewhere. Mr. Anderson believes that the British mills may completely lose their Far Eastern trade if Americans are prompt to seize the opportunity.

FINDS TWO DIAMOND PINS.

Lawyer Recovers Wife's Jewels and Another's in Theatre Lobby.

Mortimer H. Hess, a lawyer with offices at 160 Broadway, was witnessing the performance of the "Follies" in the New Amsterdam Theatre Thursday night with Mrs. Hess when she noticed that she had lost a diamond bar pin valued at $700. Mr. Hess notified the management and immediately began a search in the lobby and foyer, assisted by his chauffeur.

In the foyer Mr. Hess found a diamond and pearl pin of considerable value. This did not deter him from his search, which he continued till he found his wife's pin in the long lobby leading from Forty-second Street to the auditorium. He then notified Malcolm Douglas, manager of the New Amsterdam, of his find, leaving his address in case a claimant for the other pin should appear.

DROPS DEAD ON ELEVATED.

Unidentified Man Pronounced a Victim of Heart Disease.

A man fell dead from heart disease last night as a Third Avenue elevated train in which he was riding pulled out of the uptown Ninety-ninth Street station. At the 106th Street stop an ambulance was sent for. The body was taken to the Morgue.

The man was about 35 years old, 5 feet 8 inches in height, and weighed 200 pounds. He wore a black suit, black low shoes, and black socks. In his pockets were $33, but no papers by which he could be identified were found.

Referee Reports That Goldstein Has $118,215 In His Possession.

Judge Learned Hand, in the United States District Court, yesterday, ordered Abraham Goldstein, a manufacturer of waterproof compounds of 5 East 108th Street, who went into bankruptcy on Dec. 7, 1914, to pay $20,109 to Solomon Bonaparte, Trustee for the creditors of the bankrupt firm.

The referee in the bankruptcy proceedings reported that Goldstein had in his possession $118,215.

Mrs. Annie B. Ernst has asked the police to look for her husband, August A. Ernst, 56 years old, who kept a hotel in Cypress and Cooper Avenue, Glendale, L. I. He disappeared on Tuesday evening last, and later told Mrs. Ernst by telephone that he was going to jump off a ferryboat.

CUT IN COAL RATES UNJUST, SAYS LOREE

Decided Through Hearings Not Attended by Commission, D. & H. President Declares.

ACT CALLED CONFISCATORY

Coal Receipts, Mr. Loree Says, Are Less Than for Other Freights—How the Roads Are Hit.

Men connected with the anthracite carrying railroads expressed disappointment yesterday over the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission affecting coal freight rates. The decision was called unfair, unjust, discriminating, and even confiscatory by various men interviewed.

L. F. Loree, President of the Delaware and Hudson Company, which all agree is the one hardest hit, gave out a statement in which he said:

"The officers of the carriers affected and the owners of their bonds and shares believe that their interests would have received more adequate consideration had the commission found it convenient for its members to hear the evidence in person, and had they not relied upon an incomplete and unsatisfactory synopsis of the testimony submitted by subordinates.

"If Congress has so multiplied the commission's duties that personal attention to such important investigations is not possible, it is desirable that Congress and the public should be fully aware of the fact. It is not right that the great property interests of the railways should be at the mercy of the commission's subordinates.

"In 1907, the road's best year, the net income was only 7.41 per cent. of the cost of their properties, though the commission denies that costs were ascertainable. In 1914, the road's worst year, the net income was only 5.06 per cent.

"Omitting the Pennsylvania system, the total gross receipts of the other anthracite railways in 1913 was $274,-593,886.96 and $85,618,436.88 of this aggregate, or 31.6 per cent., came from anthracite transportation. Therefore, to strike at the anthracite revenues is to strike at the very heart of their business. As they were built mainly to serve the anthracite industry, such an attack must impair the very foundations of their existence.

"Although the date when there will be no more anthracite to move is visible and calculable and, particularly in the northern regions, is not far distant, no traffic to take its place is in sight or is likely to appear. This fact ought to be recognized in any determination of anthracite rates, for just rates must not only return a fair annual return upon present investment, but must safeguard the investment against this impending loss.

"Distance for distance, the present receipts per ton per mile from anthracite traffic do not exceed the average from other freight. The cost of producing anthracite is estimated to have increased on the average 39 cents a ton between 1905 and 1914, while the average wholesale price increased 38 cents. It is apparent, therefore, that the per ton margin between cost of production and returns from sales is smaller than when rates were lower.

"Sufficient time has not elapsed since the receipt of the complete opinion to ascertain its full effect on the earnings of the carriers. It seems probable, however, that the opinion will affect not only the receipts of the anthracite carriers who were parties to the proceeding, but will also affect the receipts of all roads handling anthracite coal, and if so it will affect practically all roads in trunk line territory.

"It is possible that the total loss of revenue will be greater than the aggregate increase granted to all the carriers in the Eastern rate case. The newspapers have been inclined to feel that the railroads were receiving great benefits at the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is quite evident that their disposition is to 'give it in drops and take in bucketfuls.'"

The bitterest comment came from a man who had followed the case through all the hearings. He held that the decision put the Interstate Commerce Commission in an embarrassing situation, and that the only way out was to grant a rehearing.

"The country heard with pleasure last year," he said, "that the Eastern railroads were to get a 5 per cent. increase in freight rates. The people should not forget that that increase did not apply to coal. It applied only to general merchandise. In the case of the coal carrying roads this increase applied, on the average, to only one-half of their gross business. There was general rejoicing over the business sense and the broadmindedness of the Commission.

"Now, out of a blue sky there comes this thunderbolt. In one drive the proceeds from carrying coal are cut by 10 per cent. Is it clear to the public that this applied to only one-half of the total business of the coal-carrying roads? Is it clear that this cut of 10 per cent. not only wipes out the beneficent 5 per cent. increase but imposes a fine of 5 per cent?

No Appeal But to Public.

"The Commission has absolutely contradicted itself. A few months ago it gave us a slap on the back and now it pounds us hard, and there is no appeal from the decision except to public opinion."

The estimated cut of $8,000,000, as given in the Washington dispatches, is very roughly estimated; according to railroad men. The cut, under the new schedule, may actually be a million more, or a million less. It would be impossible, it was said yesterday, to make exact estimates of the loss which each of the railroad systems must stand if the new rates go into effect.

It appears from the incomplete estimates, however, that the Delaware & Hudson will fare worst. Nearly all of its coal goes to points north and northeast, and the biggest cuts are on rates to these interior points, including Windsor, Nineveh, Oneonta, Albany, and Troy. Where the old rate from the mines to Windsor, for instance, was $1.65 a ton for prepared sizes, the new rate is only 85 cents. On a gross business of more than 9,000,000 tons it is estimated that the Delaware & Hudson must lose from $2,000,000 to $2,500,000 under the new schedule. After paying the usual 9 per cent. dividends on its stock last year there was remaining less than $800,-000. It was contended yesterday that the rates, unless adjusted, would amount to confiscation in this case.

The Central Railroad of New Jersey and the Philadelphia & Reading will probably come in for the second hardest blow. All of their coal shipments go east. There is a reduction of only 5 cents on the rate to tidewater, but there are reductions of from 15 to 35 cents to points like Elizabeth and Somerville, N. J. It was estimated yesterday that the joint roads with about 10,000,000 anthracite tonnage would lose not less than $1,500,000 a year.

The Delaware, Lackawanna & Western will probably come next with a loss estimated at $1,000,000 a year. The Lackawanna is blessed in that it ships east, west, and north. While it loses 75 cents a ton on shipments to Binghamton, there is a cut of only 15 cents to tidewater. It can average its losses where the Delaware & Hudson cannot.

It is probable that the Erie will also lose $1,000,000 a year. The biggest cut on the Erie is 35 cents a ton to Middletown, but the cut to Rochester is only 15. Moreover, a recent ruling affecting the rate from the mines to Chicago is considered very favorable to the Erie, and it is likely that the losses, when offset by the gains from the Chicago rate, will amount to only $500,000. The commission did not change the Chicago rate.

Down at the bottom of the list are the Pennsylvania and the Lehigh Valley. Estimates for the Pennsylvania were not available, but the losses are not likely to exceed $500,000. The Lehigh Valley's losses, it is expected, will be even less than $500,000, though they have been estimated as high as $1,200,-000. The Lehigh Valley is in a fortunate position in that it ships its coal to the West for the most part, and, therefore, suffers the smallest reductions. Last year's anthracite tonnage amounted to nearly 15,000,000 tons, and the coal business of the road last year was about 56 per cent. of its total freight business.

In criticism of the Interstate Commerce Commission's decision, it was recalled yesterday that only one of the commissioners had actually heard testimony in the rate case, and this commissioner, it was pointed out, had sat only two days. The whole case, it was contended, was the work of an examiner who had been employed by the commission.

Work of an Investigator.

The history of the preparation of the rate case shows that Franklin P. Lane, then one of the commissioners, instituted the proceedings in 1912 in the absence of a formal complaint. When Mr. Lane went into the Cabinet as Secretary of the Interior, John Marble, who had been attorney for the commission, was made a member. It was Mr. Marble who sat through two days of the hearing. He died suddenly after serving these two days. Then Silas W. Smith of Washington, the attorney who had started the prosecution of the case before Commissioner Marble, was asked by the commission to act as examiner. Mr. Smith took about 9,000 pages of testimony. While the railroad men interviewed did not personally criticise Mr. Smith they held that it would have been better if the case had been handled directly by the commission and not by a lawyer who had formerly served in the capacity of prosecutor.

A significant paragraph in the dissenting opinion of Commissioner Harlan was pointed out by several railroad men as representing the view of the railroads. This paragraph read:

"In my judgment the record before us here justifies a modification of many of the present rates, but for the future a rate structure on anthracite coal based on the general standard of the Meecker case, surcharged, so fare as that would result in a reasonable rate schedule, with the 5 per cent. increase that has been imposed in the 5 per cent. case upon substantially all other traffic in official classification territory would seem to be a more consistent disposition of the case."

The Meecker case was brought against the Lehigh Valley Railroad by a shipper who contended that a Western rate was too high. The commission lowered the rate from $1.85 to $1.40 a ton. It was regarded as significant that in the new decision this very rate was raised to $1.45. Under the earlier decision, however, the lower rate will prevail for two years.

SEES ONLY $1,600,000 CUT.

Commission Calls Roads' Reduced Income "Bookkeepers" Loss.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—While $8,-000,000 is a fair estimate of the loss of revenue through the coal rate decision, according to the books of railroad companies, the Interstate Commerce Commission does not think the actual loss to the roads will be more than about $1,-600,000 a year.

The amount of $8,000,000 is called a bookkeeper's loss on the 71,000,000 tons of anthracite annually transported. The commission finds that 80 per cent. of the coal affected is shipped by coal companies, most of which it says are owned outright by the roads. In other words, any loss the roads might feel from reduced tariffs will be offset by the increased earnings of the coal companies they control, so that only on 20 per cent. of the coal, or about 15,000,000 tons, would the reduction act as a real loss to the roads.

A report that the commission had decided to refer to the Department of Justice its findings as to the improper practices of certain of the roads appeared this afternoon to be unfounded. As a matter of fact, many of the specific abuses have already been called to the attention of the Department of Justice, and some of them are now in court.

The impropriety of the percentage contract of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Company with the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Coal Company has already been established by the Supreme Court. Somewhat the same subject is involved in the so-called Reading case, on which the Government lost in the District Court, but which has been applied to the Supreme Court. The Lehigh Valley case now in the Supreme Court brings up points along the same lines.

The ultimate fate of these cases may have a bearing on yesterday's order, though the rates fixed will become effective before the Supreme Court's opinion can be handed down.

Whether yesterday's decision will give the ultimate consumer cheaper coal is doubted here. The greatest reduction is only 35 cents a ton, and it is believed that most, if not all, of this will be absorbed by the retailers. Large consumers buying direct from the mines might, however, be benefited.

CAR JUMPS TRACK; MAKES 150,000 WALK

Accident on Brooklyn Bridge During Rush Hour Ties Up Train Traffic 8 Hours.

TERRIFIED WOMEN RESCUED

Policemen Carry Them Over Wrecked Ties to Roadway—Sparks Scorched Woodwork.

One of the six cars of a Fifth Avenue elevated train from Bay Ridge, Brooklyn, was derailed on the Brooklyn Bridge at the beginning of the rush hours yesterday morning at a point 200 feet west of the Manhattan tower, causing the longest and most serious interruption to traffic in the history of the structure. It was eight hours before trains moved on schedules. None of the passengers in the crowded cars was hurt. All the passengers escaped from the cars or were assisted to the north trolley tracks after the third-rail current had been turned off. Probably 150,000 were forced to walk during the tie-up.

The train had passed through the arch of the Manhattan tower and was over South Street when the wheels of the rear truck of the second car left the rails. The derailed wheels swung toward the north side of the bride, tearing the hood of the third rail to the short block to Front Street and nearly half way to Water Street. After it bumped along the ties for 200 feet the motorman stopped the train within a block of the Franklin Square elevated station.

Pieces of the broken ties and the woodwork dropped to the streets a hundred feet below, and on the roofs of the buildings under the bridge. After the train stopped there were flashes of sparks from the third rail, which scorched the side of the derailed car and shot down many feet beneath it. This danger was soon ended by the towerman at the Manhattan terminal, who ordered the power shut off.

The position of the car terrified the passengers, as the derailed car tilted at one end as the truck swung around and became jammed against the ironwork which encloses the tracks between the terminal approaches, throwing many of the men and women toward the lower end of the car.

The cars were so packed with passengers that it was impossible for a stampede to doors or windows. For a few minutes the terrified women and girls struggled to reach the doors, fearing that the derailed car had caused such damage to the structure that there was danger of it dropping through the broken bridge supports. Many of the women were shouting and screaming when Sergeant Joseph O'Reilly and ten policemen of the Bridge Squad went to their assistance.

While the policemen were assisting the women and girls to the trolley tracks and from there to the north roadway of the bridge, many of the men climbed through the windows from the cars. They reached out to the iron work and drew themselves to its support, from which they stepped to the trolley tracks on a level with the roadway.

Trains on all the elevated lines were held up for a distance of two miles at the Brooklyn end, and the trolley service was soon overcrowded by the rush from the blocked elevated lines. It was 3 o'clock in the afternoon, or nearly nine hours after the accident, before the tracks were repaired and the damaged car removed so that trains could move. The police permitted vehicular traffic to use the north and south roadways at 10 o'clock.

An hour after the accident a Graham Avenue surface car, bound to Brooklyn, was derailed at the Sands Street approach to the Brooklyn Bridge, which caused a half-hour delay in the trolley service until it was replaced on the rails.

Chief Engineer Byrne of the Bridge Commission found that one of the supporting steel pillars of the promenade had been bent by the impact of the derailed car. He said this column would have to be replaced. It was spliced and strengthened temporarily.

J. J. Dempsey, Superintendent of the elevated system of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, said that his inspection of the broken truck showed that a defective wheel had caused the accident. The flange of one of the four wheels was broken, causing it to slip from the north rail.

COMMODITIES MARKETS

WHEAT.

The wheat market was very much disturbed by reports that foreign buyers had been canceling previous purchases. This was construed to mean that Europe was anticipating some bearish development in connection with political conditions there. Longs sold heavily and prices were weak and lower, closing with net losses of 1⅝@3⅜c. In the local cash market No. 2 red Winter wheat was quoted at $1.20, cost, insurance, and freight, New York, spot; No. 2 hard, $1.21, cost, insurance, and freight, New York, to arrive; No. 1 Northern Duluth, $1.11⅝, and No. 1 Northern Manitoba, $1.09½, cost, insurance, and freight, Buffalo.

CORN.

The corn market was influenced by the break in wheat, and while the volume of business was not large, prices were easy, closing with net losses of ⅝@⅞c. The Liverpool market was lower owing to easier Plate offers and on Argentine shipments of 4,376,-000 bushels, compared with 2,631,000 last year. In the local cash market No. 2 yellow corn was quoted at 80½c, prompt shipment.

OATS.

The market for oats was weak and lower under active selling prompted by the decline in wheat. Stop loss orders were uncovered and final quotations, while slightly above the lowest, were ⅝@1¼c net lower. The local cash market was steady; standard quoted at 60½c; No. 2 white, 70c; No. 3 white, 69c; No. 4 white, 68½c; fancy clipped, white, 70@75c; ordinary clipped white, 69@72c, all elevator.

PROVISIONS.

The provision market was moderately active and irregular, and after some sharp price changes both ways values developed a steady tone late in the day, with covering and some evidences of support from packers. Receipts of hogs at Chicago were 13,000; estimated for Saturday, 9,000. Kansas City received 2,500 and Omaha 12,500.

COFFEE.

The coffee market was moderately active, with sales of 60,500 bags. At the outset a very steady undertone prevailed, and first prices were unchanged to 3 points higher, with further buying of December by the same interests which were on the buying side on Thursday. The local cash market was steady, with a little better demand, and Rio 7s were quoted at 7c.

SUGAR.

Futures opened steady, 1 point higher to 3 points lower, with sales on the call 1,650 tons. After the opening certain leading operators temporarily withdrew support and prices on active months dropped over 20 points, catching stop orders on the decline. In the early afternoon a little covering caused prices to gain a few points from the low level, but before the close further pressure sent prices back, and the market closed 16 to 22 points net lower, with sales for the day 9,550 tons. TO DROP JERSEY CHARTER.

American Wool Company Objects to "Seven Sisters" Laws.

The American Woolen Company will relinquish shorly its New Jersey charter and be reincorporated under the laws of Massachusetts. It was learned yesterday that the change had been under contemplation for some time, and that the decision had been hastened by the "Seven Sisters" laws of of New Jersey which, the officials assert, make the possession of a New Jersey charter onerous to the stockowners.

"Massachusetts laws, under the pressure of constant agitation by business interests," said a statement issued yesterday in the company's interests, "have recently been made more favorable in many respects to large business undertakings holding its charters, at the same time that New Jersey laws have become less favorable.

"A considerable proportion of the stockholders of the American Woolen Company are residents of Massachusetts, where these great mills are taxed, while the capital stock held by these Massachusetts residents is taxed also. This is in effect an onerous double taxation, which will no longer have to be borne when the American Woolen Company becomes a Massachusetts corporation. The relief of so great a proportion of the entire American Woolen stock from double taxation in Massachusetts cannot but affect favorably the base securities as a whole, and thereby bring substantial benefit to stockholders resident in other States."

The company is capitalized at $60,-000,000, and owns sixteen plants, all in Massachusetts. The executive offices have always been in Boston.

SUBWAY CONTRACT IN COURT

Justice Delehanty Grants Alternative Writ Again City.

Supreme Court Justice Delehanty granted an alternative writ of mandamus yesterday requiring the city to execute the contract of the Holbrook, Cabot & Rollins Corporation as the lowest bidders for the construction of the Times Square section of the Broadway Subway, or show cause why it should not do so. The writ was granted without argument upon the application of Thomas F. Conway, attorney for the company.

The writ grows out of the action of the Board of Estimate in refusing to approve the contract unless the clause permitting the payment for extra work in a lump sum was eliminated.

Members of the Public Service Commission and Acting Mayor McAneny say the legal proceedings will indefinitely delay subway work. On the other hand Controller Prendergast and other members of the Board of Estimate think the contracting firm has no standing in court and that the matter can be settled by the Public Service Commission readvertising the contract. The Public Service Commission gave out this statement:

"The action of the Board of Estimate being legally equivalent to a refusal of consent, makes it manifestly impossible for the commission to execute any contracts and matters must, therefore, be held in abeyance until the courts show a way out of the difficulty."

187 AUTO DRIVERS FINED.

Caught in Woods's Campaign Against Violators of Traffic Rules.

One hundred and eighty-seven violators of traffic regulations were caught in the net spread by Police Commissioner Woods throughout Manhattan, and were fined various amounts in Yorkville Court yesterday by Magistrate Krotel.

The highest fine imposed was $100, meted out to Charles A. Richards, a contractor of Rye, N. Y., for running an automobile recklessly in Second Avenue near Fifty-fourth Street. The lowest fine was $1, imposed on Roger Thompson of 263 West 130th Street, who figured as a chauffeur in Thaw's escape from Matteawan, for having a smoking machine at Fifth Avenue and Fifty-seventh Street.

Many were fined $25 for such offences as speeding, passing street cars at corners within the eight-foot limit, carrying dazzling lights and having smoking machines.

Motorcycle patrolmen appeared against the defendants, and every man who had been summoned was fined. One-third of the total were fined for speeding.

A Late Coat and Suit Business.

The opinion is generally expressed in the coat and suit trade that a large duplicate Fall business is to be expected. Buyers, in their initial orders, have only "nibbled." It is said, and the heavy purchases will come later on. The difficulty which will confront the retailers later in the season will be to get desirable merchandise at reasonable prices, for a "seller's market" is regarded as almost certain. Why the retailers are holding back their orders is a mystery to many manufacturers in the trade, as the style situation has become well defined, and there is no sign of a marked change in the trend of fashion.

Brisk Demand for Pile Fabrics.

The present brisk demand here for pile fabrics is not due so much to the cutting off of foreign supplies of this sort as it is to the style tendency, which favors such goods. Garment manufacturers who need velvets and plushes are willing to pay advances in order to get them. Striped plushes in cord effects, in all cotton, cotton and silk, or all silk, lead in the current demand. Stripes have been well taken also in two-toned effects. The best colors are the darker shades of brown, green, navy and battleship gray. Black is good, too. Cord designs in stripes of different sizes are favored. In stripes of wool and silk, the wool produces a "frieszy" effect with the pile plush of silk that is very attractive.

French China Going Up.

A horizontal raise of about 10 per cent. on all French goods is announced, according to the Crockery and Glass Journal, and a well-known local French concern is this week mailing the notification to its customers. The increase has been expected, and that it is not greater is something of a surprise. For some time back various importers have been adding 10 per cent. to their invoices to cover extra freight charges and war risks, and in some cases certain patterns were advanced from 5 to 10 per cent. The present raise, however, is on the price of the goods here. Other importers of French wares will probably take like action in the immediate future.

More Brazilian Beef Arrives.

Interest is being shown by the local provision trades in the experiment, recently begun, of importing dressed beef into this country from Brazil. A shipment of 100 tons of Brazilian beef was received about a week ago at this port, and yesterday another hundred tons was being unloaded from the Minas Geraes of the Lloyd Brazileiro Line. This shipment was consigned to the Sulzberger & Sons Company, and was made by the Continental Produce Company of San Paulo. It is said that the beef is of very good quality, and it is thought by those interested in the experiment that a fairly large business can be developed in the importation of Brazilian meat.

Can Get Government Books Here.

E. C. Porter, agent in charge of the local office of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, said yesterday that there appears to be a misunderstanding in some quarters regarding the supplying of merchants with copies of publications issued by the Department of Commerce on foreign trade, and other subjects. While publications of this kind are to be had by applying to the Superintendent of Public Documents, Washington, the branch office here is liberally supplied with copies. These may be purchased at the regular stated price, thus obviating the necessity of sending small sums to Washington. Applications should be made to Room 409, Custom House.

Crude Rubber Values Dropping.

Under the continued lack of action on the part of buyers, crude rubber prices in this market are weakening slowly. The influence of an easier feeling in London is also said to be contributing to the present infirm position of prices here, but the chief reason seems to be the one given first. Buyers are willing enough to contract ahead if they can get rubber at prices that suit their ideas, but the present holders are not exerting enough selling pressure to force values down to that point. Stocks are said to be fairly liberal here, and, if true, this fact is not very conducive to higher prices. Up-river fine was quoted here yesterday at 57 cents a pound, spot, while the leading plantation grades, smoked sheets and pale crêpe, were each held at 61½@62 cents a pound.

Cotton Goods Exports Improve.

Exporters of cotton goods in this market report an increasing demand for their wares of late, especially from the Latin-American countries and the West Indies. The failure of the Chinese demand to materialize to any extent, however, has proved a disappointment to this end of the cotton goods trade. The lack of demand from India is also deplored, but this would practically be overlooked if the Chinese buyers would get busy. A nice business is coming from the antipodes on sheetings and colored cottons. Manila is buying well, too, but business on colored goods generally is hindered by the lack of coloring matter available here. Reports of the business coming from the Red Sea district conflict. Some exporters say that they are doing a fair sheeting business with the market, while others complain that orders from that part of the world are scarce.

Laces and Embroideries.

While the buying of laces in this market has improved somewhat of late, reports from the trade indicate that there is a great deal still to be desired. The impression gained from them is not that business in laces will not be good, but that it will hardly prove as good as was indicated some months ago. In some quarters it is said that later buying than usual will be the rule, though no really good reasons are advanced to back up this statement. At present the best business seems to be doing on net tops, the lighter Venises, and gold, silver and tinsel laces. Embroidery buying has been spotted so far, and not altogether satisfactory. The manufacturing trades are taking these goods much better, it is said, than the retailers. Embroidered organdies, voiles, batistes and marquisettes are among the favored goods. Higher prices are thought to be holding back retail buying to some extent.

Gray Goods Prices Firm.

A little firmer tone to printcloth prices developed in the local gray goods market yesterday. Buyers again wanted to get goods for delivery to the turn of the year at present prices, but the mills did not look with favor on this desire. Spot and nearby business was done on 39-inch 80 squares at 5⅝ cents, while similar orders were taken on 68-72s in that width at 4⅝ cents. Spot and nearby sales of 38-inch 64-60s, 60-52s, and 60-48s were reported at 3⅝, 3¾, and 3¼ cents, respectively. It was said that 2⅝-inch 64-60s were still available at 3⅜ cents for delivery to the end of the year, but it was thought more or less generally that if this was so, they were not being offered as freely as they were on Wednesday and Thursday. Not much was done on drills, but a pretty good sheeting business was reported in certain quarters. Four-yard goods were held as 4.70s and 5.50s, were asked for. Fancies continued to do well. Spot printcloth prices were:

39-inch, 80-85s	5⅝c	28½-inch, 64-56s	3⅜c

represents an opportunity which no investor can afford to neglect.

The record of the

is one of constant growth and a steady increase in dividends.

When the war broke out last year UNITED CIGAR STORES COMPANY of AMERICA proclaimed its confidence in future of this country by deciding upon a nation-wide extension of its business; thus setting the pace for the industrial revival which is now pervading every section of America.

The management has recently raised the quarterly dividend to a 7% basis, and just as we predicted several years ago that this would happen, we want to go on record now that has but scratched the surface of its possibilities, and that another substantial increase in dividends is bound to follow the marvelous expansion of its business. If you have in your strong-box, you are assured of two vital requisites:

1. Safety of Principal.
2. An Attractive Income.

Stocks Break on Anthracite Decision—English Credit Here Thought Imperative.

In the larger aspects of things the violent break in sterling exchange rates yesterday was the most important of the day's incidents in the financial district, and that notwithstanding the pronounced market effect of the decision reducing the rates on anthracite coal. Relatively that was a local matter of restricted influence; the influence of the further great decline in sterling extends to the future of our foreign commerce and bears importantly on much of the trade which has been adding recently to our trade balance.

The fall in sterling to close to 4.70 or 16 cents under the par of exchange means that it is becoming difficult for England to finance her purchases in her own behalf and in behalf of her allies in this market. If it becomes too difficult we will inevitably suffer in our trade or means will be adopted by Europe to pay us in our own securities. That might amount to a forced sale of hundreds of millions of our stock and bonds now held by Europe. It is a thing which we naturally want to avoid because of the effect which forced liquidation on such a scale might have on the position of our securities. The way out seems to be through a loan made to England on the pledge of those same stocks and bonds, and that is what the financial community here is now looking for. Preliminary steps in that direction seem already to have been taken.

The matter of a huge English credit in this market is under the most active consideration by bankers here. Only the form and proportions of the initial transaction seem to be in doubt. That a credit will be established is no longer questioned in Wall Street. The action of the sterling exchange market was accepted as removing any doubt that such a credit was necessary. And it is coming to be regarded as necessary or at all events as most desirable from our own point of view as well as from that of the English market. The viewpoint is that England is a very large customer and that in doing what we can to make it easy for her to buy here we are benefiting ourselves as well as our customer. Particularly would this be true were credit extended on the pledge of our own securites, or mainly on them. There are other considerations entering into the matter, but ths may be said to be the controlling consideration from the commercial viewpoint.

The stocks most directly affected by the decision reducing the freight rates on anthracite coal did yesterday what every one expected them to do, broke sharply at the opening of the market. The decision was not handed down until late Thursday afternoon and therefore was not a factor in that day's trading. The market felt the full effect of the news yesterday morning. And it acted noteworthily well under the circumstances. Losses of four or five points in several of the anthracite stocks were quickly recorded, but most of the rest of the list yielded very deliberately.

At the close of the day neither the railroads nor the industrials had on the average lost more than a fraction, though in a number of issues including some of the anthracite stocks the net loss extended to three or four points. But the market was not demoralized by the Commerce Commission's decision as it might have been were it in very extended position. Its action seemed to indicate that it was in a stronger technical position than often exists after a feverish rise in many stocks. One reason for this was that traders had for some days been working for a reaction and the market probably had the benefit yesterday of a larger short interest than existed a few days ago. Again yesterday the upbidding of a few stocks, most of them war stocks, suggested that the means was being used to break the force of the reaction, but in addition to this the market had the support of a considerable volume of buying of a less technical sort.

PUMP REORGANIZATION PLAN

To Assess Preferred and Common Stock $12.50 a Share.

The Reorganization Committee of the International Steam Pump Company, a $39,000,000 corporation which went into the hands of receivers last year, announced yesterday a plan of reorganization which calls for an assessment of $12.50 per share on both the preferred and common stocks. It is proposed to organize a new company, the stock of which will be exchanged for the securities of the old concern. In place of the $39,000,000 stock now outstanding, the plan proposes stock issues amounting to no more than $28,600,000, consisting of two classes of preferred besides common shares.

The plan suggests that the holders of the $9,400,000 bonds of the company accept 6 per cent. preferred and common stock in exchange for their bonds on the basis of $1,083 of the preferred and $370.17 in common for each $1,000 bond. Holders of present preferred stock on payment of the assessment will receive $12.50 in 7 per cent. preferred and $34 in common for each share of old stock. Owners of International common stock are to get $12.50 in 7 per cent. preferred and $17 in new common for each share of stock now held. Owners of the preferred stock of the H. R. Worthington Company, the principal subsidiary, are to receive new 7 per cent. preferred stock par for par. Securities of other subsidiary concerns are also provided for in the exchange.

The cash requirements of the plan have been underwritten by banking firms headed by William Salomon & Co. up to $3,889,063. The underwriters are to receive a cash commission of 5 per cent. on this amount, and the syndicate managers will get $1,000 in new common stock for their services.

It was learned yesterday that opposition to the plan has arisen in some quarters. The basis of this opposition is understood to be the contention that the company is now conducting so profitable a business that so large an assessment should not be necessary. Bankers interested in the reorganization state that an adequate working capital is needed and that an assessment of $12.50 a share will be no more than enough to fill that need.

The International Company has received large sub-contracts in shell making from the General Electric Company. An officer of a leading subsidiary is authority for the statement that these orders, placed among all the plants, aggregate $20,000,000, and that new business last month was offered in excess of the capacity of existing plants.

The H. R. Worthington Company has five plants in Europe, two in England, one each in France, Germany, and Austria. All of these, it is said, are working full time, making shells for the different armies. The German and Austrian Governments, it is said, have made entirely satisfactory arrangements with the companies within their bounds, and the business is profitable.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Brokers Talking Exchange.

The foreign exchange situation yesterday became a real factor in stock trading, and brokers who ordinarily pay no attention to quotations became keenly interested in the movement in exchange. Their interest in the subject arose from the probable effect of a continued decline in exchange rates on future export business. It was realized that unless steps were taken to provide a credit of ample size the difficulty of paying for goods bought in this country would militate against the placing of further orders. For part of the day there was almost a complete cessation of dealings in the active war stocks, while the ticker busied itself with quotations on Union Bag & Paper. Sales of this usually inactive issue totalled 18,500 shares, whereas in six days last week the aggregate business done was but 1,400 shares. Traders who believed in signs, decided once more that the activity in such stocks as National Enameling & Stamping and Bag & Paper proved conclusively that another bull market had reached its finish and was only pausing for the odds and ends to be cleaned up before taking a plunge. But as to that there was, as usual in brokerage circles, a difference of opinion.

Labor's Big Share.

If the question of an increase in freight rates were settled by popular vote, the advocates of advances would at least make a formidable showing. Railway employes have come to realize that a prosperous railroad means steady work at good wages. The working man's share of transportation revenues has been getting larger in recent years, and with rates fixed or declining, capital has had to surrender the difference. B. A. Worthington, vice president of the Southern Pacific, has compiled figures showing that in 1904 labor got 58.73 per cent. of the total railway income, divisible between capital and labor, while in 1914 it received 66.04 per cent. Capital received 41.27 per cent. in 1904 and only 33.96 ten years later. The return on capital invested in the railways was 4.99 per cent in 1904 and only 4.17 in 1914.

THE WEATHER

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—There are no disturbances of consequence within the United States except in the Rocky Mountain region, and these affecting only the middle plateau. Pressure has risen generally east of the mountains except in the Middle Atlantic States and New England.

The tropical storm which has been under observation the last two days was apparently approaching Southwest Cuba at 4 P. M., and hurricane warnings are now displayed on the South Florida Coast. It passed over the island of Jamaica Thursday night and a whole southeast gale was reported there this morning.

There were showers in the lake region and the Atlantic States, the upper Mississippi Valley, the west Gulf and central Plains States, Eastern Colorado and Arizona, with a heavy fall of rain at Dodge City, Kan. Elsewhere the weather was fair.

It is somewhat warmer in the Middle Atlantic States and the Ohio Valley, the upper lake region and the extreme Northwest, and high temperatures continue in the plateau region.

Temperature changes will not be important.

Winds along the North and Middle Atlantic Coasts will be gentle to moderate south and southwest Saturday and Sunday; South Atlantic Coast, moderate south and southwest, except strong east off the South Florida Coast.

FORECASTS TODAY AND SUNDAY.

New York, New Jersey, New England, and Eastern Pennsylvania—Fair Saturday and Sunday.

The temperature record for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from the thermometer at the local office of the United States Weather Bureau, is as follows:

3 A. M.	67	71	4 P. M.	79	84
6 A. M.	64	71	6 P. M.	78	83
9 A. M.	67	75	9 P. M.	70	78
12 M.	73	81	11 P. M.	69	76

This thermometer is 414 feet above the street level. The average temperature yesterday was 77; for the corresponding date last year it was 72; average on the corresponding date for the last thirty-three years, 73.

The temperature at 8 A. M. yesterday was 72; at 8 P. M. it was 80. Maximum temperature, 84 degrees at 2:30 P. M.; minimum, 70 degrees at 6:20 A. M. Humidity, 98 per cent. at 8 A. M.; 62 per cent. at 8 P. M.

The barometer at 8 A. M. yesterday registered 29.98 inches; at 8 P. M. it stood at 29.92 inches.

EDUCATION NOTES.

The Commissioners of the Sinking Fund have consented to the lease of certain premises immediately adjacent to and north of P. S. 6, Queens.

The Board of Estimate has approved of the transfer of $52,280 within the special school fund for 1915.

Classes for anaemic children will be established in P. S. 14, 20, 22, 64, 75, 88, 91, 177, and 188, girls. These schools are all in Manhattan.

The semi-annual report of the Local School Board of District 12 contains an indorsement of the idea of establishing experimentally in some suitable location a municipal workshop, where boys who are slightly below par in mental capacity, but not so defective as to require institutional care, could be taught such trades and manual work as are suited to their abilities and are likely to enable them to become self-supporting.

The Commissioners of the Sinking Fund have consented to the Board of Education's renewal of the lease of 1,645, 1,647, and 1,649 Eighty-sixth Street, Brooklyn.

Appraisers Decide When Silks Are Not Silks, but Velvets.

The Board of General Appraisers yesterday took adverse action on protests by L. & E. Stirn and Kridel Sons & Co. in a controversy regarding the present classification of woven fabrics in the piece that are composed in chief value of silk, the face of the fabric in each instance being partially covered with a pile surface. The Collector took duty at 50 per cent. ad valorem as velvet pile fabrics, whereas the importers claimed 45 per cent. under the provision for silk woven fabrics not specially provided for, as specified in Paragraph 318. Judge Howell decided that the goods had the features of pile fabrics and were properly assessed.

Heyliger & Raubitschek imported woven fabrics of silk, of light texture and having plain borders. The Collector classified the merchandise as silk velling and levied 60 per cent. duty under the specific provision for such goods. The importers insisted that the correct rate was 45 per cent., as woven silk fabrics as specified in Paragraph 318. The evidence showed that the merchandise had been known for twenty years in the commerce of this country as "chiffon velling." The board decided that the Collector properly classified the goods.

Several Chicago wholesale dry goods firms were sustained in identical protests against the Collector's assessment of cotton table damask. The Collector returned the goods at 30 per cent. ad valorem as Jacquard figured manufactures of cotton. Judge Cooper held that the claims for a tax of 25 per cent. as "cotton table damask," under Paragraph 283, were well taken and must be sustained. The protestants, who will now receive refunds from the Government, include the John V. Farwell Company, Marshall Field & Co., Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co., and Sears, Roebuck & Co.

The last named firm figured in another controversy, this time regarding the rate on a flax fabric known in the trade as huck. Duty was collected at the rate of 35 per cent. ad valorem as a manufacture of flax, while the importers claimed 30 per cent. as a plain woven fabric. At the trial the protestants produced two witnesses who testified that the merchandise is plain huck, which is a figured material, and that such a distinction is recognized in trade. Judge Cooper remarked that he did not think this testimony sufficient to prove that the merchandise was a plain woven fabric, and the Collector was sustained.

It was decided that M. J. Corbett & Co. must stand a tax of 60 per cent. ad valorem on artificial silk and cotton fabrics, artificial silk being chief value. The importers based their claims for lower rates on the ground that the merchandise is composed of some material other than artificial silk. A commission was issued for taking testimony abroad, and witnesses appeared before the American Consul General at Zurich. The board decided, however, that there was nothing in their testimony to overcome the presumption in favor of the Appraiser's return.

THE CONDITION OF TRADE.

Commenting on the condition of trade and the business of the banks, Dun's Review says:

Overshadowing several significant developments of the week the Government crop report is the strongest single factor operating for sustained business progress. Practical assurance of agricultural success was the one thing needed to make the future secure, and important undertakings will be prosecuted with increased vigor now that bountiful harvests are officially promised. Prosperous conditions on the farms are essential to national welfare.

As all the leading exchanges in this country were closed at this time a year ago, it is to be expected that clearings through the banks this week would show marked expansion as compared with that period, and therefore the total, which amounts to $2,892,490,517 at the leading cities in the United States and shows a gain of 56.0 per cent. over the $1,854,596,894 of the same week last year occasions no surprise. The comparison with two years ago, however, when the total was $2,338,748,450, represents more nearly normal conditions, and therefore the increase of 23.7 per cent. is a decidedly satisfactory exhibit.

Bradstreet's says:

Enlarged house trade, country-wide optimism, smarter activity in metal manufacturing, further slight improvement in lines that long have lagged, heavy marketings of pig iron at advanced prices, relatively excellent crop news, war orders that overflow regular channels to plants not heretofore engaged in that respect, better collections, increased calls for money with which to move crops, some, though not satisfactory, relief in the way of higher freight rates for western railroads, a heavy influx of gold to help bolster weak rates for foreign exchange, which are at new record low levels, and sustained public interest in the stock market, comprehend the chief features of the week's developments.

THE REAL ESTATE FIELD.

Drug Firm Rounds Out Third Avenue Block Front—West Eighty-sixth Street Sale—New Park Avenue Operation—Bronx and Suburban Deals—Post Office Lease on Fourth Avenue.

Elmer & Amend, wholesale drug manufacturers who own the seven-story building at the northeast corner of Third Avenue and Eighteenth Street, including 205 to 218 Third Avenue, a Hamilton Fish leasehold, have rented out their holdings there so as to control the entire easterly block front from Eighteenth to Nineteenth Street. The upper half of the block, including the six buildings at 213 to 223 Third Avenue with the adjoining structures at 204 and 206 East Nineteenth Street, has been obtained on leasehold from the Stuyvesant estate, owners of the property.

The frontage is 110 on the avenue, by 120 on the street and with their Eighteenth Street plot the firm now has a frontage on the avenue of 184 feet and 123 on Eighteenth Street. While no definite plans for improvement have been announced, it is said that in the near future, the Nineteenth Street corner will be improved with a seven-story building similar to the structure now occupied by the firm.

West 86th Street Dwelling Sold.

The upper west side furnished an interesting residential deal in the sale of the five-story dwelling at 327 West Eighty-Sixth Street by Carrie E. Brinckerhoff who has owned the property since 1899. The plot is 18 by 100.8 between Riverside Drive and West End Avenue, a block in which three big apartment house operations have lately been undertaken. The brokers in the transaction were Slawson & Hobbs.

Another Block Front Lease on Park Avenue.

The New York State Realty and Terminal Company, which controls the real estate holdings of the New York Central Railroad Company, has leased, in its terminal zone, the block front on the west side of Park Avenue, Fifty-first to Fifty-second Street, fronting 200 feet on the avenue and 75 feet on both streets. The lessee is the 330 Park Avenue Company, the President of which is E. Clifford Potter. The latter company will erect a twenty-story and basement apartment house on the site. The general building contract has been given to A. L. Mordecai & Son, Inc.

The lease, as recorded yesterday, is to run for twenty-one years from Sept. 1, 1915, at an annual rental of $30,000.

Tenement Property Sales.

Clement H. Smith and Joseph F. Feist & Co. have sold to an investor, the five-story and basement tenement at 258 West 115th Street, on lot 25 by 100.

Bronx Sales.

The five-story apartment houses at 1,909 and 1,925 Andrews Avenue, each on plot 40 by 100, have been sold by the Oisting Building Company to Mary O'Connor and W. H. Melish, respectively. They are two of a row of twelve similar houses just completed by the selling company on the site of Hennessy tract sold at auction only a year ago by Joseph P. Day and J. Clarence Davies.

Frederick Brown has purchased from the Rector Realty Company, Isidore Bergs President, the five-story apartment house at 1,359 Lyman Place, 50 by 112, between 169th and Freeman Streets.

Brooklyn.

Charles F. Werner has sold 192 Weirfield Street, a two-family brick dwelling for S. A. Coffin. Also 1,722 Madison Street, a six-family dwelling, for the Bauer & Stier Corporation to an investor.

The Alco Building Company has sold the residence at 1,942 Sixty-fifth Street, Mapleton, to the Rev. E. Rissell.

Long Island.

George C. Lynch of Flushing has conveyed to the Eagle Savings and Loan Company of Brooklyn a plot 50 by 100 on the north side of State Street, 125 feet west of Thirteenth Street, Flushing.

Elizabeth Mall has purchased through Frank Crystal a residence with a half-acre plot at the Estates of Great Neck. The holding price was $22,500.

$75,000 Deal at Passaic, N. J.

Frank Hughes, Inc., has sold the plot of ground on Bloomfield Avenue, Passaic, eighty-five feet front, to Davis Stein of Paterson. Arrangements have been made for the erection of a thirty-family apartment house. The transaction involved about $75,000.

Nepperhan Heights Tennis Club Buys New Site.

The Robert E. Farley Organization has sold at Nepperhan Heights, Yonkers, to the Nepperhan Tennis Club, ten plots on Fairview Avenue, Marlboro Road, and Myrtle Avenue. They will begin the construction of their new courts next season, continuing with the present accommodations for the balance of this year. The club has been leasing these courts for some time, but the movement to own its own land has been progressing for the last year. Eventually, a clubhouse will be built on Marlboro Road overlooking the courts.

Westchester County.

Richard Dickson has sold for Robert F. Neuman, lots 964, 965, 966, 986, 987, 1024 and 1025 on Sherman Avenue, Sherman Park, Westchester County, and for William Krug, premises 1376 Leland Avenue, lot 25 by 100, with a two-family dwelling.

The Nelson Estates, Inc., Robert E. Farley Vice President, has sold a plot at Nelson Park, Peekskill, to W. E. Wheeler. This plot faces on Highland Avenue.

New Post Office Site.

The Saxon Realty Company has leased for the Chesebrough Estates the southwest corner of Fourth Avenue and Thirteenth Street to the Federal Government for a Post Office.

The owners will erect a building, to be ready for occupancy by May 1, 1916, to have over 10,000 square feet of floor space. The deal involves a rental of $200,000.

Auto Co. Leases New Building.

Chris Schierloh leased for a term of years the new five-story building just completed, known as the Mullen Brothers' Building, southwest corner of Fifty-seventh Street and Eleventh Avenue, to the Chevrolet Motor Company of New York, which will move their main offices there.

Foreign Concern Leases Greenwich Street Corner.

Joseph P. Day has leased for Max Ans, Inc., to T. M. Duche & Sons, dealers in confectioners' supplies, the six-story building on the southwest corner of Greenwich and Moore Streets, on a plot 50 by 100. The home office is in London and the foreign factory is in Belgium.

Private Dwelling Leases.

The dwelling at 17 West Eleventh Street has been leased by Pease & Elliman for Joshua F. Tobin to J. Herbert Claiborne.

The Houghton Company has leased for Irving N. Shaw, William W. Shaw, and Mary Shaw Whittaker, the three-story dwelling at 30 West Ninetieth Street, to James A. Dolan.

Pepe & Bro., have leased for Clarence S. Nathan the three-story private house, at 36 Commerce Street, to Mrs. T. Forbell.

Building Still Lagging.

The July building report to Bradstreet's Journal, 143 cities of the United States contributing, is a rather unsatisfactory one, a heavy decrease being shown alike in number of permits granted and in value of buildings projected, and it is evident that the building trade lags behind some others in the movement toward improvement noted in the past few months.

There were 21,213 permits granted to builders during the month of July and the estimated value of the structures planned was $63,257,204, decreases of, respectively, 7.9 and 15.7 per cent. from the like month a year ago, which showed a gain of 5.1 per cent. in value over July two years ago.

This decrease of 15.7 per cent., however, compares with a decrease of 21.8 per cent. in June from the like month a year ago. The only exception to the general tendency toward a decrease is found in the New England group, in which gains of 20.5 per cent. in permits and of 29.8 per cent. in values were shown over a year ago.

In the other groups, decreases of 6.8 to 15.8 per cent. were shown in permits, while values fell off from 8.4 per cent. to as much as 53.7 per cent., the heaviest decrease being shown in the Far West.

Realty Notes.

The Mutual Life Insurance Company has filed a suit to foreclose a mortgage on property 100 feet east of the southeast corner of Twelfth Street and First Avenue. The property, 113 feet on Twelfth Street and 206 feet on Eleventh Street, was formerly a cemetery. The defendants are the trustees of St. Patrick's Cathedral, Gustave Herre, Sophie L. McClintock, and the estate of Daniel E. Seybel. The mortgage amounts to $184,000.

The Anthony A. Paterno Construction Corporation, of which Anthony A. Paterno is President and Joseph Paterno, Treasurer, will begin work immediately upon a thirteen-story apartment house at the northeast corner of Riverside Drive and 108th Street, 50 by 100. A building loan for $250,000 has been obtained from the City Mortgage Company.

James J. Riordan, who recently leased from the Consolidated Gas Company the property at 438 to 454 West Eighteenth Street, fronting 225 feet, has had plans prepared to erect a three-story garage and printers' plant on the site, costing about $65,000.

M'GRATH REINSTATED; SHOT MAN IN HIS HOME

Hammer-Throwing Policeman Back on Force After Dismissal Four Years Ago.

Matt McGrath, the hammer thrower, who, in 1911, was dismissed from the police department, was reinstated yesterday by Commissioner Woods following a rehearing of the case by Deputy Commissioner Godley.

On Christmas eve, 1910, when McGrath was a patrolman attached to the Hamilton Avenue, Brooklyn, Station, he left his post and went to his home in Parkville, where he found George Walker in company with his wife. A quarrel followed and McGrath shot Walker twice and then arrested him. Subsequently McGrath was himself arrested on Walker's complaint and suspended by Police Commissioner Baker. He was tried in the County Court and acquitted of the charges of assault, but on March 9, 1911, he was dismissed from the department.

When Commissioner Waldo was appointed he reinstated McGrath in June, 1911, without a hearing, but a taxpayers' suit forced the Commissioner to suspend McGrath indefinitely. Following an act of the Legislature, giving patrolmen the right to have their cases reopened provided the applicant waives all right to back pay, McGrath made such an application to Commissioner Woods.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY IS SHOT

Attack Made on Pennsylvania Official May Prove Fatal.

WARREN, Penn., Aug. 13.—Marion Carringer, District Attorney of Forest County, was shot and probably fatally injured in his office at Tionesta today. Bereno Schectino, who did the shooting, was overpowered after he had menaced a crowd of citizens and police officers with his revolver. Threats of lynching were made, but the police succeeded in landing the man in jail unharmed.

The shots were fired at the District Attorney through the closed door of his office and one took effect in the official's left lung and the others in his back.

Schectino, whose 15-year-old daughter figured in a sensational case here a year ago, accused the District Attorney of neglect of duty in connection with the case.

LOW OPENS FIGHT FOR HOME RULE PLAN

Supports Proposal at Albany Giving Legislature Veto Power Over Some Measures.

FOES MAKE HOT ATTACK

Offer Storm of Amendments and Substitutes for the Measure—Long Debate in Prospect.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Aug. 13.—Home rule is having its day in court before the none too friendly Constitutional Convention. From all indications the outlook is not very good for the adoption of the proposal presented today by the Cities Committee, which provides a home rule plan that would give the Legislature veto power over any special city legislation affecting the "framework" of municipal government, but would leave to every city the "exclusive local affairs."

The debate on the measure of which ex-Mayor Seth Low of New York is the sponsor occupied all the forenoon and afternoon sessions of the convention and was cut short tonight only through the absence of a quorum. It will be resumed on Monday, and it is likely that two days of debate will be required before a vote is reached on the question of advancement to the order of final passage.

Mr. Low, who has set his heart on the adoption of the committee's proposal, spoke eloquently in its defense during the first two hours of debate. Then the opposition got its inning. Amendments came in a veritable shower and most of them from unfriendly quarters. Three of the amendments were so sweeping in character that their sponsors considered it the part of wisdom to propose them in form of substitute proposals involving a compromise.

Louis Marshall made the discovery that the language of the bill would permit the City of New York to engage in business ventures, possibly the operation of public utilities. Power to do so was a salient feature of the home rule plan proposed by Mayor Mitchel and advocated by the Mayors' Conference, which the convention has rejected as too radical.

It was the phrase "exclusive power to manage, regulate, and control its own property, business and local affairs" which caught Mr. Marshall's eye. Mr. Marshall sent an amendment to the desk striking out of the word "business," on the ground that it might enable the New York City authorities to enter upon a policy of business adventure.

Opponents of the home rule plan proposed by the committee said tonight the measure was on the rocks and that it never would be put through in its present form. In all fifteen amendments were offered today. There is not much likelihood that a measure of home rule involving less dependence on the Legislature, would have a chance before the convention. In fact, there is a distinct possibility that the views may prevail of those who oppose larger liberties for the cities by constitutional revision and favor a plan, leaving the whole question to the Legislature, merely eliminating from the present Constitution the clause preventing the Legislature from delegating any part of its law-making power to the legislative boards of municipalities. This is what advocates of home rule have feared from the start.

Ex-Mayor Low's Argument.

In urging the proposal presented by the committee Mr. Low said in part:

"Mr. President—It may be interesting to the convention to know that in 45 years no progress whatever has been made in relieving the Legislature of the State of New York from the burden of detailed legislation for cities. The Evarts Commission Report of 1877 in relation to city government called attention to the fact that one of the principal difficulties in the way of securing good city government in the State of New York was to be found in the great number of laws affecting particular cities enacted every year by the Legislature. In illustration of the situation the report gives these figures: There were enacted, by the Legislature of 1870, 808 acts of all kinds. Of these, 212 related to cities and villages. Of this number 94 related to cities only and 36 related to New York City alone. The statement is made that an even larger number of laws were passed affecting Brooklyn, which was then a separate city."

The ex-Mayor then exhaustively reviewed charter legislation of the past. The so-called local suspensory veto he said had checked some evils. Any amendment he continued which was to solve successfully all the intricate problems affecting the cities must do these four things: It must grant power enough to the cities to deal at home with their own local affairs; it must give the cities authority to adjust the machinery by which they conduct their business to the changing needs of the hour; it must prevent the Legislature from interfering in the details of city action, so far as the city is acting in relation to its own affairs only; and it must leave power enough somewhere, either in the city or in the Legislature, to enact any law that may become necessary in the interest of either the city or the State.

Quoting from various authorities Mr. Low reached the conclusion that efforts to cure the evil of special legislation by classification of cities had failed. Then the ex-Mayor turned to a consideration of the practical problems which must be considered, and after further discussion took up in detail the committee's proposal amending and revising Article XII. of the Constitution. He referred in particular to this new definition of a special city law as contained in the revised article:

"'Laws relating to the government of cities and applying to less than all the cities of the State without classification or distinction and not within the powers granted to cities by this article are defined for the purpose of this section as special city laws.'

"'As to such special city laws, so defined,' Mr. Low said, 'the suspensory veto in the locality is retained as it appears in the present Constitution. The significance of this definition of a special city law becomes clear in connection with the first part of Section 4 of this article, which section is entirely new. Section 4 begins, 'Every city shall have exclusive power to manage, regulate and control its own property, business and local affairs, subject to the Constitution and to the general laws of the State applying to all the inhabitants, or applying to all the cities or counties of the State without classification or distinction. Such power shall be deemed to include among others:

"'The power to organize and manage all departments, bureaus, or other divisions of the city government and to regulate the powers, duties, qualifications, mode of selection, number, terms of office, compensation and method of removal of all city officers and employes, and of all police and health officers and employes, and of all non-judicial officers and employes attached to courts not of record, and to regulate the compensation of all officers not chosen by the electors and of all employes of counties situated wholly within a city, except assistants and employes of district attorney, and except officers and employes of courts of record.

"'The power to amend its charter or any local or special law relating to its property, business or local affairs.'

"'Reading these two clauses together it appears, if this amendment be adopted, that the Legislature can pass no special law at all relating to the field of the cities' local affairs as to which the cities are given an exclusive grant of power.'"

Continuing his discussion of the proposed new Section 4, Mr. Low then said:

"'The next paragraph of Section 4 provides for the submission to the electors of every city, in the year 1916 and in every eighth year thereafter, the question 'Shall there be a commission to revise the charter of the city?' and if that is answered in the affirmative by those voting on the proposition a commission to revise the charter is to be elected in the following year. The charter as revised is to be submitted to the people, and if accepted by them it goes to the Legislature which will have the power of annulment.'"

The ex-Mayor then discussed the proposed procedure in amending city charters, and the many questions at issue, and summarizing said:

"Your Committee on Cities has faced this question frankly, and has provided that charter amendments, either of existing charters or of revised charters, may be initiated at home by the concurrent action of the legislative authorities and of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment if there be one. Provision is made for public notice and for public hearings, so that nothing can be slipped through unawares. Such charter amendments, when formally approved by the city authorities, come to the Legislature and are subject to disapproval for a period of sixty days."

In closing his argument Mr. Low said:

"I confidently submit to the judgment of this convention that the amendment proposed by your Cities Committee does the four things which I pointed out, in the beginning of my address, as essential to any plan which is to solve the problem with which this convention is called upon to deal. It grants adequate and exclusive power to the cities to deal at home with their own local affairs; it provides the means by which cities may currently adjust the machinery by which they conduct their business to the changing needs of the hour; it prevents the Legislature from interfering in the details of the city action, so far as the city is acting in relation to its own affairs only.

"It makes sure, by providing that the Legislature may continue to pass special laws affecting cities, of the character described, that the power is left somewhere, either in the city or in the Legislature, to enact any law that may become necessary in the interest of either the city or the State. So much, for the benefit of those who are interested in the cause of home rule.

"A city is not a little State that can take to itself all the powers there are. Neither is it like a State in the Union, which retains all the powers that it does not surrender. A city enjoys only the powers granted to it, and when these are to be exclusive only as to its local affairs, the line must be drawn somewhere between the city and the State. However this division of power is expressed it can be made definite only by the courts. The Cities Committee has indicated this line of division as clearly as it can. The committee will be glad if the convention can do it better."

Ex-Justice O'Brien's Substitute.

Following Mr. Low's argument ex-Justice Morgan J. O'Brien offered a substitute proposal. It differed from the Low proposal in that it prohibits the Legislature from enacting any measures affecting municipalities, except by general laws which apply to all cities in the State alike. The O'Brien measure also gives to cities a wide grant of power to conduct their own government and provides that the Legislature may delegate powers of legislation affecting local affairs to cities. Both the Low proposal and that submitted by Mr. O'Brien give to cities powers to adopt their own charters. Under the Low proposal, however, a charter adopted by a city can be annulled by the Legislature, even after the voters of the city have indorsed it by a referendum vote. Under the O'Brien amendment the action of the voters of a city would be final. Amendments to charters also could be made without legislative sanction or interference. The procedure provided for the framing and adoption of charters also is swifter under the O'Brien amendment than under the Low proposal. Under the latter no city could obtain a new charter in less than three years.

Senator James A. Foley, Democrat, of New York, signed a minority report attacking the Low plan.

"The Cities Committee home rule proposal was taken from the plan of government in the Philippine Islands," Senator Foley said. "Of course, there is no comparison with conditions there and in our own cities, especially in New York. When the Philippine system was adopted, ex-President Taft, then Governor, pointed out that 90 per cent. of the people were in a state of ignorance, and had neither the experience nor ability for self-government. The example chosen was, therefore, unfortunate, unless the cities of New York State are to be treated as conquered provinces."

The phraseology of the Low amendment, judging from the debate, aroused apprehension in the minds of many delegates as to the possible construction by the courts of its language. Under the Low proposal cities would have the right to manage "their property, business and local affairs" without legislative interference. The Legislature's permission, however, would be required whenever the city ventured to undertake anything in the way of legislation affecting "the framework of its Government." The opponents of the plan, notably E. E. Franchot of Niagara, said that this would create a twilight zone of doubt where no one could tell whether it was within the province of the city or the State to act.

GARVIN MEN STAY OUT.

Machinists Shake Hands with Boss, but Insist Upon Eight Hours.

Yesterday brought no relief to the Garvin Machine Company's plant, closed because of a strike of machinists. Following the refusal of one 700 strikers to go back to work Thursday, after an invitation from the company, a large number of them gathered in front of the plant at the opening time yesterday morning. Eugene Garvin, Vice President of the company, came out and shook hands with a number of the men, asking them if they wanted their old jobs back. "How about the eight hours?" was all the encouragement he got. Twenty-five out-of-town men were brought to the plant during the morning, but did not go to work.

A statement issued by Henry C. Hunter, counsel for the National Metal Trades Association, which is directing the effort of the Garvin plant to break the strike for eight hours, said that there were eight more men at work yesterday than on Thursday. Mr. Hunter reported on Thursday that 110 machinists had gone back to work; it developed that the 110 included every man at work in the plant. Officials of the machinists say but four machinists went back to work of the 200 on strike. When Mr. Hunter was told that the labor men said the 110 men at work were those who had never struck, painters and repairers, he said:

"Well, there's no way to prove whether that is so or not."

The machinists' pickets about the plant at Varick and Spring Streets gave the police no trouble.

Labor leaders decided last night to await the arrival today of J. J. Keppler, Vice President of the International Association of Machinists, who is in Hartford, before formulating plans to meet any possible moves by the Garvin Company. The labor officials say they have information that the Garvin Company will try to put 1,000 strikebreakers at work Monday morning.

William Bramley, business agent for the machinists, said last night that the 900 machinists in the plant of the Standard Motor Company of Jersey City would be called out early next week if the eight-hour day were not granted.

President Johnston of the International Association of Machinists will preside Monday night at a meeting in New York of the organizers who have been at work in the Eastern States.

Need 200 Women Stenographers.

The Public Employment Bureau announced yesterday that it could place at least 200 women stenographers at substituting and that this work might in exceptional cases result in permanent employment. Applicants must have had three or more years' experience and be able to furnish written references from employers as to their ability. The salary is from $12 to $20 a week. Only applicants who are residents of the city and can meet requirements will be considered.

PROPOSE NEW PLAN TO SPEED UP COURTS

Constitutional Convention Committee Favors Two Parts of the Court of Appeals.

MORE APPELLATE JUSTICES

Leaves Elective Judiciary Undisturbed—Urges Increased Power for General Sessions Court Here.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Aug. 13.—If a proposal presented to the Constitutional Convention today by its Committee on the Judiciary, of which ex-Attorney General Wickersham is Chairman, prevails, the Court of General Sessions, whose jurisdiction now is limited to the County of New York, will be the criminal court of the entire City of New York, and the City Court's jurisdiction will be enlarged, so that actions for the recovery of money not exceeding $5,000 in amount can be brought before that tribunal.

This arrangement would render it unnecessary to continue the county courts in Kings, Queens, Bronx, and Richmond. The criminal cases pending before those courts on Jan. 1, 1917, would be transferred to the Court of General Sessions. The civil cases and the civil jurisdiction would pass to the City Court. The Judges of the County Courts would become Judges of the Court of General Sessions. To enable the City Court to cope with increased business, provision is made for the election of additional Judges, two from Kings and one each from Queens and Bronx.

In a report presented with the proposal, the Judiciary Committee says that the amount of civil business in Richmond County would not warrant the election of a Judge from Richmond. That county would continue to have its separate Surrogate's Court.

The report refers to the fact that the consolidation of the courts of inferior civil and criminal jurisdiction—such as the Municipal Court, the Special Sessions, and the Magistrates' Courts, has increased the tendency of these tribunals. The committee says that in its opinion the consolidation of the intermediary courts and the proposed increase of the jurisdiction of the City Court would relieve the Supreme Court of many small cases and thus obviate the "law's delay" in that tribunal.

The committee recommends that the Constitutional Convention issue a mandate to the Legislature to act with all convenient speed at the next session on the report submitted last April by the commission appointed to suggest some method for speeding up of the machinery of justice.

The committee says that the evils of the present system in the courts are due largely to the complicated rules of procedure laid down in the Code and to the constant tinkering of the Code by the Legislature. It recommends that at its next session the Legislature enact a short practice act to govern court procedure, and that it appoint a commission every five years to consider and recommend necessary changes indicated by experience. Subject only to this provision, the report recommends that full power be vested in the Judges of the Court of Appeals and the Justices of the Supreme Court to make and alter rules of procedure, and that the Legislature be prohibited from enacting any law affecting these rules, except on the recommendation of the jurists.

To relieve the pressure on the courts, the committee recommends that provision be made for the appointment by the Appellate Division of the First and Second Departments of Supreme Court Commissioners who must be members of the bar with at least ten years in practice, to preside in condemnation proceedings, and such other cases as may be assigned to them by special order or by the rules of the courts. If the recommendations of the committee are followed these Commissioners will have a fixed salary and will be barred from engaging in private practice during the period of their service as agents of the courts. A recommendation is also made for the continuance of official referees. They are now appointed under a statute, which will receive constitutional sanction if the report of the committee is adopted.

To Aid Court of Appeals.

Taking heed of the piling up of business before the Court of Appeals, the committee recommends that temporary provision be made for two parts of that tribunal, after March 1, 1916. The recommendation is also made that the number of Judges be increased permanently from seven to ten. Under the present plan three Judges are assigned to the court from among the Justices of the Supreme Court. To provide for the second part of the Court of Appeals it is recommended that the court shall call in on or before March 1 next not less than four nor more than six Justices of the Supreme Court. In the organization of the two parts the committee recommends that the permanent Judges and those called in from the Supreme Court shall be distributed equally.

The two part arrangement, under the recommendations of the committee, would be merely a makeshift to continue not longer than Dec. 31, 1917. There are now nearly 600 cases before the Court of Appeals. About two years are required before a case can be reached on the calendars. The cases increase at the rate of about 100 each year. The committee believes that when the cases have been reduced in number to 200 the Court of Appeals should resume its normal practice of sitting as a single body until the calendar, which under the committee's proposal must be made up every year, contains 500 cases, when the court must again call in assistance and resolve itself into two parts until the calendar has been cleared. To enable the court to maintain its maximum strength at all times provision is also made for the calling in of Supreme Court Justices to sit in the place of Court of Appeals Judges temporarily absent or disabled by illness for periods of six months only.

Emphasizing the distinction made in the revised Constitution of 1894, when the Appellate Division was established so that the Court of Appeals might be left free to devote itself to the duty of settling questions of law for the entire State, the Judiciary Committee recommends that in the future the right of appeal to the Court of Appeals be limited to cases coming within these categories.

(1) Where the judgment is of death.

(2) From a judgment or order entered upon a decision of the Appellate Division which finally determines an action or special proceedings directly involving the construction of the Constitution of the State or of the United States, or where one or more of the Justices who heard the case dissents from the decision of the court, or where the judgment of the trial court is reversed or modified.

(3) From an order granting a new trial where the appellant stipulates that upon affirmance judgment absolute shall be rendered against him.

The Court of Appeals, however, is empowered to allow an appeal in any case where a question of law is involved, which, in its opinion, it ought to review.

The amendment strikes out the provision of the present Constitution that no unanimous decision of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court to the effect that there is evidence supporting or tending to support a finding of fact or a verdict not directed by the court shall be reviewed by the Court of Appeals.

More Appellate Division Justices.

A close study of the work of the Appellate Division for the First and Second Departments convinced the committee that an increase in the personnel was desirable, so that if necessary the Appellate Division of the First Department could sit in two parts. In this connection the committee says in its report, after commenting upon the enormous business which comes before this tribunal:

"Your committee has great doubt as to whether or not even a court of ten or twelve judges, five of whom are sitting continuously for weeks in every month, can dispose of such a volume of business, and it has therefore provided that the court may, should it find it necessary, sit in two parts, each composed of five Justices, both under the direction of one Presiding Justice.

"It also proposes to authorize the Appellate Division to call in other Justices from the Supreme Court for temporary service in case of illness or absence of one of the regularly assigned Justices. The provisions in the present Constitution authorizing the Governor to assign additional Justices to an Appellate Division on request, are retained, and the provisions for transferring cases from one division to another by vote of the Presiding Justices, in case an Appellate Division is unable to dispose of its business within a reasonable time, are retained and made manditory."

The committee also recommends an increase in the number of Justices to the Appellate Terms in the First and Second Departments from three to five, the assignments to be made for one year only.

The suggestion made to the committee by ex-Senator Root and ex-President Taft that procedure in impeachment proceedings be made simpler has been met by a provision in the proposal which would enable the High Court of Impeachment to order all or any part of the testimony in impeachment cases taken and reported by a committee composed of members of the court, reserving, however, the right for the impeached officer to appear and testify with the full court in attendance, should he so desire.

The Court of Claims is established as a constitutional tribunal with its present personnel. Successors to the present Judges would be appointed by the Governor, as were those now sitting.

On the subject of jury exemptions the report says:

Exemptions from liability to jury service have been granted by the Legislature from time to time to various classes and citizens. It is difficult to imagine any sound reason for the existence of some of these exemptions. Many Judges who have appeared before your committee have attributed to these exemptions difficulties experienced in securing in important cases juries of sufficient intelligence to comprehend the issues involved. Your committee is inclined to the opinion that except in the case of physicians and surgeons in active practice, exemptions from liability to jury duty should be limited to persons employed in the public service; but recognizing the difficulty of fairly determining these questions within the limitations necessarily imposed upon it, your committee has recommended that no others be exempt unless, and except the Judges empowered to make the civil practice rules shall so provide. It is believed that this body, charged with formulating the rules governing procedure in the courts, will be better qualified to determine what classes of persons may be exempted from jury duty without impairment to the administration of justice. Soldiers and sailors of the United States Army and Navy, members of the National Guard, and volunteer firemen now serving as such or heretofore honorably discharged, are exempted from this prohibition.

The report contains no reference to what was the main topic of discussion before the judiciary committee in the early stages of the convention—the question whether Judges should be elected or appointed by the Governor. While a majority of the members favored an appointive judiciary, the plan was abandoned because of the general belief that the change would not be popular with the people and might endanger the proposed new Constitution when referred to the voters for ratification.

5TH AV. SHOPS FACE STRIKE.

5,000 Girls in Dressmaking Establishments Seek Increase.

Jacob L. Banach, Secretary of Local 38 of the International Ladies' Garment Makers' Union, said yesterday that Local 38, which is composed of tailors who work for the most part for fashionable dressmaking shops on Fifth Avenue, that preparations were being made for a strike next month.

The present agreement of this union with the employers expires on Sept. 17. Mr. Banach said that there were nearly 5,000 girls in fashionable dressmaking shops who received about $5 a week and worked fifty-four hours. The officials of the union, he said, had started a campaign to organize them before the time came to decide whether to call a strike.

"The union is not ready to announce what its demands will be," said Mr. Banach, "but the main part of them will be for better wages and shorter hours for the girl employes who are not yet organized. This year has been unusually prosperous for the fashionable dressmaking shops in this city. They have created most of their own models, at far less expense than those formerly purchased in Paris, and they have sold high-priced gowns to thousands of women who ordinarily would buy their clothes abroad.

"The schedule of wages under the present agreement runs from $27 a week for first-class workmen to $17 and $19 for helpers. Whether an increase over these figures will be asked cannot be said yet."

15-YEAR FUGITIVE CAUGHT.

Isaac Drucker Accused of Stealing Chickens Worth $35.

MINEOLA, L. I., Aug. 13.—After having been a fugitive from justice since March, 1900, Isaac Drucker, who was a butcher at Brownsville, East New York, is in the Nassau County Jail awaiting trial under an indictment charging him with stealing $35 worth of chickens from Townsend D. Cocks, a farmer of Oyster Bay, now deceased.

Drucker pleaded not guilty and was released on $2,000 bail. When the time came for trial Drucker's bondsman, Edward Lebor of Newark, N. J., could not find him, and the bail was forfeited. About two weeks ago Lebor met Drucker in Newark and Drucker was arrested.

Drucker said today that he went to England and then to Russia during his absence. He said he was in business at 98 Prince Street, Newark, as a butcher.

PAWNSHOP ROBBERY OF $12,000 CLEARED

Morris Dickler, Clerk for Adolph Stern, Planned It, the Police Say.

TWO ARRESTED, CONFESS

After Two Rehearsals, Three in Store at Third Avenue and 85th Street Were Bound on Jan. 30.

Morris Dickler, a young clerk in the pawnshop of Adolph Stern, at Third Avenue and Eighty-fifth Street, was arrested last night on the charge of having instigated and planned the robbery of Stern's pawnshop on the morning of Jan. 30 last. Jewelry worth $12,000 was taken by robbers who held up Dickler, Jerome Stern, a son of the proprietor, and Edward Schwartz, another clerk in the store. According to the police, Dickler, who was arrested at Lenox Avenue and 116th Street, has confessed. He is 20 years old, and lives at 1,590 Madison Avenue.

The arrest follows that of Tony de Lalla at Waterbury, Conn., on Wednesday night. De Lalla told the police about Dickler. They are still looking for two other men.

According to the police story Dickler one day last Winter heard Jerome Stern say that if robbers ever entered the store he would follow the counsels of prudence and make no resistance. This started Dickler to thinking how easy it would be to rob the place, which is one of the oldest and best known in the Yorkville neighborhood.

Say Dickler Rehearsed Hold-Up.

Dickler, it is said, got into communication with a friend and told him what he wanted. The friend hired two gunmen, one of whom was said to be de Lalla, and they began to rehearse for the big act. On the morning of Jan. 28 two of the three who were to commit the robbery entered the store one after the other and began to look at small articles of jewelry. An automobile waited outside.

The third man, who it is said was de Lalla, came in and asked for a suit-case. This was the signal, and Dickler replied with a code remark indicating that conditions were not favorable. The same thing was done the next day with the same result.

On the morning of the 30th two men were in the store looking at pins and rings when de Lalla came in and told Jerome Stern, after the sign had been given by Dickler, that he hadn't yet found a suitcase to suit him and would like to see what they had in stock.

Just as Stern was getting a suitcase down from a shelf the three customers drew their guns and held up the three clerks. All were bound and gagged and locked up in the back room, and then the robbers proceeded to go through the store in a leisurely manner, even emptying the cash register. They got away with jewelry worth $12,000.

Jerome Stern, who was the first to work himself loose from his bonds, gave the alarm later and detectives from the Third Branch started to work.

Trade Dollar a Clue.

But for a long time the police found nothing. Then in a Third Avenue pawnshop they found a trade dollar, which Adolph Stern recognized as part of his property, and they began to trace it back along a trail which eventually led them, through observation of the movements of a girl, to Tony de Lalla, who had started in business as a peddler in Waterbury, Conn.

Detective Felix di Martini of Headquarters went up there on Wednesday and arrested de Lalla, and when he was brought back to town he confessed, according to the police, and told them that Dickler had started the whole thing.

Dickler at first denied any knowledge of it, but when Detectives Kahn and Meyers, who arrested him last night, took him to the Third Branch and confronted him with de Lalla, he broke down, according to the police, and confessed everything. It is said that the plunder was divided into four shares, one to de Lalla, one to Dickler, one each to the other robber and to Dickler's friend, both of whom are still at large.

Most of the Loot Intact.

The police went last night to the home of de Lalla at 300 East 119th treet and found there from $2,000 to $2,500 worth of the jewelry that was identified as having been taken from the Stern store.

According to the police practically none of the stolen property has been disposed of except some old gold which was melted down and some jewelry, which de Lalla is said to have sold to set himself up in business. It is expected that nearly all of it will be recovered within a few days.

De Lalla, who was arraigned before Magistrate Ten Eyck in Harlem Court yesterday morning, was remanded in the custody of Acting Captain Jones of the Third Branch until next Tuesday.

TWO GIRL BATHERS DROWN.

Third Rescued by Man Who Dives from a Motor Boat.

Special to The New York Times.

RED BANK, N. J., Aug. 13.—Stepping off the beach in front of William E. English's estate on the north side of the Shrewsbury River into a dredged place, Alice Green, 15 years old, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Green of 1,019 East 165th Street, New York, suddenly sank today. Mabel Reichards, 17 years old, and her sister Helen, 20, daughters of Mrs. J. H. Reichards of 12 Emmett Street, Newark, tried to save her. The three were soon struggling in deep water, unable to swim and crying for help.

Miss Green and Mabel Reichards sank for the last time just before rescuers arrived. Helen Reichards was saved by Herbert Schneider of Fairhaven, who dived from his motor boat without stopping the engine and carried the unconscious young woman to shore. Dr. Browning Wilson revived her. Chief of Police Harry Clayton, with employes from the English estate, grappled for the bodies and soon had them on shore.

The three girls and Mrs. Reichards were stopping with Alice Green's uncle, William Green, at his chicken farm in Fairhaven. Mrs. Reichards warned the girls against going out in a rowboat, as they could not row or swim, but the water looked too inviting on a hot day for them to resist. They crossed the river and went in bathing, when the tragedy occurred.

Y., yesterday afternoon, according to a message received by his parents from their daughter, Mrs. Walter Foster of Port Jervis, N. Y.

Mrs. Foster telegraphed that she had received a telegram from her brother, who said he had ridden to Middletown and was then starting to ride to his sister's home at Port Jervis, about twenty miles away.

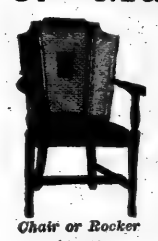
The Adaptable Chair of Mahogany-Cane



Chair or Rocker $17.50

There is no style in which utility and attractiveness combine to better advantage. Light in weight but strongly made of solid mahogany and good stout cane, comfortable in the extreme, with its broad variety in design and its soft, antique finish, a chair of this type is a most desirable element in the furnishing of any living room, library or hall.

We are showing many different styles in mahogany-cane chairs. The three illustrated are priced especially low this week. Some of the other prices are $21.50, $22.00, $27.00, $30.00, $33.00, $39.00.

NOTE CALLS ON MEXICANS TO UNITE; ASKS LEADERS TO REPLY IN 10 DAYS; FIVE STATES READY TO TALK PEACE

APPEAL WITHOUT THREATS

Offers Aid Of All Signers to Arrange for a Conference.

SPREAD ABROAD IN MEXICO

Carranza's Attitude Offers Little Hope, but Envoys Will Await His Reply.

FUNSTON GETS MORE MEN

Regiment of Infantry and Two Batteries of Artillery Added to Brownsville Guard.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—The State Department this evening made public the official text of the appeal to the Mexican factionists to compose their differences and set up an orderly Government. This appeal, signed by the Secretary of State of the United States, the Ambassadors of Brazil, Chile and Argentina, and the Ministers of Bolivia, Uruguay, and Guatemala, suggests in the courteous tone that characterizes the whole document that an answer will be expected in ten days.

There is no threat expressed or implied in the appeal. It is an appeal in the fullest meaning of the word. The signatories of the communication offer their "friendly and disinterested help" to obtain a solution of the Mexican problem. They refer to their proposal as "this friendly appeal." No suggestion is contained as to any step that might be taken if the appeal goes unheeded. Nothing in the phraseology of the document is calculated to give offense to the most punctilious Mexican factionist.

The direct proposal contained in the appeal is that the military and political leaders of the present armed movements in Mexico get together personally or through representatives "to exchange ideas and to determine the fate of the country," with the intention of reaching an agreement for establishing a Provisional Government which would issue a call for a general election, in accordance with the provisions of the republic's Constitution. It is suggested that the leaders or their delegate "meet far from the sound of cannon," but within the borders of their country. All those who sign the appeal offer their services in concert or singly to help arrange the time, place, and other details.

Envoys Act Independently.

One of the striking features of the communication is the statement that it is signed by the Secretary of State and the six Latin diplomats, "severally and independently," but "unanimously." There is nothing in the note to indicate that these seven signatories signed the appeal in behalf of their Governments, although that might be inferred from the fact that they attach their titles to their autographs and in the preface to the appeal describe themselves by their formal rank without mentioning their names. "Severally and independently" has been authoritatively explained as meaning that, while all the signatures were attached to one note, each signatory was not bound by any joint agreement, but was free to pursue his own course as if the others had not been parties to the arrangement. It is also stated specifically that the signatory officials had met "informally" at the suggestion of Secretary Lansing. The impression evidently sought to be conveyed by the careful language of the note is that those who signed it were acting for themselves and not for their Governments in any formal way.

Those who understand the character of the Mexican people are of the opinion that the appeal is of the sort best calculated to make a favorable impression on the leaders of the fighting factions and to remove any impression from their minds that the seven signatories approach their task in a truculent spirit. It is viewed as the soft approach that invites a soft answer. Officials most concerned in the movement to bring peace to Mexico feel that, in giving the Mexicans no cause for offense and in showing that no ulterior purpose is behind the appeal, the opportunity will be presented to leaders who are tired of the constant fighting to show a spirit of willingness to adhere to the plan.

In sending out the appeal by telegraph, it has not been addressed merely to Carranza, Villa, and Zapata, the heads of the factions usually designated by their names, but to the Governors of the Mexican States, whether Carrancistas, Villistas or Zapatistas, and also to military and political chiefs of the various movements. For example, the appeal was cabled yesterday to Mexico City for distribution through the representatives there of the various nations concerned, to the Carranza generals. Other men not known in this country are leaders in the Mexican struggle will get copies of the appeal addressed to them individually. As is stated in the few lines of introduction printed on the official copies of the note, the communication has been sent to "many prominent persons in Mexico who possess political authority or military power within the Republic."

Original in Spanish.

The text of the note as furnished to the press by the State Department this evening is a translation from the Spanish, in which it was written originally. While in some respects it resembles the formal warning issued by President Wilson to the Mexican factions on June 8, its language is softer and less direct

Text of the Pan-American Appeal to Mexicans Calling for Joint Conference to Save Their Country

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—The Pan-American appeal to Mexico, made public here tonight by the State Department, is prefaced by this announcement:

"The Mexican people are informed that the following communication has been sent to many prominent persons in Mexico who possess authority or military power within the Republic."

Then follows the appeal, which reads:

Washington, D. C., Aug. 11.

The undersigned, the Secretary of State of the United States, the Ambassadors Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of Brazil, Chile, and Argentina, and the Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of Bolivia, Uruguay and Guatemala, accredited to the Government of the United States of America, acting severally and independently, unanimously send to you the following communication:

Inspired by the most sincere spirit of American fraternity, and convinced that they rightly interpret the earnest wish of the entire continent, have met informally at the suggestion of the Secretary of State of the United States to consider the Mexican situation and to ascertain whether their friendly and disinterested help could be successfully employed to re-establish peace and constitutional order in our sister Republic.

In the heat of the frightful struggle which for so long has steeped in blood the Mexican soil, doubtless all may well have lost sight of the dissolving effects of the strife upon the most vital conditions of the national existence, not only upon the life and liberty of the inhabitants, but on the prestige and security of the country. We cannot doubt, however—no one can doubt—that in the presence of a sympathetic appeal from their brothers of America, recalling to them these disastrous effects, asking them to save their motherland from an abyss—no one can doubt, we repeat—that the patriotism of the men who lead or aid in any way the bloody strife will not remain unmoved; no one can doubt that each and every one of them, measuring in his own conscience his share in the responsibilities of past misfortune and looking forward to his share in the glory of the pacification and reconstruction of the country, will respond, nobly and resolutely, to this friendly appeal and give their best efforts to opening the way to some saving action.

We, the undersigned, believe that if the men directing the armed movements in Mexico—whether political or military chiefs—should agree to meet, either in person or by delegates, far from the sound of cannon, and with no other inspiration save the thought of their afflicted land, there to exchange ideas and to determine the fate of the country—from such action would undoubtedly result the strong and unyielding agreement requisite to the creation of a provisional government, which should adopt the first steps necessary to the constitutional reconstruction of the country—and to issue the first and most essential of them all, the immediate call to general elections.

An adequate place within the Mexican frontiers, which for the purpose might be neutralized, should serve as the seat of the conference, and in order to bring about a conference of this nature the undersigned, or any of them, will willingly, upon invitation, act as intermediaries to arrange the time, place, and other details of such conference, if this action can in any way aid the Mexican people.

The undersigned expect a reply to this communication within a reasonable time and consider that such a time would be ten days after the communication is delivered, subject to prorogation for cause.

ROBERT LANSING, Secretary of State of the United States.
D. DA GAMA, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of Brazil.
EDO. SUAREZ-MUJICA, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of Chile.
R. S. NAON, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of Argentina.
I. CALDERON, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Bolivia.
CARLOS MARIA DE PENA, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Uruguay.
JOAQUIN MENDEZ, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Guatemala.

FINDS HER FATHER SLAIN BY ROBBER

Miss Sophie Hildebrandt Comes on Parent's Body in Hall of Their Fifth Av. Home.

ATTACKED AS HE SLEPT

Prominent Real Estate Man Heard to Scream by Neighbor, Who Didn't Investigate.

Tenants of the apartment house at 1,446 Fifth Avenue, near 117th Street, were aroused shortly after 10 o'clock last night by the screams of Miss Sophie Hildebrandt, daughter of John Hildebrandt, a retired real estate dealer and the owner of the house in which he occupied one of the top floor flats. The girl, who had ascended the stairs with her mother, returning from a walk through the neighborhood, raced down the stairs crying that her father had been murdered.

In the street Policeman Sullivan of the West 123d Street Station heard her cries, learned of the murder and ran back with her. He found Hildebrandt lying on his back in the private hallway of his home between the dining room and the parlor. He was clothed except for his coat and vest. There was blood around him and he had been shot through the heart. There were bruises on his forehead, and the teeth in the upper left jaw had been knocked out by a heavy blow.

The apartment showed that there had been a struggle. There was blood on Mr. Hildebrandt's bed and there were the marks there as well of a pair of muddy shoes. Apparently the house owner had been attacked by a burglar who had thrown himself on his victim as Mr. Hildebrandt lay asleep.

A neighbor in the flat below told the police that he had heard the muffled report of a revolver shot about 8:30 o'clock and had heard also a faint cry for help but he said he had paid no attention to these as he didn't want to get into trouble. Apparently no one else in the house had heard the struggle or the report of the weapon.

The flat adjoining that of the Hildebrandts on the same floor is vacant. The police found that a window opening on a fire escape in this apartment had been cut out, and marks in the dust showed that some one had entered there. How they got into the Hindebrandt flat puzzles the police. They might believe that Mr. Hildebrandt had admitted his assailant were it not for the marks of shoes on the bed clothes. These they believe indicate that the struggle which ended with Mr. Hildebrandt's death began when he was in a nap on his bed.

Mrs. Hildebrandt said that when she and her daughter decided to take a walk

MAY PROSECUTE GERMAN AGENTS

Providence Journal Says Government Has Proof of Illegal Activities.

SECRET DOCUMENTS FOUND

Said to Implicate Boy-Ed and Papen in Many Violations of Our Neutrality.

Special to The New York Times.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sunday, Aug. 15.—The Providence Journal asserts this morning that the Government has obtained overwhelming evidence that officials of the German Embassy and many individuals have been concerned in "willful and persistent" violations of our neutrality laws, and is about to take action which will result in "sensational disclosures and many arrests."

"The Government," The Journal says, "has been placed in possession of a bag of documents which was found in the hands of a secret service agent of the German Government, and among these documents has been found positive proof of German official activities against the peace of the United States. The German Embassy discovered the loss of this bag of documents only yesterday, and Count von Bernstorff will not know until he reads this statement that this entire mass of material is in the hands of the United States Government.

Traced to Boy-Ed.

"Aided by these documents and also by many material facts that have already come into the hands of Secret Service officers and Cabinet officials, the Government is now in a position to prove, and The Journal is able to state positively the following facts:

"That the passport frauds in New York and elsewhere, the fraud in connection with the Stegler case and all the mass of corruption that was woven about the entire passport plot, have been traced directly to the personal activities of Captain Karl Boy-Ed, the Naval Attaché of the German Embassy.

"That a list of names of German reservist officers in this country who were to be returned to Europe on forged passports is in the hands of the United States Government; that this list was secured directly from a German Government official, and that the list was headed with the name of Captain Horn, the man who attempted

Battle for Conscription Opens in England; Lloyd George May Back the Conscriptionists

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—An organized campaign for conscription will be started in England next week. All Lord Northcliffe's energy and mediums of publicity, it is said, will be devoted to this purpose.

Lord Northcliffe's plans have been in the making for some time. By means of his papers he has long been preparing the ground. He will now organize an extension of the campaign in the direction of public meetings, lectures, demonstrations, and so forth, which are intended to reach those of the population throughout the country among whom his newspapers do not circulate. He has enlisted the support of many influential persons, including, it is reported, more than one Cabinet Minister.

His chief support, it is said, will come from David Lloyd George, the Munitions Minister, who will, it is expected, come out at the crucial moment with a declaration that conscription is necessary ro victory.

Lord Northcliffe will not be allowed to have it all his own way. His plans, quietly laid though they have been, are known to the anti-conscriptionists, and counterplans have been arranged on an extensive scale. It will be a battle royal and prediction of the result cannot be made.

Several Ministers have admitted more or less specifically that if it were proved that conscription were a necessary step to victory, they would not oppose it. With the majority of the members of the present Coalition Cabinet, however, the point made is that voluntary enlistment has not yet been proved a failure.

There can be no objection to stating, as has been stated in the press here, that the voluntary enlistment system still continues to bring in more men than it is possible to equip, even at this stage of the war.

From one point of view this is an argument in favor of conscription, for it is argued that were compulsion the law of the land, there would have been by this time no inadequacy of equipment. It is on this aspect of the question that Lloyd George is believed to be in favor of conscription, or, as it is better described, compulsory service.

Some of Lord Northcliffe's political and journalistic opponents profess to see in his coming campaign a scheme to bring about the downfall of the present Cabinet. Their belief is based on the assumption that the Coalition Cabinet, as at present constituted, would not agree to bring in a compulsory service bill. Premier Asquith in particular is believed to be a strong adherent of voluntary enlistment, which, he thinks, has shown Great Britain to be animated with a spirit of patriotism such as no amount of misrepresentation can depreciate in the eyes of the intelligent world.

Should the coming campaign produce popular effervescence, which the existing Government could not afford to disregard, then, it is argued, Mr. Asquith and the other Ministers who think as he does would be obliged to resign their posts in order to make way for a Government which would carry out the popular behest.

That, according to his opponents, is really the object which Lord Northcliffe has in view. His friends, on the other hand, are equally convinced that his motives are sincere and that he is convinced that only compulsory service can bring into play the whole might of Great Britain in what is recognized to be a life and death struggle.

7 BATHERS DROWN; MANY OTHERS SAVED

One Man, Caught by Undertow at Rockaway Beach, Is Swept Out to Sea.

PULMOTOR FAILS IN 2 CASES

Girl of 12, Paddling Alone in Canoe, Upsets in Twenty-five Feet of Water.

Six persons were drowned yesterday near the city and another man was swept to sea and his body was not recovered. One other was drowned at Long Branch, N. J. There were several rescues also, for the heat drove great crowds to the beaches.

At Rockaway Beach, Jack Lapidus of 61 Diermer Street, who had entered the water at the foot of Eldert Avenue, was caught in the undertow, carried out, and disappeared despite the efforts of life guards to reach him.

His brother-in-law, William Keller, of 1,174 Bryant Avenue, the Bronx, and John Smith of 26 South Chase Avenue, Rockaway Beach, got Frank F. Schiff of 1,182 West Farms Road, the Bronx, ashore after he had been taken with cramps off Summerfield Avenue, Rockaway Beach, but Dr. Victor of the Rockaway Beach Hospital could not resuscitate him, though he worked for an hour with a pulmotor. Schiff was a rug manufacturer at 38 West Twenty-second Street.

Frank Connell of 38 Kane Avenue, Rockaway Beach, was brought ashore at the same point by Charles Ferguson, a lifeguard, but, as with Schiff, he could not be resuscitated.

Policeman Israel Neuman, who was swimming at Edgemere, got Samuel Jackson of Oceanus Court, Rockaway Beach, ashore after Jackson collapsed in the water, but the rescue was too late, though Dr. Deutch of St. Joseph's Hospital, Far Rockaway, tried for a long time to resuscitate him.

Noble Breen, 25 years old, of 515 West 132d Street was drowned off 145th Street in the North River. With two friends he dived off a rock and did not reappear. John and James Brennan of 102 West 44th Street, members of the Volunteer Life-Saving Corps, recovered the body.

Cyril Snate, an East Indian, thought to be about 40 years old, was drowned while bathing at Long Branch, N. J. Snate was employed as a waiter at a hotel. He entered the surf opposite Madison Avenue and started for a long swim. When almost opposite Cooper Avenue he disappeared. A fisherman returning from the banks saw him go down, but it was too deep to locate the body. He was identified by papers in his coat. The body was not recovered.

Life guards at Wildwood, N. J., recovered the body of Robert, 11 years old, son of Rodger Delaney of 5,555 Boyer Street, Philadelphia, when it came ashore at the foot of Young Avenue. Coroner Ingersoll found that the boy had ruptured a blood vessel near the heart. His parents, who were at the Hotel Arlington, said Robert had left home in the afternoon for a swim.

Eleven rescues were made at Wildwood by life guards yesterday, the sea being very rough.

Miss Grace Schwartz, 20 years old, of 318 Henry Street, Brooklyn, was taken with cramps while swimming about fifty feet out from the beach at the foot of West Thirtieth Street, Coney Island, and was rescued by other bathers in the water near her. She was taken to the beach unconscious, where she was revived by Dr. Held of the Coney Island Hospital.

Hyman Stieber, 22 years old, a clerk, of 258 Peelman Avenue, the Bronx, was rescued by bathers near the same place when he shouted that he was cramped. He was towed to shore and was able to leave without medical aid.

While swimming in Newark Bay off City Park, Bayonne, yesterday, Gabriel Annunziato, aged 30, was saved from drowning by 19-year-old Nathan Goodman. Annunziato was taken with cramps, his cries were heard by Goodman, who sprang overboard in his clothes. Goodman was grabbed about the neck by the drowning man and dragged beneath the surface, but he managed to shake off Annunziato, and, getting hold of his hair, got him ashore. Many persons who witnessed the rescue cheered Goodman.

At Lake Hopatcong, N. J., R. L. Armstrong, a patron at Castle Edward, saved a girl about 12 years old from drowning in the River Styx. The girl refused to give her name, and her name was refused at Key Waden Cottage, where she was taken.

The girl was paddling alone in a canoe in twenty-five feet of water. Armstrong noticed that she was sitting on the wrong side of the canoe, and remarked to bystanders that she was in danger of overturning the boat. He continued to watch the canoe and occupant for a few minutes, when his prophecy was fulfilled.

GROUT OUT ON BAIL PENDING AN APPEAL

Justice Scudder Grants Certificate of Reasonable Doubt to ex-Bank President.

TRIED ON WRONG AFFIDAVIT

Court Holds He Was Convicted of a Crime for Which He Had Not Been Indicted.

Former City Controller Edward M. Grout, who was found guilty of perjury in swearing to a false report of the financial condition of the Union Bank, of which he was President, received a certificate of reasonable doubt as to the legality of his conviction yesterday afternoon from Supreme Court Justice Townsend Scudder in Brooklyn. Mr. Grout was at once admitted to bail in the sum of $5,000, pending an appeal from the judgment of the trial court, and was released from the jail. The bond was furnished by a surety company.

Mr. Grout was convicted on July 24 before County Judge Lewis, after a trial which lasted about nine weeks. He was sentenced to Sing Sing Prison for not less than one year nor more than two years. A stay of execution of sentence was granted by Judge Lewis in order that Stephen C. Baldwin, counsel for the defendant, might move for the certificate of reasonable doubt and prepare for an appeal.

The many exceptions taken by Mr. Baldwin in the course of the trial were considered by Justice Scudder, but the chief point which influenced him to grant the certificate was the contention that Grout was convicted on an affidavit other than that on which the indictment against him was found. It appeared that Grout was indicted for falsifying a statement to the State Banking Department, whereas he was tried on a published statement of the same nature. Although there was a difference of but a few words in the two statements, Justice Scudder considered that the divergence was such as to invalidate the trial.

"If the record supports defendant's contention that such change in the indictment was made by the trial court," said Justice Scudder, "beyond question the judgment of conviction was obtained without the due process of law, as prescribed by the Constitution of New York State, and is void. The trial court in this case, by its rulings, in effect did amend the indictment so as to place the defendant upon trial for a different crime than that set forth in the indictment and tried him for an offense for which he had not been indicted by a grand jury.

"There is no power in a trial judge to indict. Yet that is what happened here. The defendant was indicted for perjury in swearing to the affidavit attached to the 'Report of the Condition of the Union Bank' and was tried and convicted of perjury without an indictment by the Grand Jury, in swearing to the affidavit attached to the 'Quarterly Report of the Union Bank,' a different, separate and distinct paper.

"The indictment upon which the defendant was brought to trial alleged no crime if the views expressed by the trial judge are correct, because it alleged no falsity in any oath required by law. The defendant was tried and convicted of a crime for which he had not been indicted, and for which, without indictment, legally he could not be brought to trial."

Justice Scudder was one of the members of the judiciary criticized by District Attorney Cropsey in a public speech in which he referred to certain of the judges who heard preliminary motions in the Grout case as "bosom friends" of the defendant and as "hand-picked" judges. When the application for a certificate of reasonable doubt came before Justice Scudder, Mr. Cropsey objected to Justice Scudder sitting in judgment in the matter. As to the District Attorney's challenge, Justice Scudder had this to say in his memorandum yesterday:

"The court, after due consideration of the District Attorney's statements and the affidavits which he has filed, finds nothing therein which justifies the changing of its rulings made upon the hearing of the motion that it is not biased. The court deems itself without power to direct that this motion be heard by another Justice, and holds mandatory the law directing applications for certificates of reasonable doubt to be made to a regularly appointed Special Term of the Supreme Court."

Austria made a similar reply to the Pope's letter, the dispatch adds.

BERLIN, Aug. 14.—That the German censorship is beginning to give significant latitude to the discussion of peace conditions is indicated by the fact that the papers print the following manifesto of the Young Liberal Associations of Greater Berlin:

"In this decisive time all parties must work together with their whole strength to see that when peace is concluded it brings repayment for our huge sacrifices in the form of permanent security against new attacks, and freedom for development for our people through better and extended boundaries in the west and east."

The German press gives space to reports of peace movements in America, most of the papers refraining from comment. The Vossische Zeitung says: "The suggestion that in return for an ammunition embargo hopes have been held out to Mr. Wilson of acting as peace mediator doesn't need to be denied. The question of Mr. Wilson as peace mediator has been too clearly expressed for the press. After the stand President Wilson has taken from the beginning of the war he is regarded in Germany as utterly unfit for the rôle of mediator. Were he to offer his good offices it would merely fall under The Hague rule that such an offer must not be considered an unfriendly act. It is certain, though, that we should not regard it as a friendly or even a non-partisan act. People in England need not get anxious about it. Mr. Wilson's mediation need no longer be even considered, since only a beaten Germany could be induced to accept it. But what would it profit our enemies were he to mediate between them and a victorious Germany? The victor can easily make concessions which he would refuse to make if there was an appearance of his being forced to make them by a little benevolent third party."

GERMAN LIBERAL PARTY IS SPLIT

Majority, Radically Annexationist, Distrusts Bethmann-Hollweg as a Moderate.

IT ATTACKS HIM OPENLY

He Wins Over Minority Leaders, but a Clash in the Reichstag Seems Inevitable.

From a Staff Correspondent.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 14.—The war fever which first infected the Social-Democratic Party, splitting it into at least three main warring factions, has now spread to the National Liberal Party, in which a lively fight is developing, with infinite news possibilities for the future; the importance and interest for American readers being that it may soon result in wide-open discussion of the forbidden topic of peace conditions.

The bulk of the National Liberal Party, including its important press organs, apparently stands squarely back of its leader, Ernst Bassermann, member of the Reichstag, and his political aids, Führmann and Bachmeister. This triumvirate, backed by the party majority, stands for a forceful Bismarckian policy. They represent the extreme annexationists, with the establishment of a greater Germany as a war program. Their idea of the right price of peace is most of the hostile territory now occupied by the German armies, particularly the rich coal and iron industrial districts of France and Belgium.

Bassermann is the Bryan of Germany in being in a perennially receptive mood for high office, the Chancellorship bee buzzing in his bonnet, and the fact that his principal political asset is florid oratory. Here the similarity ends, for, unlike the peace-loving Bryan, Bassermann would play the rôle of a super-Bismarck, and, moreover, he has "the interests" back of him—the powerful German industrial interests.

Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg's non-committal statements as to Germany's "Kriegsziele," or concrete war ends, backed up by the military censorship's impartial suppression of newspaper discussion of this interesting topic "in the interest of the nation," have got on the nerves of Herr Bassermann and his partisans, who fear that the Chancellor is against annexation in the grand style they advocate, and who see a clever political manoeuvre to sidetrack them till it is too late for them to participate successfully in formulating the peace conditions; in other words, they fear that the peace terms will be dictated by the Government, and that outsiders will have nothing to say about them.

This has resulted in repeated insistent demands for a free discussion of Germany's concrete war aims and veiled attacks on Bethmann-Hollweg—attacks becoming more obvious and finally undisguised.

In the hope of ending attacks which might give encouragement to Germany's enemies and thus prolong the war, the Chancellor invited the leaders of the National Liberal Party to a conference, from which, however, Bassermann and his associates stayed away. To the seven National Liberal leaders who attended it the Chancellor made a highly important specific statement about the Government's intentions, the nature of which is the subject of nation-wide speculation today; but the secret is closely guarded by all who were present.

As a result, however, these seven leaders have issued a round-robin testimonial expressing confidence in the Chancellor and his policy. Their action has divided the National Liberal Party into two warring factions, and sensational developments may be expected when the

GERMANS ADVANCE ON BREST-LITOVSK

Prince Leopold of Bavaria and Mackensen Approach from West and South.

FORMER NOW NEAR THE BUG

Battles Developing on Northern Front, Berlin Reports—Russians Leave Little Behind.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—While the apparent improvement of the situation on the eastern front has brought renewed expressions of confidence in the allied countries, the Austro-Germans continue their victorious advance in the centre and southwest.

The absence from official reports of any mention of the capture of guns or munitions, however, indicates that the towns and positions which are being occupied by the invaders all are well evacuated before their arrival.

Field Marshal von Mackensen has resumed his advance between the Vieprz and the Bug after being delayed for several days by Russian counterattacks. Tonight's Vienna report says he has occupied the district of Wisznice, southwest of Brest-Litovsk. Prince Leopold of Bavaria is approaching the Bug River from Sokolow on his left wing, while his main front is reported east of the line of Losyce-Miedzyrzecz, about thirty miles from Brest-Litovsk.

The Germans announce the capture of a "fortified forest" before Kovno and an outpost position of Novo Georgievsk. In the far north of their line they say new engagements are developing southwest of Dvinsk.

Berlin and Vienna Report Gains.

BERLIN, Aug. 14, (via Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—The following official report on the eastern operations was given out today:

North of the Niemen River, in the region of Allesow, Kubiski, Weschinty and Kowarsz, new engagements developed.

Before Kovno our attacking troops captured the fortified forest of Domino Kanka. We took 350 prisoners.

Between the Narew and the Bug Rivers our armies reached, during a sharp pursuit, the Slina and Murzew sections, where our opponents had made a new stand.

North of Novo Georgievsk a strong outpost position was taken by storm. Nine officers and 1,800 men and four machine guns fell into our hands.

Prince Leopold of Bavaria's troops are approaching the Bug River also, northeast of Sokolow.

To the east of the Losyce-Miedzyrzec line (near Warsaw) the enemy attempted to stop our advance by stubborn counterattacks. All the attacks were repulsed.

Field Marshal von Mackensen defeated the enemy in battles on Aug. 10 and Aug. 11. Our opponents did not find sufficient strength yesterday to resist the advancing Teutonic allied troops longer. Our armies reached, during the pursuit, the highroad of Radsyn-Dawidy-Vladova.

VIENNA, Aug. 14, (via London.)—The following official statement was issued today at the Austrian War Office:

In the district of the Bug advancing allied troops again drove before them the rearguards of the retreating enemy. Austro-Hungarian forces advancing on both sides of the railway from Lukow to Brest-Litovsk reached the sector west of Miedzyrzecz.

German troops conquered the district of Wisznice and advanced across the Rolodawa.

In East Galicia there is nothing new to report.

Russians Admit Few Changes.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 14.—This official statement was given out today:

In the region of Riga there was no essential change on Friday. Near Jacobstadt, Dvinsk, and Vilkomir the enemy attempted by counterattacks to

BALKAN DECISION NEAR

Bulgaria Awaits Terms and Serbs' Action Is Uncertain.

ALLIES COUNTING ON GREECE

Expect Support of Venizelos, but King Constantine Is Still Firm for Neutrality.

LONDON IS OPTIMISTIC

Looks for Reorganized Balkan League of Intervention Founded on Mutual Concessions.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—Affairs in the Balkans are approaching a crisis. While diplomatic negotiations are proceeding in an effort to induce States still neutral to cast their lot with one side or the other, the troops of the central powers massed on the Balkan frontiers are planning, it is believed, to force a way through to relieve Turkey, who is believed to be badly in need of shells.

The concentration of these troops, which has been followed by an artillery attack on Serbian positions, is equally a menace to Rumania, which again has refused to permit shells to pass through her territory to Turkey. The Rumanian Army is already partly mobilized, and four new divisions of reserves have been called out.

Bulgaria has as yet made no move while awaiting the reply of the Quadruple Entente to her demand that Serbia and Greece concede Macedonia to her in return for her military support. This answer probably will be forthcoming after the meeting of the Greek and Serbian Parliaments next week.

While the Serbians point out what they consider the unfairness of the Bulgarian demand, they show an inclination to make some concessions to obtain the support of their former ally.

Greece is more firm in her refusal, but it is believed here that there may be a change in her policy when former Premier Venizelos returns to power, although he has a strong pro-German party opposed to him, and, according to a telegram from Berlin tonight, King Constantine will offer him the Premiership only on the understanding that strict neutrality shall be maintained. This was the point upon which the King and M. Venizelos disagreed when a new Cabinet was appointed and Parliament was dissolved.

Inasmuch as M. Venizelos was supported by the people at a general election it was thought the King might fall into line, but the dispatch from Berlin indicates that he has not changed his views. Should Bulgaria attack Serbia, however, Greece is bound by treaty obligations to support Serbia as her ally.

LONDON EXPECTANT OF BALKAN SUPPORT

Believes Diplomatic Struggle Is Now Turning in Allies' Favor.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—I have obtained from competent sources confirmation of the reports that the position in the Balkans has recently taken a turn very favorable to the Quadruple Entente and learn that developments of capital importance are expected within the very near future.

The official statement issued at Bucharest that the Rumanian Finance Ministry has given a point-blank refusal to the German commercial attaché's request that munitions be allowed to pass through into Bulgaria is an indication that the Rumanian Government has no fear of Germany's threat of energetic action. A Teutonic move upon Rumania would be exposed to a flank attack by the Russians through Bessarabia, and Germany would not take such a risk unless assured of Bulgarian neutrality.

Though it is not yet possible to make a definite statement on this point, it is confidently asserted that the probability is that, far from remaining neutral, Bulgaria will soon take action on the side of the Allies. Even the Berliner Tageblatt's Balkan correspondent, in a dispatch published this week, admits that the Entente's negotiations with Bulgaria have made alarming progress. This correspondent foresees the union of the four Balkan powers, Bulgaria, Serbia, Greece and Rumania.

"These four powers," he says, "thus constitute, as it were, a congress which proposes to settle the Balkan question on its own authority. That is either the first step of a serious threat of the Balkan States or the biggest piece of bluff that English brains have ever devised. It is realized in Greece that Bulgaria is to be prevented at the eleventh hour from coming to an understanding with Turkey, and the decision of Sofia is, therefore, awaited with anxiety."

The double-barreled interpretation which the Tageblatt correspondent offers of this apprehended check to German diplomacy is particularly noteworthy. The exact formulas employed by the Allies in their representations to Serbia and Greece are a diplomatic secret, but it is assumed here that allied diplomacy is competent to conceal the iron hand in the velvet glove—in other words, is able to employ arguments of effective persuasion in circumstances in which German diplomacy would have recourse to threats and blusterings such as have proved unsuccessful in Rumania's case.

Sympathy for Bulgaria.

Bulgaria's frankness has won much sympathy for her, particularly as it has come to be widely recognized that she was badly treated after the second Balkan war. In the main, her demands are adjudged reasonable. Only the assent of Serbia and Greece remain to be obtained. The Greek Parliament will meet on Monday, and Venizelos can assume charge of his country's interests whenever he desires. So far as Venizelos is concerned there could be no wish on the part of the Allies to pursue the policy of flogging a willing horse. The present Ministry is on record as refusing to consider the cession of the Kavala, Serres, and Drama districts, but in the wide eyes of a statesman like Venizelos the vision of Greek rule in Asia Minor has always been a glowing prospect.

As for Serbia, she is under a deep debt to the Allies—a debt which even now is being increased by the steps which England is taking to set the war-ridden country on its feet after the war.

All things considered, there exists but little apprehension that the diplomacy of the Allies will fail to find a solution of the problem of satisfying Bulgaria without hurting the susceptibilities of either Serbia or Greece and thereby speedily opening up the Dardanelles for the double purpose of sending munitions to Russia and receiving from her the surplus production of two fine harvests.

The stage which the negotiations have reached has been unofficially described to me as highly satisfactory. There is ground for believing that the following summary, respecting which I must reiterate that it is unofficial, indicates the lines along which they have been proceeding.

Bulgaria's Strong Position.

Bulgarian adhesion being the first requisite, and Bulgaria being aware of this fact, the question whether her adhesion is obtainable can be solved only by making known to Bulgaria the assurances she can obtain by co-operation with the Allies. The Entente would naturally prefer to get Bulgaria's promise before possibly causing offense to Greece and Serbia, but Bulgaria naturally awaits that of the Entente. In fact, she has put her cards on the table.

The pivotal point is whether an arrangement can be reached whereby Bulgaria will co-operate forthwith if the Entente, in addition to the terms offered as to Thrace and Dobrudja, assures Bulgaria that in promising large acquisitions to Serbia and Greece the Entente will guarantee to Bulgaria the uncontested zone and Kavala, with the Serres and Drama districts, inform Serbia that the acquisitions will be conditional on the cession of the uncontested zone and let Greece understand that her acquisition will be conditional on the cession of the Kavala, Serres and Drama districts. The difficulties in the way of an arrangement are obvious, but the Allies have strong cards to play, and at the worst some authorities here believe it would be sounder policy to justify the Berliner Tageblatt's charges of "the serious threat of the Balkan States" and run the risks which are problematical and comparatively minor, that is, giving offense to Serbia and causing a rupture with Greece,) than to prolong the existing risk, which is real, that is, failure in the Dardanelles.

SAYS BULGARIA ASKS TOO MUCH OF SERBIA

But M. Boskovitch Hints That Serbia May Make Some Concessions.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—The declaration that Serbia's attitude toward the claims of Bulgaria was clear and that Serbia had never admitted that the Slavs in Macedonia were Bulgarians was made today by M. Boskovitch, Serbian Minister to London, in reply to claims recently put forward from authoritative Bulgarian sources.

"This was shown," M. Boskovitch said, "by the terms of the Serbo-Bulgarian treaty of 1912, in which Serbia agreed to recognize the right of Bulgaria only to territory lying east of the Rhodopes (a chain of mountains in Eastern Rumelia, partly in Macedonia and partly in Thrace,) and the Struma River. This concession, on which she attempts to base her present claims, was founded upon considerations of political expediency, and was offered on certain strictly defined conditions which have not been fulfilled. This letter fact, coupled with the intervention of Austria to our detriment and the aid which we rendered the Bulgarians at Adrianople, necessitated our requesting a revision of the treaty."

"We accepted the Russian proposal of arbitration which had been provided for in the treaty, and Bulgaria appeared prepared to arbitrate, but unexpectedly attacked us in June, 1913, thus precipitating the second Balkan war. In company with our ally, Greece, we beat the Bulgarians back to their old frontiers and thus obliged them to sign the treaty of Bucharest. It is perfectly obvious that this later treaty destroyed the treaty of 1912 and with it Bulgaria's claim to Macedonia.

"It is quite impossible to efface the tragic record of 1913 from history. Our sacrifices, forced upon us, were enormous. We now hold this territory by the double right of conquest and nationality. Further, it must be remembered that we now are obliged to regard Bulgaria not as a friend. Thus arises important strategical considerations for retaining our present possessions.

"Any attempt to demand concessions on the ground that Macedonians are of the Bulgarian race merely renders the problem more difficult of solution. Serbia never acknowledged this claim, and cannot enter upon any discussion based upon such an assumption. If certain concessions were made upon certain conditions it would be only for reasons of political expediency and in order to assist the general cause of the Allies, for to our view it would imply a surrender of part of Serbia and a population of Serbs.

"The existing deadlock calls for concessions on both sides. At present Bulgaria wants to take all and give nothing. She claims the maximum of her territorial pretensions and, what is perhaps more extraordinary, wants to take them immediately. Serbia alone is expected to make all the sacrifices. Truly, that could hardly be said to be fair play.

"Bulgaria professes that we need have no concern for our communications, which renders it all the more necessary that we should seek to safeguard our own interests. Bulgaria has nothing to expect from an Austro-German victory in the Balkans, as the whole of Macedonia with Saloniki would then pass into the procession of Austria after Serbia, and Bulgaria, in her turn, had been the victims of the Germans; and Turkey would take back at least part of her lost territories in the West.

"That is why Bulgaria could with good reason be more moderate and take account of what it is possible to do in the present circumstances. Meantime it is our business to hold ourselves ready to repel any further Austro-German attempt to break through to Constantinople and prevent the successful prosecution of the Anglo-French offensive against the Dardanelles."

SEVEN BRITISH JOKES.

Each a Former German Steamer with "Hun" In Its Name.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—Seven German steamers which have been taken over by the British Admiralty are listed in Lloyd's registry under British names, which all begin with Hun. Thus the Lantenefels is now the Hungerford and the Arnfried the Hunsdon.

The Manchester Guardian regards this as one of the best jokes of the war, and says the joke would be emphasized if a submarine sent one of the Hun boats to the bottom.

SAYS ALLIES WIN IF BALKANS UNITE

J. L. Garvin Urges Diplomats to Seize the Certainty of Victory.

CRITICISES EARLIER DELAYS

Success at the Dardanelles, He Says, Would Change the Whole Aspect of the War.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Sunday, Aug. 15.—J. L. Garvin, in his review of the week in The Observer, says of the Balkan situation:

"The Allies now know beyond the last shadow of doubt that they have it absolutely in their power to conquer Constantinople. They can open the strait and strike the one blow which would neutralize everything that the Germans have done in the Eastern theatre, and would insure the triumphant termination of the war.

"Here diplomacy, as in the time of Pitt and Marlborough, must be the author of certain victory. There could be no forgiveness in the present or in the sight of posterity for the statesmanship of the Quadruple Alliance should it now show itself unequal to its oportunities in the Balkans. Bulgaria has declared at last that she is ready to throw in her lot with the Allies upon terms that are not impossible. They are reasonable; they are in accordance with every principle and every interest for which the Allies are fighting, and we cannot now believe that a settlement will not be reached.

"Delicate work has to be done by the diplomacy of the four powers in their friendly representations at Nish, but in return for the immense sacrifices and efforts by the Allies as a whole, which have been and will yet be necessary to save Serbia from destruction since the beginning of the war, the Quadrupie Entente is entitled to expect from Serbia concessions in Macedonia which would be repaid over and over again by acquisitions elsewhere and would make certain the triumph of the common cause.

"We rejoice that the diplomacy of the Grand Alliance is at last taking the resolute and clear-sighted measures which ought to have been initiated with the greatest decision many months ago. The differences of view upon this point, with consequent irresolution and delay, have been from first to last the chief weakness in the whole policy and procedure of the Allies.

"The adhesion of Bulgaria would insure that of Rumania, which has done very much to forward a settlement. Rumania is in the position of Belgium, and the Central Empires demand with menaces a way through her territory, but the strong Latin kingdom of the Danube has over a million trained men ready to fight. Rumania knows what to do, but needs above all Bulgarian support. These two States alone could take action which would insure success at Gallipoli, the conquest of Constantinople and the straits, the opening of the Black Sea, the security and overwhelming recovery of Russia, the downfall of Austro-Hungary, and the final triumph of the present Allies and of all who may join them.

"More than that: Venizelos would return to power in Greece, still able to reverse the fatal policy that threatened all his work and to secure full compensation in return for the inevitable readjustments; a wider and more powerful league would mobilize all the forces of the Balkans; and, with the forces that Britain, France and Italy could command on what we call the middle front, the whole aspect of the war would be transformed. The Allies would be in sight of their goal at last and would be able to measure, stage by stage, the marches in front of them on the road to victory.

"Nothing whatever but failure to grasp these principles with thoroughness and determination, though late in the day, could imperil the general prospects of the Allies on the Continent.

"The Balkan States in their turn must always remember, and are not in the least likely to forget, that the four Powers alone would have it in their power in the last resort, by one means or another, to decide the fate of Constantinople with that of Asia Minor and the Turkish empire as a whole."

GREEK KING FOR NEUTRALITY.

Will Ask Venizelos to Pledge Support of His Policy.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Sunday, Aug. 15.—An Amsterdam dispatch to The Observer says:

"The Berliner Tageblatt learns from Athens that the King of the Hellenes, after the opening of Parliament, will ask ex-Premier Venizelos if he is prepared to form a Government on the basis of the maintenance of the neutrality attitude of Greece."

REPULSE AUSTRIANS ALONG THE DANUBE

Serbs Report Austrian Attempts to Fortify Banks and Cross the River.

PARIS, Sunday, Aug. 15.—A Havas dispatch from Nish, dated Thursday, contains what is apparently a Serbian offical report, dated Wednesday, which reads:

"Serbian troops destroyed by artillery and infantry fire Austrian attempts to fortify points on the left banks of the Save and Danube Rivers. During the night of the 9th-10th our artillery opened fire successfully on enemy supply trains on the Bercherva-Orsova road near the Village of Tisevita, in the neighborhood of Skelveta.

"The same night enemy artillery opened fire on Dognimilanovats beyond Tekia, killing a child, afterwards opening a violent artillery and infantry fire on our bank of the river. Serbian artillery immediately reduced the enemy to silence.

"The morning of Aug. 10 enemy soldiers in boats attempted to pass to the right bank of the Danube, near the ancient Turkish Fortress of Gelubatz beyond Dognimilanovats, but were repulsed."

DUTCH IN PEACE APPEAL.

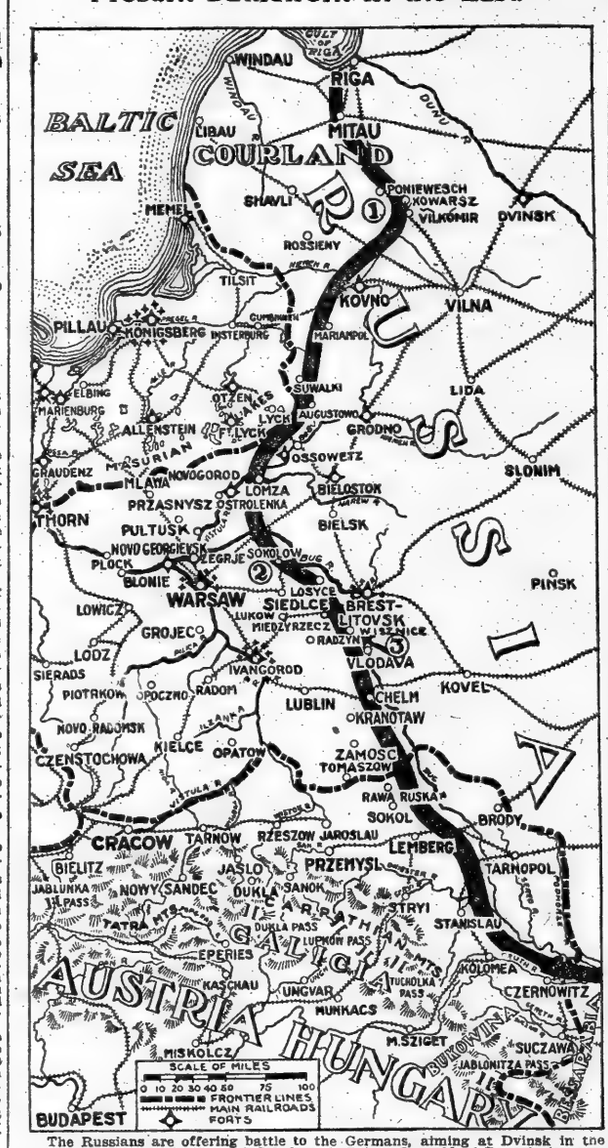
Odd Document Presented to Holland's Foreign Minister.

THE HAGUE, Aug. 14.—The Netherlands Anti-War Council has presented an address to Dr. John Loudon, the Netherlands Minister of Foreign Affairs, asking his collaboration in the formation of a permanent conference of representatives of the neutral powers to work in the interests of peace.

The anti-war council also issued a manifesto printed in Dutch, English, French, German, and Russian, exhorting all belligerent peoples to proclaim their desire for peace. Although it is signed by several learned professors, the document is remarkable for its homely phraseology, stating at the outset that it realizes that warring nations may ask a would-be peacemakers, "What the deuce enters neutral heads that they mix in others' affairs, while refusing to assume a share of the common burden?"

Nevertheless, it is pointed out, the only victory that will insure a lasting peace must be a moral victory of the people, who are urged not necessarily to love an enemy as one's self, or even love one's neighbor as one's self, but, as the manifesto insists, merely "Respect thy neighbor like thyself."

Present Battlefront in the East.



The Russians are offering battle to the Germans, aiming at Dvinsk in the region of Poniewesch (1). At Sokolow (2) Prince Leopold of Bavaria is nearest the Bug, while von Mackensen has advanced to Wisznice, approaching Brest-Litovsk.

CADORNA COMPLETES NEW PLAN OF ATTACK

Intends to Occupy Carso Plateau and Open Road to Trieste Early Next Month.

UDINE, Italy, Aug. 14.—General Cadorna, the Italian Commander in Chief, has virtually completed preparations for a new general attack on the Austrians along the Isonzo River, according to information received from the front.

These operations are intended to result in the occupation of the Carso Plateau, which, it is expected, will lead to the early fall of Gorizia, leaving the road open for the march to Trieste.

The Italian General Staff is said to be hopeful that this campaign may be successfully completed early in September.

ENGLAND CONSIDERS WHEAT REGULATION

May Guarantee a Price to Home Farmers—Light on Cancellations Here.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—The Cabinet is considering important recommendations concerning the supply of food, particularly wheat, made by the commission appointed in June by the Earl of Selborne, President of the Board of Agriculture, with Lord Milner as Chairman. The nature of the report is guarded closely, but it is intimated the recommendations include plans to increase the home-grown supply of wheat by guaranteeing to producers a minimum price for their product.

The Times urges the Government to act promptly, pointing out that farmers are gathering the present harvest and must decide on the uses of their land in the coming season. It adds:

"There is probably ground for conjectures that the recommendations involve a guarantee to farmers of a minimum price for wheat for a period long enough to justify them in putting a larger acreage under cultivation. Whether this step is worth taking must depend to some extent on the view taken by the Government of the probable risk to imported supplies."

Owing to the magnitude of wheat importations from America, the action of the Cabinet on the recommendations of the commission probably will have a considerable bearing upon the overseas trade. The fact that the Government is considering the wheat question is suggested as a possible reason for the reported cancellations of orders for wheat from America by the Entente Allies.

The Seaconnet Stopped by British.

The officers of the American steamer Seaconnet, which arrived yesterday from Gothenburg, reported being stopped by a British cruiser on the voyage home, but was not detained. On her outward voyage the Seaconnet was ordered to Kirkwall by the British authorities on June 16, and then had to go to Newcastle, where 900 tons of her cargo was discharged and sent to a prize court. Later the Seaconnet was allowed to proceed to Gothenburg, where she arrived on July 9 and sailed for New York on July 27.

Reichstag meets on Aug. 19. The question of peace conditions in their larger aspects is almost certainly going to be ventilated in the course of the debates.

To add to the prospective liveliness of this historic Reichstag session, the leader of the extreme Social Democrats, Dr. Liebknecht, who at present is doing patriotic duty digging trenches with the pick and shovel brigade in the eastern theatre of war, has sent the following question to be answered by the Chancellor in the Reichstag:

"If the other warring countries indicate a similar readiness, is the Government prepared to enter upon immediate peace negotiations on the basis of foregoing annexations of every sort?"

POPE'S SYMPATHY SENT TO EAST PRUSSIANS?

Munich Telegram Gives Alleged Text of Letter, Forwarding a Gift of $2,500.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 14, (via London.)—What purports to be a letter of sympathy sent to the people of East Prussia by Pope Benedict, through the Bishop of Frauenburg, is printed by the Bayerische Kurier, says a telegram from Munich.

The letter, which was sent through the Papal Nuncio at Munich, is given as follows:

"The Holy Father deplores with sincerest sympathy the sad position of the population of the Baltic provinces, who, in fact, for their loyal Christian views deserved a better fate.

"At the same time the Holy Father welcomes most heartily the wonderful readiness of all Germany to make sacrifices in order to assist the stricken provinces. As a sign of his fatherly and loving care, he sends this gift of 10,000 marks ($2,500) for the relief of sufferers."

BLOCKADE MORE EFFECTIVE.

Our German and Austrian Trade Becomes Less Each Month.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—Reports to the Department of Commerce from day to day of imports and exports in the trade between the United States and Germany and Austria and the neutral countries through which American goods may reach Germany and Austria show that a reduction in the volume of that trade is taking place. The natural inference is that the British blockade of the two interior empires is gradually becoming more effective.

In times of peace, as illustrated by the fiscal year ended with June, 1914, the United States imported from Austria goods to the amount of $20,110,834 and exported to that country to the amount of $22,718,258. In the same year the United States bought in Germany goods to the value of $189,919,136 and sold there to the amount of $344,794,276.

Down to the end of June this year the United States has exported to Austria to the amount of $9,794,418 and to Germany to the amount of $28,863,354. But in the last five months the figures by months show an even greater diminution of trade.

For instance, American imports from Austria have been as follows: February, $903,996; March $904,127, April $902,893, May $449,929, and June $226,235. Our exports to Austria were: February and March nothing, April $1,249, May $20,243 and June nothing.

A like examination of the imports and exports in our trade with Germany is equally instructive. Imports from Germany were: February, $6,813,405; March, $7,984,115; April, $302,898; May, $449,925, and June, nothing. Exports to Germany from the United States were: February, $4,250,426; March, $283,816; April, none; May, $400; June, $1,767.

It needs only a study of the export figures to the neutral countries from which Germany and Austria could draw their needed supplies from the United States to show the falling off.

The values of the exports of merchandise from the United States to Holland, Norway, and Denmark, as given below, show how this channel of trade has been gradually choked by the British blockade:

	February.	March.	April.
Holland	$15,031,265	$23,398,506	$20,798,790
Norway	7,801,451	4,810,440	3,493,400
Denmark	10,601,141	11,581,638	7,445,860
	May.	June.
Holland	$12,924,085	$7,651,762
Norway	2,072,509	1,107,216
Denmark	4,935,969	No returns

BRITISH CONSUL QUITS RIGA.

American Has Taken Over His Office, Our Ambassador Reports.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—George T. Mayre, the Ambassador at Petrograd, cabled the State Department today that the British Consul at Riga, Russia, had left there on Aug. 1, and the American Consul at Riga had taken over the care of British interests.

Riga has been reported virtually cut off from protection on the landward side and has been seriously threatened by German warships.

ITALY WILL STRIKE TURKS AT STRAIT

A Declaration of War Likely to be Simultaneous with Dardanelles Attack.

HAS 150,000 MEN READY

Her Military Leaders Have No Fear of German Reinforcements on Austrian Front.

Information has been received from a trustworthy source by THE NEW YORK TIMES tending to show that a declaration of war by Italy against Turkey will be simultaneous with the sending of about 150,000 men to the aid of the Franco-English force at Gallipoli. These troops, which consist of three army corps and one division of cavalry, have been training in the Abruzzi. There are also twelve army corps and two divisions of cavalry, amounting to about 500,000 men, which have been mobilized between Turin and Milan, on the old manoeuvering grounds. These are destined for the French front at a more distant time.

As for Turkey, THE TIMES informant says that opinions, until the beginning of the month, were divided as to the desirability of sending an Italian contingent to Gallipoli. The King, General Cadorna and the rest of the military authorities generally, as well as Baron Sonnino, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, were opposed to the idea, believing that Italy's true policy was to concentrate all her available forces against Austria, especially as the Austrians were likely to be aided by German troops as soon as the latter could be spared from Poland.

The Italian Foreign Office, however, is understood to be in receipt of information imparting the belief in Petrograd that Italy has nothing to fear from this quarter, while it is the desire of the London and Paris Governments to press the Gallipoli campaign to a successful conclusion as soon as possible, entirely independent of the expected action of Greece, Bulgaria, and Rumania.

These political and diplomatic considerations have overcome, it is believed, the objections of the military authorities, who are now in full accord with the desires of the Foreign Office that Italy shall make her appearance at the Dardanelles and take a hand with France and England in "pegging out claims" against Turkey.

The Foreign Minister and the Foreign Office, it may be said in passing, bear much the same relation to each other that the Pope does to the Vatican. They may be, but are not always, of the same opinion in politics.

The grievances of Italy against Turkey are cumulative. They date from Nov. 11, 1914, when the house of the Italian Consul, Signor Cecchi at Hodeida, was forcibly broken into by the Ottoman military police, a native guard wounded, and the British Consul removed and arrested. Much nearer and more important, however, has been the hostile attitude of Turkey toward Italians in Libya and the Levant.

In July a commission was appointed by the Colonial Ministry to inquire into the affairs of Libya, and, although its report has not yet been made public, it is understood to have plenty of evidence showing that the concerted movement recently made against the Italian outposts was inspired from Constantinople, thus giving Italy the opportunity to repudiate the treaty of Lausanne, which closed the Italo-Turkish War of 1911-12.

As to the Italians in the Levant, the Foreign Office has received reports from its Consuls showing that the Turks have detained by force many Italians who wished to leave, and that even the Consuls have been threatened and the extraterritoriality of their residences violated.

The Idea Nazionale of Rome on July 26 printed a letter from its Rhodes correspondent which reported the arrival there of an American cruiser having on board some hundreds of Italian refugees from the coast of Syria. The correspondent said that the cruiser also went to Messina with the object of taking on board a number of Italians who wanted to leave, but whom the authorities had refused to let go.

Editorially the Idea, which all through the Italo-Austrian negotiations which preceded Italy's declaration of war showed itself to be the best-informed journal in the peninsula, adds that besides sending expeditions commanded by Turco-German officers and war material to Cyrenaica, (Libia Italiana,) Turkey is continuing other provocations and acts of hostility against Italy. The article concludes:

"The measure is full and Turkey's object is very evident. If Turkey wishes to offer us a challenge, we are ready to accept it and will impose on her persuasive measures to secure the reparation which she owes us."

The Giornale d'Italia of the same date says:

"The attitude of Turkey is unjustifiable and unspeakable. We must, therefore, ascertain as quickly as possible how Turkey wishes to act with regard to us and adopt a course of action making our legal and political position clear with regard to the Ottoman Empire. We are ready for any eventuality."

REPORT ITALIANS REPULSED.

Vienna Bulletin Tells of Attacks in Tyrol.

VIENNA, Aug. 14.—The official bulletin of the War Office has this to say of the Italian operations:

Hostile attacks were repulsed at several points on the southwestern front, namely in the Tyrolean frontier district at Fedaja and on the Bopena line south of Schluderbach.

In the district of Gorizia all our old positions on Monte Selbusi and on the heights east of Monfalcone remained in our hands. During the night one of our armored trains advanced to the entrance of the station at Monfalcone and bombarded enemy infantry on the slopes of La Rocca and transport cars near the Adria works.

DESTROYS JAFFA SHIPYARDS.

French Cruiser Shells a German Plant and Thwarts a Suez Attack.

PARIS, Aug. 14.—A plan for a Turkish attack on the Suez Canal is said by the Ministry of Marine today to have been detected and thwarted. Announcement was made in the following statement:

"On Aug. 1, after warning had been given to the Governor of Jaffa and time given for the evacuation of the vicinity, a French cruiser bombarded and destroyed the principal building of the shops of the German Wagner, which were making arms and munitions and constructing boats destined for an attack on the Suez Canal. The houses in the vicinity were not damaged."

Jaffa, in Southern Palestine, is about 150 miles northeast of Port Said at the Mediterranean end of the Suez Canal. In Jaffa is a large foundry owned by Wagner Brothers.

The French Marine Ministry's communication leaves in doubt the nature of the expedition said to have been planned against the canal. It would obviously impossible to construct at Jaffa a naval force of sufficient strength to cope with the warships of Great Britain and France in those waters, and it might be inferred that small vessels were being built for a raid, depending upon secrecy and speed for the success of the adventure.

The Suez Canal has been the object of attacks by the Turks earlier in the war. An army was sent to Egypt last Winter, and in February there was some fighting near the canal. The main forces of the Turks, however, did not reach their goal.

to blow up the Vanceboro bridge on the Canadian border with dynamite.

"That this same Captain Horn has made and signed a confession to the Government that what he did he was ordered to do by his superior officer connected with the German Government in this country, and that the Government has facts in its possession than that the superior officer, whose name is not mentioned in Horn's confession, is Captain von Papen, the Military Attaché to the German Embassy.

"That Captain Koenig, Chief Disbursing Agent and head of the secret service of the Hamburg-American Line in New York, has been the disbursing agent of the German Embassy in the payment of most of its obligations that have been incurred in fomenting labor strikes, buying of newspapers, opening up of news bureaus and all the other thousand and one activities by which it has attempted to change public sentiment in this country in favor of the German cause.

Tried to Buy Arms Plant.

"That an American capitalist, who has a Summer home in the Adirondacks where Count von Bernstorff resides during most of the Summer months, and who is von Bernstorff's closest personal associate, made an offer of $15,000,000 to the President of the Union Metallic Cartridge Company to purchase that institution, and in making this offer he was unquestionably the agent of Count von Bernstorff himself, whose plan was to secure possession of the property and close it down.

"That a fund of $1,300,000 was got together through German interests associated directly with the German Embassy, to finance a national strike of longshoremen on the Atlantic, Pacific, and Gulf Coasts, and on the Great Lakes; that this fund was to be used for the payment of $10 per week to every striking longshoreman for a period of three months, with the idea that in that time the freight business, on which the shipment of arms and ammunition depends, would be so badly crippled and demoralized that it could not be restored for a long period of time.

"That a former agent of Krupps in this country, who is the husband of a well-known prima donna, and has an office in lower Broadway, is in constant touch with the German Embassy and Captain Boy-Ed, and has personally directed every attempt that has been made to introduce into manufacturing plants chemists, metal inspectors, and engineers generally for the purpose of destroying or making valueless war materials that are being made for the Allies.

"That a former Austrian officer, whose office is at 20 Exchange Place, New York, is in the immediate employ of the German Embassy, under the direction of which he has spent many millions of dollars in this country for the purchase of arms and ammunition for Germany.

"That a former Mexican Charge d'Affaires in Washington is back in the United States and is in direct touch constantly with the Austrian Ambassador, Count Dumba, at Lenox, Mass. That Count Dumba, working through this man, has known every step in the progress of the Huerta plot, as engineered by the German representatives here.

"That it is known that ships being loaded alongside the Hoboken docks for passage to Europe with cargoes for the Allies, are in great danger at the hands of German sailors; that this has resulted in the placing of many bombs aboard these vessels; that many of these bombs have been discovered, about which nothing has been made public, and that in many cases where these German sailors unloaded the decks of their own vessels, as the freight boats have left Europe, they have yelled in derision their prophecy that such ships would never reach the other side, and such ships have almost invariably been found to contain explosive material, alarm clock bombs, or other implements of destruction.

"That Captain von Prieger, head of the entire Secret Service of Germany, (the man who visited England in company with the Kaiser three years ago, in the uniform of one of his general officers, but who really went there for the purpose of interviewing all the heads of the spy service in the United Kingdom,) came to the United States in the Spring of the present year, and remained here for a month, during which time he reorganized the whole spy system in this country, and was in constant contact with Captain Boy-Ed, and was also visited by the principal leaders of his spy organization in St. Louis, San Francisco, New Orleans, New York, Boston, Ottawa, and Montreal; that during Captain von Prieger's visit to this country he lived most of the time on board a private yacht loaned to him by the head of a financial house which had received large contracts for supplies and munitions of war for Germany.

"That the false affidavits concerning the existence of guns for purposes of defense or attack on board the Lusitania were concocted deliberately through the efforts of Captain von Papen and Captain Boy-Ed, and the facts in possession of the Government prove beyond any question that these two representatives of the German Government in this country deliberately procured these affidavits either for a financial consideration or by threats.

"That certain officers of the German Government in this country can be held and tried on a charge of murder for having acted as accessories before the fact in the sinking of the Lusitania, and that the investigations now proceeding show that before the Lusitania was sunk specific directions and instructions as to her position and route reached the German Admiralty."

In connection with this last statement The Journal states that the Government has gone so far as to obtain the advice of eminent counsel in New York as to whether such an act would constitute piracy or murder, and in every case has received the assurance that the charge must be that of murder in the first degree.

The immense amount of evidence in possession of the Government with regard to these efforts, The Journal asserts, with regard to attempts to bribe labor leaders, to compel the Government to act in a fraudulent plot prepared against the British war vessels outside of New York Harbor, to create a conspiracy among banking institutions in the control of Germans or German-Americans, to poison horses and mules at New Orleans, to involve the United States and Mexico, to stir up strikes and sedition by forming alleged "peace associations" and "neutrality leagues," and to embarrass the Administration, have all combined to create a condition under which the Government feels it can remain silent no longer.

No Confirmation Obtainable.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, Aug. 15.—Practically all of the important Government officials, including the Attorney General, are away from Washington. From the few who remain it is impossible to obtain confirmation of The Providence Journal's assertion that the Government is contemplating action against German violators of our neutrality and that a mass of evidence has been gathered on this subject.

Denies Tampering with Munitions.

The head of the arms agency at 320 Broadway, who was named in The Providence Journal's list of charges as being concerned in attempts to tamper with the Allies' supplies of munitions, indignantly denied the charge last night to a NEW YORK TIMES reporter.

"I know of no engineers or chemists being concerned in any such work," said he. "Certainly I would not be a party to any such scheme, if it existed, which I doubt. The statement purporting to come from The Providence Journal connecting my name and the German Embassy with such a scheme is a libel. I will make it stronger—it is a lie. The Providence Journal has always lied.

"The only truth in the purported story is the assertion that I am an agent of the Krupps. But I also represent other manufacturing arms concerns."

Senor Algara in Lenox.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15.—Señor D. L. Algara, former Mexican Charge d'Affaires, has been frequently in Lenox since the arrival here of Ambassador and Mme. Dumba, as the house guest of the Dumbas. He was in Lenox last Saturday and Sunday. The Ambassador and Mme. Dumba, with Señor Algara, went on an automobile trip to the White Mountains on Monday and have not yet returned.

CARE OF WOUNDED A MARVEL OF WAR

Soldier Taken from Ypres to a London Hospital and Operated On in 12 Hours.

X-RAY MODIFYING SURGERY

Dr. Beaumont of the Liner Baltic Reports That Gangrene and Lockjaw Are Being Conquered.

Dr. J. C. H. Beaumont, the Surgeon of the White Star liner Baltic, who has returned from a three months' tour of the military base hospitals in England and Scotland, said yesterday that the rapidity in the removal of wounded men from the field to the base hospitals was one of the wonders of the war. Liners like the Asturias, Avon, and Aragon are constantly crossing the Channel between Havre and Southampton, and each has accommodations for 1,200 men.

"In one case to my personal knowledge a soldier was severely wounded near Ypres at 7 o'clock in the morning and twelve hours later he had been carried across the Channel and conveyed by train and automobile ambulance to the London Hospital in the Mile End Road and successfully operated upon," said Dr. Beaumont. "Many of the major cases are operated upon at the field base hospitals. Though the use of the X-rays surgery has become more conservative, because the surgeon is assured of the exact local condition and upon that forms a prognosis for more conservative surgery than twenty years ago. In Netley Hospital, near Southampton, when I visited it there were 2,000 wounded men, all in the best of spirits and no complaint from any of them. Hospitals are scattered all through the country, and many fine mansions, like Dunrobin Castle, have been converted into convalescent refuges, and the women of the families assist in looking after the patients.

"Since the war commenced 4,000 surgeons have joined the army and navy from the colleges. Many doctors have given fine practices to lend their aid, and others, retired years ago, have returned to operate in the base hospitals. A month after the war commenced I offered my services and was refused on account of my being over forty. In May this year I offered to serve again in the army and was accepted. Then the White Star Line said I could not be spared, as there were no surgeons to go in the steamers. The young graduates start at $5 a day as surgeons with their quarters and board and $250 to purchase an outfit for the year."

Dr. Beaumont went on to say that there had been a great decrease in the number of gangrene cases in Flanders and lockjaw cases in France, where the soil was very fertile and nourished the tetanus germs. The injection of the anti-tetanus serum immediately after the lockjaw sets in had proved very successful, as well as the inoculation for typhoid fever. Analysis of water before drinking and the general hygiene of the army had been looked after better than ever before.

"The greater portion of the wounds of the men in hospital were caused by shrapnel or high explosives, and not by the rifles of increased velocity, which send a bullet through a man without stopping him unless it strikes a vital spot. There are also a number of nerve shocks which result in loss of memory, loss of speech, and insanity, caused by the strain of being so many hours in the trenches under the terrific detonation of the high explosives.

"It is a mistake," the doctor said, "for people who have not been to the other side to say that the people of England do not realize the seriousness of the war. They do now, from millionaires to newsboys. When the battle cruisers Lion and Tiger went out to fight the German ships they sailed so quickly that forty workmen were carried off on the Tiger. Among them was a walking delegate who had been asking frequently in public 'What is the navy a-doing of?' He was given a station with the other workmen before the Tiger went into action and the first salvo from the big guns frightened him so that he had to be confined in a straitjacket, with a guard mounted over him.

"As the battle proceeded the guard looked down and exclaimed: 'So you're one of them armchair orators that's always asking what's the navy a-doing of. Well, you're going to see now.'

"Just then a big shell burst near by, covering the two with a variety of debris. 'That's a starter,' said the sailor as he turned to the orator, but the latter had fainted dead away."

ALLIES STILL GAINING ON SARI-BAIR SLOPE

Paris Reports the Turks Failed in Attempts to Penetrate Lines.

PARIS, Aug. 14.—An official communication on the situation at the Dardanelles, given out by the French War Office today, says:

On the Gallipoli Peninsula British forces since Aug. 6 have been debarking successfully at a point near the Bay of Suvla, on the west side of the peninsula. They have made progress at a point further to the south, in the vicinity of Gaba Tepe.

Here, after some severe fighting, these forces were successful in gaining a footing on the slopes of the heights of Sari Bair. They took more than 650 prisoners and captured nine machine guns. The operations at this point continue to make progress.

At the south end of the peninsula the efforts of the Turks to penetrate our lines all resulted in failure. On the 7th of August we made some slight progress. Since this date the activity on the French front has consisted mainly in artillery fighting, with marked advantage for our batteries.

BARS EXPORTS TO BULGARIA

Canadian Order in Council Issued—Provision as to Cotton.

Special to The New York Times.

OTTAWA, Aug. 14.—The prohibition of the exportation of all goods from Canada to Bulgaria is one of the provisions of an Order in Council passed under the War Measures act. The provisions of the order go into effect on Monday.

The order further provides that terne plates and tin plates, including tin boxes and tin canisters for food packing, shall not be exported to Denmark, the Netherlands, Norway, or Sweden. Raw cotton and phosphate rock may not be exported to any destinations other than the United Kingdom, British possessions and protectorates, France, Italy, Russia, (except Baltic ports,) Japan, and the United States, (when for consumption in the United States only,) shipped to specified consignees in the United Kingdom via the United States, or exported via the United States under license or dispensation from Canada.

NAME CZAR'S INVESTIGATORS.

Bobrinsky on Committee to Inquire Into Shortage of Munitions.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 14.—Following are the members of the committee appointed to inquire into the causes of the insufficient supply of ammunition which has handicapped the Russian military forces:

Chairman, General Petrieof, a member of the Council of the Empire; M. Nazoumof, Vice President of the Council of the Empire; Count Bobrinsky, Vice President of the Duma; Adjutant General Pantelaif and Senator Posnikof.

MOVE STORES FROM BIELESTOK

Refugees Line Roads to East, but the Government Remains.

BIELESTOK, Aug. 14.—The equipment and supplies of factories and stores are being removed from this city, which is forty-five miles east of Lomza. Many inhabitants are departing, although the Civil Government, State and private banks, and postal and telegraph services are still in operation.

The roads leading to this city from the west and northwest are lined with endless processions of refugees, with their wagons. Many peasants in the Lomza, Ostrow, and Malkin

BELIEVE ENGLAND WILL BUY UP COTTON

Washington Officials Think This Will Be Done if Contraband Order Is Issued.

MAY FIX A MINIMUM PRICE

And Guarantee to Purchase All of the Staple Offered at That Figure—Would Relieve Situation.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—Informed officials believe that if the British Government declares cotton contraband, that action will be coincident with or followed by the announcement of an arrangement intended to help the American cotton producers. While they do not claim that they have authoritative information, officials offer the suggestion that the British plan will take the form of fixing a minimum price for cotton and announcing that Great Britain will guarantee to buy all cotton offered at that minimum price. This, it is believed, will give stability to the cotton market and insure the sale of cotton by the producers at a reasonable price.

Cotton prices are now in the neighborhood of 9 cents a pound, in some places slightly higher, and in other places slightly lower than that figure. If the British Government should fix 9 cents as the minimum price, the producers, according to the understanding here, would be able to dispose of their stock for at least that amount per pound.

Lord Robert Cecil, British Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, in the authorized interview that he gave to correspondents of American newspapers in London yesterday, said that while the Allies must by all lawful means prevent cotton from reaching their enemies, "at the same time and equally important consideration must be given a great cotton-producing country like America and to consuming countries, like Sweden, Norway, Denmark, and Holland." And to this statement Lord Robert added: "A policy must be devised which will respect the legitimate rights of neutrals and yet safeguard the legitimate interests of the Allies and inflict as much damage as possible upon our enemies."

These statements were very encouraging to officials here, for they indicated that, with respect to cotton, at least, it was the intention of the British Government to modify its policy of detaining American cotton shipments destined to neutral ports of Europe.

If a more moderate policy should be adopted by Great Britain, it would probably have the effect, according to the opinion of some officials here, of dissipating sentiment in cotton States in favor of placing an embargo on the shipment of munitions of war to the British Isles as an act of reprisal on account of the cotton detentions. The statements made by Lord Robert Cecil are construed in some quarters as indicating that the British Government is inclined to lessen the restrictions imposed by the Orders in Council, against the application of which this Government has protested, and is about to review again in a note to Great Britain that is in course of preparation.

It was said in a high quarter in the State Department today that the Department was unable to see how placing cotton on the British contraband list would make much change in present conditions as far as the United States was concerned. Cotton was now being detained by the British Government and manufacturers suffer restrictions that approximated the confiscation that would be in practice if the article were made contraband. The opinion is held in the Department that making cotton contraband will come if Great Britain concludes that she is unable to justify the detention system administered under the Orders in Council. But there is a hope, approaching confidence, that, if cotton is placed on the contraband list, Great Britain will offer as compensation to American cotton producers some plan that will put them in much better condition financially than that in which they now find themselves.

SOUTHERN BANKERS TO PROTECT COTTON

Federal Reserve Members Will Help Planters to Dispose of Crop Without Sacrifices.

GALVESTON, Texas, Aug. 14—Bankers throughout the cotton-growing States will be called upon to demonstrate the South's financial ability to bring about a gradual marketing of this year's cotton crop and to prevent disastrous overloading of the market early in the season.

This decision was reached at a conference of bankers, representing practically every cotton-growing State, held here today and attended by the Presidents of the State Bankers' Associations of Oklahoma, Arkansas, Georgia, Louisiana, and Texas, and representatives of the Dallas, St. Louis, and Atlanta Federal Reserve Banks.

It was decided next week to send men into the cotton belt to explain the bankers' willingness and preparedness to handle the cotton without involving sacrifices on the part of the growers.

The cotton conference was pledged the support of the four Federal Reserve banks of the South. The meeting also resulted in the organization of the Cotton States' Bankers' Conference.

The method decided upon to insure a fair price and a gradual distribution of the crop was made possible through the banks agreeing to advance money to the planters on cotton securities and the Federal Reserve bank representatives agreeing to rediscount this paper.

That the Federal Reserve Directors were in sympathy with the movement was shown by several telegrams from Chairman W. P. G. Harding of the Federal Reserve Board. In one of these Mr. Harding expressed a willingness to meet with a committee of Southern bankers in Birmingham on Aug. 26. Pursuant to this expression a committee was appointed and will confer with Mr. Harding on the general subject of cotton marketing.

The meeting was called by Joseph Hirsch of Corpus Christi, President of the Texas Bankers' Association, as a result of the successful warehousing carried on by the Texas organization during the last six weeks.

The plan, it is declared, will afford relief to the growers who are in immediate need of funds at the opening of the picking season, will insure a more nearly uniform price throughout the market year, and will result in ultimate benefit to the grower, the banker, and the spinner, and through these to the whole population of the South.

Visiting bankers were unanimous in declaring that the Federal Reserve Bank system would be a vital factor in making their gradual marketing plans possible. They point out that there should be no repetition of the "dumping" of cotton which sent prices to abnormally low levels last year, following the outbreak of the European war. Bankers and farmers alike then were literally frightened into a sacrifice of a large part of the crop, they said.

B. C. Powell of Camden, Ark., President of the Arkansas Bankers' Association, said that the South was in far better condition this year than it was at the beginning of the war, and therefore should be able to inaugurate and successfully carry out a systematic marketing and warehousing plan.

F. S. Ethridge of Jackson, Ga., President of the Georgia Bankers' Association, said:

"The bankers of the South should assert their ability to prevent disaster to the cotton farmers, and should back this assertion with action that will bring about the desired result. This can be accomplished regardless of what Great Britain may do with the question of making cotton contraband of war."

NEW FRENCH OFFENSIVE IN THE ARRAS REGION

German Outposts Destroyed by Mines—Many Artillery Actions Elsewhere.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—The French today assumed the offensive in the Arras region and near Lassigny, in the former region destroying German trenches with mines and in the latter employing their artillery against the German positions. Cannonading is reported from the Yser region, the Argonne, Lorraine, and the Vosges. Berlin reports successes in night fighting in the Argonne, but advices from Paris are that German assaults there were repulsed with considerable losses.

This is the text of the night communiqué from Paris:

On the Yser artillery fighting is taking place before Lombaertzyde, St. Georges, Boesinghe, and Woeven.

In Artois, to the east of the road to Lille, we have by means of mines destroyed advanced works of the enemy. An ammunition depot has been blown up within the enemy's lines between Monchy and Ransart.

To the north of Lassigny we bombarded the German positions of La Tour Roland.

A violent cannonade is reported in the Argonne, in the sector of La Honyette, at the forest of Montmare, at the "Cow's Head," on the frontier of Lorraine, and in the Vosges at Chapelotte and Fontenelle.

The afternoon statement of the French War Office reads as follows:

In the Artois district, to the north of the Château of Carleul, and around the railroad station at Souchez, there was fighting during a part of last night with hand grenades and bombs.

In the Argonne the enemy yesterday evening delivered an attack along the entire front in the Marie Thérèse sector. Everywhere they were repulsed by our fire, and they suffered perceptible losses. At this point there was a fresh German attack at an early hour this morning, but less violent, and it was rapidly checked.

The night passed quietly on the remainder of the front.

Following is the official German statement:

In the Argonne new progress was made by our troops near Martinswerk. The number of prisoners in this region has been increased by four officers and 240 men.

UNDER FIRE FOR A YEAR.

British Captain Missed Only Three Days of Fighting in Flanders.

A letter from a Captain in a Scottish regiment in the British Army in Flanders was received in this city yesterday, and gives some intimate details of the fierce fighting at Festubert. It is dated June 30, and says that the spirit of the English troops is splendid. The Captain also pays a high tribute to the Canadians. The writer was recently in this country and is well known in this city.

"I joined my battalion after I arrived from America," he said, "and since then, Aug. 31, 1914, have only had three days' leave of absence. I have gone through rough times since I saw you and have finished about five weeks' fighting at the point in the line Festubert, where matters have been of the liveliest.

"Although our division and brigade losses have been serious, especially during our recent attacks around La Bassée, La Quinque Rue and Festubert, in all of which I took part, I have had the luck to escape so far with nothing more serious than a small shrapnel wound which did not cost me a day off. The spirit and determination of our men is magnificent, and if it were not for the German artillery, machine guns, minewerfers, and bombs, &c., we could wipe their infamy off the map in no time.

"We carried three lines of their trenches at Festubert week before last at the point of the bayonet three times, their best troops, Westphalians, Jaegers, and Prussian Guard, clearing out and running like rats. Each time, owing to the enormous fusillade of shells, machine guns, &c., we retired in order to our own line again. We found their trenches packed to overflowing with their own dead from our artillery shells, which pounded them for twelve hours before each attack. In these attacks the Black Watch regiments have been all engaged, and I am glad to say have upheld their reputations.

"For a time I was fighting alongside the Canadians, who sent us fine and brave soldiers, and who have done heroic work. Some day I hope to have the good fortune to tell you some of the more thrilling exploits. Our country has awakened to the fact that this war will not be won by infantry, but by shells, machine guns, and bombs in ever-increasing and unlimited quantities. When we are ready to pour these into their lines, as they do into ours, but in predominating quantity of course, the victory is ours for the asking.

"I expect you are finding business good. I have not even thought of it since I arrived and joined my unit in August. The cares of acting as second in command of my battalion, to which I regret to say I have been promoted through casualties, is quite enough for my small brain. My father, who is 71, is carrying the burden of my business alone, but he is marking time, I think, until I can relieve him."

FRENCH ATTACKS ON JOFFRE

Three Paris Papers Support a Socialist Deputy's Criticisms.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 14.—The Socialist Deputy Brizon, hitherto known to fame only for his interruption of a financial debate six months before the war, when he asserted that Germany's intentions were wholly pacific, startled the Chamber yesterday, in the course of the debate on the motion to grant leave to men at the front to take part in the harvest, by vehemently praising General Sarrail, who was recently transferred from the command of the Argonne Army to that of the Dardanelles expeditionary force, as a good Republican and one of the few important officers who had given the soldiers such privileges. He then asked why those in supreme command were not equally solicitous about such leave, concluding with the assertion that a certain Minister had told him that he had heard Alexandre Millerand, the Minister of War, encourage General Joffre to oppose Parliament, and that there was now a square issue between Millerand and Parliament. The press discusses the matter fairly and openly. Government newspapers like the Figaro, Liberté, Temps, and Gaulois characterizing Brizon's attack as disgraceful, and maintaining the necessity of preserving Joffre's authority unimpaired.

The Gaulois, in an article headed "Don't Touch the High Command," says: "The Generalissimo is loved by the soldiers, admired by the Allies, respected by the Generals. If he has not realized all our dreams, he has not deceived our hopes. Let us understand him and be grateful to him. Don't touch General Joffre."

Gustave Hervé, Georges Clemenceau, and L'Humanité take the opposite view. Under the caption of "Armchair Strategy," Hervé defends himself against the Figaro's statement that he, an armchair critic, is embarrassing Generals who are doing what he could never hope to attempt. "Why should not one ask whether we ought not to try something else and rencvate our methods?" he says. "How does not concern me; my business is to get out my paper and respect the censorship."

PARIS, Aug. 14.—The Cabinet at a meeting today discussed requests that had been made by a group in the Chamber of Deputies, the leaders of which have been vociferously among themselves, and occasionally in the Chamber, the Cabinet's conduct of the war.

It was announced at the conclusion of the Cabinet council that the Minister of War had informed his colleagues that next Friday he would discuss the questions raised, choosing the occasion when the appropriation for the two new Under Secretaries for War would come up for debate.

The Radicals and Radical Socialists are represented in the Cabinet by Louis J. Malvy, Minister of the Interior; Albert Sarraut, Minister of Public Instruction; Justin Godart, Under Secretary of War; Albert Dalimier, Under Secretary of Fine Arts, and Paul Jacquier, Under Secretary of the Interior.

SEES LESSON FOR US IN FRANCE'S STAND

Charles H. Grasty Says the War Is Between the Monarchical and Democratic.

AMERICA MUST GET READY

There Should Be Military Service, However Short, for All, Making Better Citizens and Patriots.

BY CHARLES H. GRASTY,

Former Editor of The Baltimore Sun.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, July 22.—In France I found the discussion of President Wilson's policy pitched in a much more reasonable key than in England. Naturally, the French do not look at it from the point of view of America, but from their own. They are engaged in what they consider a war for the very fundamentals of human liberty. They cannot understand why the greatest of all democracies should stand on one side while a barbarous nation is thrusting at the vitals of human liberty. A people engaged in such a war can hardly be judicial. They forget that the President must act for a hundred million people on the other side of the Atlantic and he must not be too quick to substitute theoretical for practical considerations. When you tell them that President Wilson by going slow can take with him every element in the American population, including the pacifists, they say that it is all right if that is the goal for which he is traveling.

France is a democracy, England is a democracy. How is the difference in the way the war emergency has been met in the two countries to be explained?

Difference in temperament accounts for a lot, but I think that there is another explanation that accounts for even more than difference in temperament. All of the living peoples are potentially courageous, but the processes through which bravery is applied in practice become atrophied through nonuse. A young man growing up in an Eastern city is apt to be so timid that he will jump at the sound of a percussion cap. Put that same man in a town like Leadville used to be, and in six months he will shoot with the best of them. For forty years France has had a pistol pointed at her head. Some preparation for the inevitable fight has been a part of every Frenchman's working day since 1870. War, therefore, with the Frenchman has been a practical, ever present consideration. Across the English Channel the situation has been just as different as possible from this. England has never been a military nation in the Continental sense. Her island position has made the navy sufficient for every imaginable defense, and in her comparatively small wars she has used her paid soldiery and the levies of inferior nations controlled by her supreme naval and financial power. When, therefore, the war was let loose by Germany it was seen that the Kaiser had not reckoned quite wildly on the military unpreparedness of his chief enemy, though he had gone far astray as to the implications of the Ulster rebellion and labor conditions in England.

The present of any country can only be understood when considered in connection with its past. France was made ready by the defeat of 1870, the loss of Alsace and Lorraine, and the challenge of defeat to her self-respect.

Founders of Militant Germany.

The Germany of 1914-15 is largely made up of the habits and traditions which began to be formed and set nearly 300 years ago under Frederick the Elector. As has so often been said, that monarch prepared the ground, his grandson, Frederick William, dug the foundation, and that one's son, Frederick the Great, built the superstructure of Germany militant. What Bismarck and what the Kaiser have done were but the logical development of the work of those great Fredericks. Bismarck and William II. dealt with prepared material as strong as it was plastic in their hands.

In Germany practically all power resides in the monarch, not for his personal use, as Frederick the Great was always at such pains to make clear, but for the good of his country and his subjects.

The Fredericks held democracy in contempt, but so great was their belief in the incorruptness of their trust on behalf of their people that Frederick the Great gave instructions in one of his wars which threatened to end badly that if he should be taken by the enemy, no compromise at the expense of the State should be made for the purpose of securing his liberation.

No matter what the white books and the green books say, no matter who struck the first blow, no matter whether methods have been fair or unfair, on this side or that, down at the bottom this is a war between the monarchical and the democratic.

The Fredericks, Bismarck, and William II. have framed up the issue from their side as strongly (barring the egregious blunder of 1914-15, which can be presented; for democracy stand France, England, and Italy, with America in reserve and a great autocracy, Russia, drawn into the struggle by considerations apart from the main issue.

If England had lived under the open threat that made France ready she would have been in the state of mind to mobilize her resources and conduct war efficiently from the first week that war came on. There is nothing abnormal about England's point of view or conduct. She is a democracy, and in war as in peace, in the absence of any abnormal condition that would serve as in the case of France to prepare the public mind, she must rely upon the ordinary processes of public opinion. These twelve bluntering, muddling months have been precisely what was inevitable in a country of free thought and free speech and lacking compulsory military training and service as an established practice.

It is possible that the cosmopolitanism and luxurious living had carried England further toward softening of the character than the same conditions have carried America, but speaking generally it is probable that a similar emergency would have produced practically the same effects in our own country.

The lesson for America, it seems to me, is that we must get ready and stay ready. We can't keep on ignoring the eternal humanities. Man will rot in luxury; contentment is the threshold of decay. Inaction always, everywhere, leads to death. The best man is bred amid tribulation, and in overcoming difficulty develops powers that would otherwise be dormant. Somewhere between Germanic strenuosity and Chinese inertia lies the path of progress and life. We must be governed not by the way the pious people think that God ought to have made human beings, but by the way He did make them.

"What are you going to do about it?" I hear some one ask. There should be military service for every male. Not too much—perhaps one year would be enough. If every young man some time between 15 and 25 could have one year of active training, learning to shoot, ride, carry a kit, throw a grenade, and dig himself in, we would be better people all around—better husbands and fathers, and better citizens. We would come to know through this service that there was such a thing as patriotism; that we had a country that it was a duty to fight and die for in case of need; that we had other civic responsibilities such as going to the polls and voting for public officials, and after informing and maturing our private opinions, putting them over those of our neighbors in the common store of thought and making that thought a compelling force for good government, city, state and national.

It is only through some such awakening, whether that awakening should come in the way suggested or otherwise, that we can look forward with certainty to warding off the dangers which beset us; the danger of decay through content and comfort; the danger through the challenge of a more virile race for the control of the great area held by us, and, more imminent still, the danger of conquest by the barbarous hordes of spoilsmen and self-seekers who infest our politics.

FOREIGN LEGION TO DRILL.

2,000 Naturalized Citizens Ready to Respond to Call.

The American Legion, composed of foreign-born Americans who have received military training, is being organized by Harry H. Schlacht of 206 Rivington Street. During the past week he has addressed ten meetings of the foreign-born citizens and has received the names of more than 2,000 who have been trained from three to six years in the armies of Europe.

"I have also seen all the foreign clubs," he said last night, "and find that they are very enthusiastic over the idea. These people are loyal Americans and when they became citizens renounced all ties to their former countries. They are anxious and willing to join the Foreign Legion and are ready to respond to the call for drill just as soon as army officers are appointed to train them.

"There are more than a million former European soldiers in this country, and if those outside this city are as willing as the ones I have spoken to, it would be a question of but a short time before a million trained men might be ready to join the colors in defense of this country.

"I am going to Washington on Tuesday to lay the proposed organization before Secretary of War Garrison. I will show him that these men have received the most rigorous training, that they are loyal Americans and would form a splendid body of men with but short training. In case of war the American Foreign Legion would be a valuable adjunct to the National Guard."

BRITONS NOT DOWNHEARTED

People of Town Raided by Zeppelin Shout Defiance at Enemy.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—If German air raids on England are designed to create panic the two officially chronicled this week signally failed.

Under the censorship regulations it is impossible to give details, but it may be permissible to relate the following incident:

At one place visited by a Zeppelin the population was all outdoors, cheering every shot aimed by the anti-aircraft guns at the raider and shouting in chorus:

"Are we downhearted? No!"

THREE VESSELS SUNK, FOUR MEN DROWNED

Submarines Destroy British Steamers Cairo and Princess and a Fishing Smack.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—The British steamers Cairo and Princess Caroline and the fishing smack Amethyst have been sunk by submarines. Four members of the crew of the Princess Caroline were lost. The others were saved.

There are two British steamers Cairo, the larger of which is a vessel of 1,671 tons gross, owned by the Glasgow Navigation Company. The other is a small fishing boat owned in Hull.

The Princess Caroline was a vessel of 888 tons, and was owned in Glasgow.

GERMANY SILENT ON U-30.

Refuses to Comment on Sinking of New Submarine.

BERLIN, Aug. 14.—The Admiralty declines to comment on the report published abroad that the German submarine U-30 had been sunk off a German port by accident, in consequence of a defect in operation, but had subsequently been raised. Official information is refused also concerning the fate of the crew.

As the German Navy has a special ship for raising sunken craft and other facilities for coping with such emergencies, the report probably is true.

A dispatch from Amsterdam on July 5 said the U-30 had been sunk off the mouth of the Ems and raised thirty-six hours later, one member of the crew losing his life.

SAILINGS FOR WAR ZONE.

Two Ships Leave Baltimore with Large Cargoes for England.

Special to The New York Times.

GALVESTON, Texas, Aug. 14.—The following ships sailed from here today for the war zone:

The Tilemachos, Greek, for Piraeus, with a cargo of 215,000 bushels of wheat worth $275,200. Norwegian steamship Nordkyn for Copenhagen, with 39,600 sacks of cottonseed meal, worth $153,600.

The Principessa Laetetia, Italian, for Genoa, with a cargo of 11,667 bales of cotton, worth $581,562; 1,050 tons transit phosphate from Tampa, worth $6,300.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Aug. 14.—The following ships sailed from here today for the war zone:

The Lord Roberts, British, for Belfast and Dublin, with a grain and general cargo.

The Barlby, British, for Dunkirk, with flour and a general cargo.

MISS ADDAMS REITERATES.

Soldiers Stimulated for Bayonet Charge, She Asserts in Lecture.

CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y., Aug. 14.—Miss Jane Addams of Chicago, speaking today on "Peace" before the Chautauqua Assembly, reaffirmed her statement that Europe's soldiers in some cases had been stimulated by alcoholics and drugs for the bayonet charge.

"My informants in England, France, and Germany were soldiers, offices, and well-informed civilians," said Miss Addams. "I don't question the soldier's courage, but when a prominent official in the Paris War Office tells me his men are given absinthe before a bayonet charge I believe him. When a German Lieutenant tells me his men were given a drug formula, containing sulphuric ether among other things, to stimulate their bloody bayonet work, I believe him. And when a big Oxford University professor in England tells me his son and nephew were given rum a minute before they left the battle line I believe him. When common talk in all countries among the women who have husbands and sons and sweethearts at the front tells the same thing, I begin to believe that the average soldier is not sufficiently brutish and beastly to fight with cold steel against his brother man unless primed with drugs or strong drink.

"Every nation sincerely believes it is fighting for self-protection, for righteousness. Each will hold out to the end of its strength unless some neutral power offers effective intervention. Everywhere civilians are dominated by militarists. America must lead the fight for peace and disarmament. No European country can solve the riddle and the muddle."

TO DISCUSS WAR RELIEF.

Jewish Committees Will Hold Mass Meeting at Asbury Park.

Special to The New York Times.

ASBURY PARK, N. J., Aug. 14.—The Central Committee for Relief of Jews suffering through the war has arranged a mass meeting at Asbury Park Auditorium tomorrow at 3 o'clock. The Rev. Dr. A. E. Ballard, President of the Ocean Grove Association; Taylor Phillips, the Rev. Moses Hyamson, and the Rev. M. S. Margolies of New York, Rabbi I. Rosenbery of Paterson, N. J., and Albert Lucas, Secretary of the Central Committee, will speak.

Charles Sneider, Paul Burkhardt, and J. Crossman are members of the Asbury Park local committee. Miss Theresa Dreyfus of Jerusalem will describe conditions in Palestine. Clarence Hetrick, Mayor of Asbury Park, will preside.

AMERICAN PRAISE OF FRANCE'S CAUSE

Chamber of Commerce of Paris Publishes Eloquent Addresses Made on the Fourth.

PREMIER AMONG SPEAKERS

He Recalled Olden Friendship of Peoples—Prof. Baldwin Told of American Admiration.

The American Chamber of Commerce in Paris has just issued in the form of a bulletin a complete account of the dinner given by the chamber at the Hotel Palais d'Orsay on July 5 in celebration of the signing of the American Declaration of Independence. Réné Viviani, President of the French Council of Ministers, and practically all of the other members of the Government were guests at the dinner. Also there were present in their weather-beaten blue uniforms a dozen American young men serving as volunteers in the French Army, who obtained leave of absence for the occasion.

Every speech made at the dinner, those of both Americans and Frenchmen, was marked by stirring eulogy of the French and their cause, and by enthusiastic emphasis of the friendship between France and the United States. At the conclusion of the dinner, a set of resolutions indorsing the National Security League was adopted.

M. P. Peixotto, the President of the chamber, was the first speaker. After narrating the historic reasons why the United States should feel friendly and grateful toward France, and after dwelling upon the glories of France at peace, he said:

"We who have seen all this in time of peace are now watching France in the grip of a stupendous conflict. We knew that France had been a nation of great military prowess; but now, after having laid down her arms and devoted herself for many years to the arts of peace, could she resist the terrific shock? Our anxiety did not last long. France, ever versatile, revealed at once her heroism and her warlike genius. The home of Condé, Turenne, and Napoleon, after having long been the land of Pasteur, Henri Poincaré, and Berryer, produced a Joffre.

"From the tomb," continued Mr. Peixotto, "rose the world cry of Franklin, that 'eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.' A hundred and thirty-nine years ago we were fighting, with the aid of France, for our liberty; today France is fighting for the liberty of the world. France is no longer fighting merely for her own sake, but for the cause of civilization, to defend the fundamental principles of right; and for this she is generously giving her finest blood and is sacrificing her youth among whom there might be a Berlioz, a Meissonier, a Baryé, a Victor Hugo, a Claude Bernard, a Berthelot."

M. Viviani's Speech.

After proposing toasts to the French Republic, the President of the United States, the entire French Ministry, and "the forthcoming and certain triumph of liberty, justice, and civilization," Mr. Peixotto introduced Premier Viviani. M. Viviani said:

"On this striking occasion, when you are wont to gather to bind your hearts in closer unison, you have invited as your guests the Government of the Republic. Touched by the delicate intention which inspired your invitation, the Government eagerly accepted it. Surely I may interpret your thought without underestimating its significance. You wished to recall that American and French heroes were once joined in fraternal union, and bound together in a common glory. You desired to render homage to the noble nation, true to its traditions, which is now defending on its own soil, not only its own homes and its own independence, but that which it has so often championed, the independence of the world.

"You who know this nation so well wished to offer it a touching proof of your esteem. You never believed us a light and frivolous people, and were not surprised to find us serious in peril. You were never blinded by the dust of our internal conflicts, and never supposed that our sharp discussions, as among free men, would forbid the union of our hearts and the concerted effort of our wills. You knew that, though we were capable only of some transcendent heroic effort, which would be quickly followed by discouragement—you, who knew what was hidden under the brilliant superficial qualities of our race, and who knew that strength in a tragic hour of trial would exhaust neither our body nor our soul. And if this time of trial is to be prolonged, if the days of battle succéd one another, you know that France is neither weary nor resigned, but that she is standing erect, armed, organized, zealous, and formidable, sure to win with her indomitable allies who are defending the same cause.

"Moreover, you did not wait for the occasion which this anniversary offers to reveal your sentiments of affection for us. As soon as this terrible curse was hurled upon the world by Germany, your hearts turned to France. You founded hospitals, your doctors rivaled our own in zeal, and American women, as if our burdens were not sorrow, turned their backs on all the blessings of fortune, cared for the sick, dressed the wounds, and brought consolation to all who were downcast, enveloping their charity with supreme grace. May I be permitted to give you thanks and benediction for these many generous deeds, which have found a deep response in the soul of our people. The sons and daughters of your race were moved by a glorious impulse to help those of our own. Would it be going too far to give it a deeper meaning? You were inspired to do this not only by your heart, but by your conscience.

"The blood of both our peoples has been shed on the same soil, beneath the same standard. Your ancestors founded the greatest democracy in the world and set up the independence of nations as a principle of government. Our forbears proclaimed the rights of man and asserted the rights of nations. How can we help being united when right is thrown to the winds, and when liberty, the heart, and the conscience of those who inherited this mighty legacy have been outraged?

"We Shall Fight On."

"It is not before you and your nation that I shall plead the cause of France and her allies. As your sympathy is with us, so our pride is a sure guarantee to you that we shall keep it. We are fighting; we shall fight on, and we shall wield the heavy sword by which justice has been so often threatened and slain.

"We do not resort to monstrous acts—England and France have proved it by their prompt and truthful explanations to the American Government, which is the defender of the just rights of neutrals. It is not our disposition to sink boats laden with innocent victims, nor to assassinate women and children. Civilization is in one regard superior to 'kultur': it is self-respect. . . . and does not scorn the judgment of mankind, nor the verdict of history.

"But, gentlemen, let us turn from the present. I drink to the future, to the independence of nations, to their liberty to lead their own lives, to the generations who will be commanded not by the valor of so many heroes, to the great Republic which symbolizes force, but force as the servant and not the conqueror of right. Gentlemen, I raise my glass in honor of the eminent President of the United States."

William G. Sharp, the American Ambassador to France, said:

"Voicing my own personal feelings, let me say, as circumstances prevent my celebrating the Fourth of July in America, there is no place where I should rather observe this day and its memories than in the sister Republic of France, not only because these two great nations stand for the same ideals of republican government, but because the traditions of a cherished past have inseparably bound them together in common interest and fraternal affection."

Mr. Sharp then spoke of Lafayette as one who belonged as much to America as to France, and he followed this with praise of President Wilson, saying that "in all times of great stress, men have been found equal to the solution of our country's great problems." In conclusion, referring to the representatives of the French Government at the dinner, he said:

"May they come to realize by this impressive commemoration of the day so precious to every American heart, as they have never done before, the tender sympathy and spirit and good will which our Government and our people have for their country. Out of the distress of the present hour may there soon come to this fair land a resumption of that progress in literature, art, and science which in the past, among all the nations of the earth, has been the glory of France."

Gaston Thompson, French Minister of Commerce and Industry, praised the Chamber for contributing to the establishment of "closer and more cordial relations between the United States and France. He included J. P. Morgan in his praise and, at the mention of the financier's name, according to the minutes of the dinner, there were "bravos and prolonged applause."

Prof. Baldwin Applauded.

Prof. J. Mark Baldwin, Corresponding Member of the Institute of France, stirred his hearers to enthusiasm by boldly renouncing neutrality, as the word is usually understood. He said in part:

"The Fourth of July is to us Americans not only a day of recollection, but also one of inspiration; not only a day of reverie on past events, but also one of new visions of the future of our country.

"In the present year, perhaps more than in any other year of our history, is this true, for the European crisis occupies our thought and its heroes inspire our imagination. What inspirations, what glorious examples, have appeared in the last year to thrill the soul of every true patriot!

"As we dwell, therefore, today upon the Fourth, veiled in all the cloud of its traditions, certain figures emerge and take form; we see his Majesty King Albert, standing for heroic Belgium, the figure of one who is every inch a King. What higher inspiration to loyalty does history show than this?—loyalty to the pledged word and the honor of nations, shown by the simple spurning of base proposals and by resistance to their execution.

"We see, too, the august figure of England—our motherland—more august than ever before. Britannia arises to throw the mantle of her protection upon the sunny State, fallen by the hand of its own perfidious guardian. What a source of inspiration to our country, which also espoused the cause of smaller nations!

"Then we see a different figure, something mystical, legendary, poetical, but also human, militant, powerful—militant France, symbolized in the figure of Jeanne d'Arc. France is, for the world today, the source of inspiration to the individual.

"And French have shown, during the struggle of the last year, qualities of soul and body which demonstrate the Frenchman's right to bear the image and invoke the name of his patron saint, Jeanne d'Arc. This has been called the 'miracle of France,' this wonderful issuing forth of the purest gold of character from the mine of the subconscious areas of national and individual personality. Let us rather say that it is an exhibition of supreme spiritual force, an evolution of that which in the world really signifies the 'superman.' It is but the carrying out of the familiar virtues of fidelity, loyalty, sacrifice, devotion, to their synthesis in a nearer approach to their ideal. The common duty leads to the 'sacred union,' and the 'sacred union' begets the heroic deed.

"This is not merely symbolic language. I mean to say that it is a reality, and that is its inspiring force to us. And on the other side, the false 'superman' shows himself, in all his naked forms of brute force and animality.

"Gentlemen of the Chamber, I ask you whether such inspirations as these tend to confirm us in our neutrality? Do they permit, indeed, any sort of personal or moral neutrality? Is such neutrality possible to any one born, as we were, with intuitions of right and under rules of conduct akin to those which we see here in force?

"My colleague and friend M. Henri Bergson, whose is a most noble address the definition of a philosopher as 'one who knows everything but is indignant at nothing.' He adds the comment that if it be a choice between knowing everything and being indignant about some things, the true philosopher must needs choose the latter alternative—indignation. He says this appears of the crimes committed during this war. In this I agree with my fellow-philosopher, but I go further, adding a third case: there are times when the more one knows of a subject the more one finds indignation justified. We are now at such a time and in the presence of such a case. We cannot be true to our own patriotism if we fail to condemn publicly and without measure those who make assaults upon the spiritual values on which our patriotism is founded.

"When in the future the historian writes of this war he will, I think, find a place supreme for this fair and noble France. He will find in her the symbol of a great vision and a great sacrifice. We Americans hope that he will not have to record the failure on the part of the sister Republic to have seen the vision and to have shared effectively in the sacrifice."

LABOR ANGRY AT BARNES.

May Fight Republican Party Because of His Hostility.

James P. Holland, Vice President of the New York State Federation of Labor, who is slated to become its next President, said yesterday that officials of the labor unions throughout the State were preparing to make a fight at the polls against the control of the Republican Party by William Barnes, the former State Chairman, because of his activities in connection with the Constitutional Convention. Mr. Holland described Barnes as a foe of labor, and cited his proposals in regard to the Workmen's Compensation act and other legislation of that class.

"If Barnes carries out his plans," said Mr. Holland, "he will stir up the biggest political labor upheaval that has ever been witnessed in this State. If he thinks he can squelch all labor leaders and defeat the labor movement of the State, he is making the biggest mistake of his life, and if he persists in his plans the unions are determined to teach him the severest lesson he ever had in his political career.

"If Mr. Barnes is not willing to come to an agreement with the unions as to the labor amendments to be embodied in the State Constitution there will be war to the knife between Mr. Barnes and the labor unions. Barnes is opposed to the workmen's compensation law because it is objectionable to the powerful financial interests in the State. Because all the people don't work in canneries Barnes is opposed to passing laws which would restrict the exploitation of children in the canning industry."

BLISS CO. SUIT DISMISSED.

Citizens' Nuisance Complaint Misnames the Corporation.

The Fifth Avenue Police Court, Brooklyn, was filled with men and women living near the plant of the E. W. Bliss Company at Fifty-fourth Street and the waterfront, when Magistrate Nash called the case against officials of the E. W. Bliss Company, charged with maintaining a nuisance. The complainant, William G. Sutherland, charged that the big steam hammers and other heavy machinery, which is working night and day to turn out munitions for the Allies, caused such a vibration that plaster fell in his home and that no one could sleep in the neighborhood. The affidavits of several others backed up Sutherland.

Edward T. Horwill, a lawyer, asked that the complaint be dismissed because it was directed against the E. W. Bliss Machine Company, instead of against the E. W. Bliss Company. Magistrate Nash ruled that the company had been incorrectly designated and dismissed the complaint.

Sutherland said the error in the complaint was made by the compiaint clerk. He said he had originally applied for relief to the Superintendent of Buildings, who had referred him to the Department of Health, which, he said, notified him that he had no ground for complaint. He said he would make a new complaint on Monday.

RUSSIA'S GUARDS ARE ELITE OF ARMY

Soldiers All Picked Men and the Officers the Most Privileged Persons in the Empire.

CORPS HAS A PAGE SCHOOL

Graduates Elected for Commissions by Ballot of Officers of Regiments to Which They Aspire.

By ROBERT R. M'CORMICK.

(Copyright, 1915: By The Chicago Tribune.)

PETROGRAD, June 23.—My request to witness the battles in Galicia was refused, for the reason that a foreigner would not be safe alone and that an officer could not be taken from duty to chaperon a correspondent.

As a compensation leave was given to me to visit the corps de la garde on another front. This corps was selected for me because most of its officers spoke French or English. It also held a special interest in being the heart of the Russian Army and the Russian system of aristocracy.

The idea of an imperial guard in Russia originated with Peter the Great, who enrolled the first regiment. Other Emperors have added to it until it comprises a corps of three infantry divisions with artillery and a division of cavalry with horse artillery. Among the cavalry are certain regiments and batteries of Cossacks of the guard.

The soldiers of the guard are the picked men of the entire empire. Once assigned to the guard they are divided among the different regiments according to certain physical characteristics. For instance, all the snubnosed men belong to the regiment of the Emperor Paul, who was snubnosed. One regiment gets the biggest of the guardsmen—it is a regiment of giants; to another all the darkest men are given, and so on.

Some, not all, of the older officers take wine with their meals, sometimes a glass, sometimes two, never much.

It was my pleasure to spend a week in this company. Two officers lived out of a room and one left his bed for me. Protests that the hotel was perfectly good were unavailing and I never learned the identity of my benefactors. The General assigned one of his orderlies, an African from Abyssinia, to take care of me.

General Bezobrazoff at his dinner is like a too kindly schoolmaster. But stories are told of his dash as a young officer. And the way he put his regiments into the fight at Warsaw will command a chapter in the permanent military history of the war.

Both he and the Duke of Mecklenburg, chief of artillery, were more than kind in furnishing me with military instruction and the new lessons learned in this war, although they could not believe me when I said that American army officers are forbidden to instruct the public on military affairs.

The great advantage of an organized nation at war over a nation defended by a professional army is that the first fires all its fighting men for action while the second must devote numbers and energy to the work of the rear. Furthermore the work of the most competent people offered freely is more efficient than that of salaried officials.

Whole Russian Nation at War.

To the fact that Russia is a nation at war, not a nation with only its army at war, may be attributed the extraordinary completeness of its organization back of the fighting line—an organization not carried in the army manuals and whose existence is unknown in Petrograd, even in Warsaw.

Members of the Duma are largely engaged in this work, as are a great part of the business men and land owners whose age or lack of experience keeps them from serving in the active army. The larger part of these serve along the principal lines of communication, from dressing stations to division hospitals, to corps hospitals, on the hospital trains, in the big cities. There are as many more employed among the relief stations along the rear of the armies.

In back of the firing line is a vast traffic of ammunition, of supplies, of soldiers and horses arriving to fill the losses, of slightly wounded going to the rear on foot or in emptied transport wagons, of convalescents returning to the front.

To care for these are a number of rest stations dotted about five miles apart. At every one of these an immense kettle of soup and a mountain range of black bread await the hungry.

For soldier and civilian alike, for transport driver and for refugee, but one requirement is asked—"wash." At each of these places are provided a trough, soap

ORDER MORE TROOPS TO BROWNSVILLE

Two Batteries of Artillery Also Going to Strengthen the Border Force.

CITIZENS' APPEAL HEEDED

War Department Says Many of the Outlaws Were Formerly Carranza Soldiers.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—Although General Funston has telegraphed the War Department today that he and Governor Ferguson of Texas had agreed, at a conference, that more troops were not needed on the Texan-Mexican border at this time, it was determined by the Administration today to heed the appeals of many persons in the Brownsville district for better protection. Accordingly, two batteries of field artillery were ordered from Fort Sill, Okla., to Brownsville, and a regiment of infantry was ordered from Texas City, Texas, to Brownsville. The orders were issued by the War Department to General Funston.

These measures, it was stated, were not taken because of any change in opinion as to the extent and character of the raids into Texas from Mexico, but because citizens of the Brownsville district were apprehensive that their lives and property would be endangered if more troops were not stationed there.

Brownsville has been full of rumors that there is a concerted movement among Mexicans to capture Brownsville. Whatever the real reason of the Government in ordering the two batteries of artillery and the regiment of infantry to Brownsville, its course indicates that it felt it would be wise to take every precaution against any possible movement on the part of Mexicans.

Yesterday President Wilson had telegraphed Governor Ferguson, in response to a suggestion of the Governor, that it might be well to send more regular troops to Texas, that General Funston was in charge of the United States forces on the border and Governor Ferguson could have more troops if General Funston requested it. The action today in strengthening the regular forces in the Brownsville district was by direct orders from the War Department. To General Funston was left the selection of the troops that will be sent.

The War Department today gave the following statement to the press:

It is now established beyond doubt that a considerable portion of a band of outlaws came from Mexico and were officers and soldiers of Carranza's forces, doubtless acting without authority of their chiefs. Once on this side of the river, they were joined by about twenty-five Texas Mexicans, all well armed and mounted, and proceeded to raid the country as far as Norias.

General Funston also telegraphed under yesterday's date:

Nothing serious has occurred within the past two days. It is known that the principal part of the band of outlaws was driven across the Rio Grande into Mexico.

Indignation was aroused at the Carranza agency here over the statements that soldiers of the Carranza Army participated in the Texas raids. The statement said:

"Instead of promoting, facilitating, or supporting any effort to create disorder in Mexican territory, the civil and military authorities of the Constitutionalist Government in the State of Tamaulipas are willing to co-operate with the United States civil and military authorities and with the authorities of the State of Texas in every way possible to prevent such bands of marauders being organized in Mexican territory."

LAWTON, Okla., Aug. 14.—Orders were received at Fort Sill late this afternoon from Frederick Funston's headquarters for Batteries B and E, Fifth Field Artillery, to entrain for Brownsville, Texas. Preparations for departure were begun immediately.

GALVESTON, Texas, Aug. 14.—The Twenty-sixth Infantry was ordered to Brownsville from Texas City. It leaves tomorrow.

AMERICAN SOLDIERS FIGHT WITH MEXICANS

Riots in Streets of Nogales, Arizona—American Reported Slain Across Line.

NOGALES, Ariz., Aug. 14.—Scores of American soldiers were participants in a riot in the streets of Nogales tonight as the result, it is said, of a rumor that Mexicans had threatened to take their guns away.

Ten Mexicans were attacked before the officers got control of the men. One American was reported to have been slain in Nogales, Mexico, Just across the border from here by infuriated Mexicans.

The soldiers that engaged in the rioting were members of the Twelfth Infantry and the Sixth Field Artillery. They were joined by a number of civilians, who shouted "Run all the Mexicans across the line!"

Two hundred Mexicans fled across the boundary. The riot was the culmination of high feeling between Americans and Mexicans which had been growing for several days. Soldiers, it was said, had been pushed off the sidewalks by Mexicans and subjected to other petty insults.

DEFENDS SEAMEN'S ACT.

Redfield Holds It Would Not Injure Pacific Mail Fleet.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—Department of Commerce officials took issue today with statements that the sale of the Pacific Mail steamships to the Atlantic Transport Company was necessary because the Seamen's act would render their operation on the Pacific unprofitable.

The assigned reason for the transfer of the ships was that under the act as to employment of foreigners, and especially Chinese, the cost of operation would be so increased that the vessels would be run at a loss. This, Secretary Redfield denies, and attention was called today to regulations issued during the past week as to the matter of language and the ability of members of the crew to understand orders, as supporting his contention.

Mr. Redfield holds that it is not necessary under the act that a seaman be able to speak English fluently or at all if he understands ordinary words of command on board ship, and this, he said, was something that could be quickly determined in an adequate test. The Secretary has asserted that the real reason for the position taken by the Pacific Mail Company was that the Panama Canal act, barring the vessels of corporations owned by railroad companies, stood in the way of the plans of the company, and that it was entirely practicable for the company to continue in business on the Pacific under the Seamen's act.

It had been expected here among shipping experts for months that the vessels of the Pacific Mail would be sold to an Eastern corporation and continued under American registry. This corporation being free from the condition that confronts the Pacific Mail as a railroad-owned corporation will be able to enter into competition with lines using the Panama Canal in trade between New York and the Orient, which the Pacific Mail could not do.

THREE PROSTRATED BY HEAT

Man Falls from Third-Story Window and Skull Is Fractured.

While the thermometer reached 84 at 3:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, there was less suffering in this city than on Friday, and few prostrations were reported to the police. Weather Bureau experts explained this condition by pointing out that there had been a decided drop in the humidity. On Friday it registered 98 per cent. at 8 o'clock in the morning, and yesterday at the same hour the humidity was 31 per cent. lower. It continued to fall off during the day, and at 4 in the afternoon was 45 per cent.

It was said at the Weather Bureau that hot weather might be expected for the next three or four days and that there probably would be no decided change from present conditions. A storm of hurricane force which was raging in the region of the West Indies had headed for the west and probably would be lost in the gulf.

Martin Lowry, an engineer of 209 East 121st Street, was injured mortally yesterday by a fall from a window of his home on the third floor. He had suffered much from the heat and was leaning from the window when he became faint and lost his balance. He was removed to Harlem Hospital suffering from a fractured skull.

These prostrations were reported:

CLARK, EDWARD, 56 years old, an engineer, of 189 Park Row; removed to Volunteer Hospital from his home.

MESKO, NELLIE, 18 years old, 308 Cherry Street; overcome in home; attended by physician from Gouverneur Hospital.

MURRAY, JOHN, 46 years old, 2,408 Bathgate Avenue, the Bronx; overcome in front of 2,234 Third Avenue; Harlem Hospital.

The weather forecast issued last night predicted fair weather today and tomorrow, with gentle to moderate west winds.

For throwing cold water on a horse and pulling its tail in an effort to make it get up when the animal was overcome in the street by the heat, Richard Demaria, an ice dealer of 4,226 Broadway, was arrested last night on a charge of cruelty to animals on the complaint of Mrs. Mary McDonald Mullen, wife of an author of 660 West 176th Street. In Night Court he was fined $10.

MEN'S HOTEL AT STAKE, TOO.

May Be Discontinued, Being Part of the Arbuckle Philanthropy.

The fate of the Arbuckle Deep Sea Hotel, known as the Jacob A. Stamler Hotel for Working Girls, still hangs in the balance. It was hoped the Arbuckle heirs would announce their decision yesterday, but later it was reported they would do so before the end of this week.

In the agitation for the preservation of the girls' home, the men's auxiliary has been overlooked, and it is not generally known that the Arbuckle Deep Sea Hotel also includes the old schooner yacht Gitana. One of the latest arrivals on the auxiliary, a young fellow just starting to work in this city, was heartbroken yesterday at the thought that he would have to give up his home on Aug. 28.

"I don't know what I'd have done when I came to New York," he said, "if it hadn't been for the auxiliary. No young fellow, unless he's got a profession, can get a job right away that pays him enough to live in a decent boarding house, and I was very glad when a policeman sent me to the yacht. There are about twenty of us on board, and just as soon as a fellow gets a better job and can afford it he moves out and makes room for a newcomer. It's a great thing when you can only get $5 or $6 a week, to have a clean room and good food for a price that you can pay."

Captain F. D. Sheeley, who has managed the Arbuckle Deep Sea Hotel for nine years, said he had heard of no new developments regarding the continuation of the charity. According to the notice he posted on the bulletin board, the hotel is to be discontinued on Aug. 28, and until that date everything will remain just as it is.

ZAPATISTA REVENGE ON AMERICAN PAPER

Invaded Premises of Mexican Herald, Defying the Brazilian Minister and Official Seal.

START OWN PAPER THERE

Mexicans Apathetic Under Conditions of Anarchy That Prevailed Under the Southern Leaders.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MEXICO CITY, July 23.—The forcible suppression of The Mexican Herald by the Zapatistas and the invasion of its premises and plant by El Renovador, the semi-official organ of the Southern faction, has caused a painful impression in the American colony and among foreign residents of the capital in general. Yet no one seems able to suggest a remedy. The incident is taken as a proof of the utter anarchy which now prevails here.

When Senhor Cardoso de Oliveira, the Brizilian Minister, arrived at the Herald Building, where Mr. and Mrs. Hudson and their young daughter were marooned, he was rudely told that he could not enter, and insulted and threatened by the soldiers mounting guard. When he appealed to the Governor of the Federal District Magaña and the District Secretary Jurado, a relative of Soto y Gama, he was bluntly informed that he would get no redress, and had to listen to remarks disparaging to Americans and the United States.

The Minister telegraphed to Lagos Cházaro, who is at Toluca, and received a reply full of profuse apologies. It is known that Lagos Cházaro communicated with the Zapatista authorities here, urging them to return The Herald building and plant to their legitimate owners, but not the slightest attention was paid to his request. The small Zapatista faction here laughs at Lagos Cházora, who, like Gonzales Garza before him, has had to endure numberless humiliations.

The foreign diplomats have been holding meetings to decide on a line of action in view of the gross insults put upon Senhor Cardoso by petty officials. But the diplomats are powerless.

The seal of the Brazilian legation, in charge of American interests, had been affixed to the pressroom of The Herald just before the occupation of the building was completed, but the intruders tore it down, showing the little regard they have for the rights and dignity of the United States. The young Mexican employe who had affixed the seal was arrested.

El Renovador thus tries to defend the suppression of the American newspaper:

"The Mexican Herald carried on a perfidious campaign against the Revolution. During the Huerta régime it applied to the revolutionist the epithets of 'banditti,' 'savages,' 'unspeakable assassins,' &c. When the dictatorship fell The Herald continued its malignant work, by means of insidious articles, perfidious paragraphs, and the insertion of manifestos and communications openly adverse to the Conventionist government.

"The Revolution is bound to defend itself even against foreigners who attack it, and The Mexican Herald, a foreign newspaper, which intruded in our affairs, has been closed, as previously Mexican papers, hostile to the Revolution, had been. The Revolution cannot afford to allow its enemies to keep their weapons, and it is vain for those enemies to appeal to the freedom of the Press, which they have used against the Revolution, whose ultimate aim is true liberty. In closing The Mexican Herald, the Revolution, which has to be implacable toward its enemies, acted in self-defense."

The life of the capital is at a standstill and prices have reached prohibitive figures. Tortillas, the small round corn cakes which are the bread of the poor, cost now 20 centavos apiece, whereas formerly as many as ten could be had for 1 centavo.

It is a frequent topic of conversation among foreigners here how it is that a city of at least 500,000 inhabitants has submitted so tamely to the oppressive misrule of the various revolutionary factions which have succeeded one another in power at the capital during the past twelve months. No explanation is volunteered beyond the apathy of the masses of the people in public questions. The number of Zapatistas at present in the city is probably less than 1,000, poorly armed and ill-disciplined, and yet the city submits to their control with fatalistic passivity. Few Mexicans now look for a remedy from within, and many of them are resigned to the idea of intervention. It is not uncommon to hear Mexicans say, "President Wilson got us into this mess; let him get us out of it."

It is regarded as particularly unfortunate that dissentions should have broken out in the American colony at the present time. A section of the colony thinks that some of the American members of the International Committee have exceeded their powers, and the proposal before the American Society of Mexico is to apply to them the recall and appoint new representatives.

Members of the foreign colonies do not always get thanks for their charity to the Mexican poor. An English lady living in the suburbs gave a small quantity of corn to a poor Indian woman, who repaid her by spreading the report that she had much corn hidden in her house, with the result that the premises were broken into by a hungry crowd and looted.

TAKE 35 IN GAMBLING RAID.

"Dollar John" Langler and B. Kaufman Alleged Owners.

A raid on an alleged gambling house was made yesterday afternoon on the fifth floor of a tenement in East Tenth Street by Inspector O'Brien and several detectives of the Second Inspection District. Thirty-five prisoners taken were locked up in the Fifth Street Station on charges of disorderly conduct.

Detectives were sent to the house early in the afternoon, and after gambling on the races for a considerable time, according to the police, gave a signal to the group of detectives waiting in the street. The detectives rushed up the stairs and chopped down the door with axes.

The detectives assert the gambling place was run by "Dollar John" Langler and Bryan Kaufmann. A gambling house in Sixth Avenue, said to have been operated by "Dollar John" and a man named Lubin was raided two weeks ago, and the police say the men had started in business again.

The police say that about two weeks ago Mrs. Lubin visited the Police Commissioner and asked permission for her husband to open a social club in Broadway. No encouragement was given her.

Hallboy Caught as Burglar.

James Richards, a negro elevator boy in an apartment house at 51 East Fifty-ninth Street, was arrested last night and charged with burglary. Detectives have had a score of complaints from dwellers in the house. Last night Detectives Shields, Quane, and Veal hid in the rooms of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert J. Goodwin, whose apartments had been robbed five times in as many weeks. The Goodwins had left the building less than ten minus before, the detectives said, when the creak of a jimmy was heard and the hall door was forced by Richards.

NOTE ASKS MEXICANS TO END THEIR WAR

and there is nothing in the note in the way of reiteration or suggestion of the President's declaration that if the factionists can not accommodate their differences and unite for the purpose of setting up a Government "within a very short time," this Government "will be constrained to decide what means should be employed by the United States in order to help Mexico save herself and serve her people."

The authorship of the note is credited to Señor Suarez-Mujica, the Ambassador of Chile, and it is also reported that the revision of the original draft was made by Dr. Naon, the Ambassador of Argentina, but owing to the reticence observed by the parties to the recent so-called Pan-American conferences as to the details of their procedure, no statement in this connection is forthcoming from any authoritative source.

General Carranza is showing a disposition indicative of a desire to demonstrate that he is preserving order in Mexico and has no unfriendly feelings toward foreigners, to whom he has assured the fullest protection. This attitude, however, is inconsistent with his open criticism of the proposed program, his slighting references to Senhor Cardoso, the Brazilian Minister in Mexico City, who left there because he found matters intolerable, and his action in dismissing from Mexico Señor Ortega, the Guatemalan Minister, supposedly to mark his protest against the participation of Guatemala in an effort to establish good government in Mexico. While the argument is advanced here that Carranza may be impressed by the tone of the appeal and may show a willingness to heed it, the more general opinion is that he has no intention of receding from his policy of opposition to the attempt to adjust Mexico's troubles by suggestions from without the republic.

Vera Cruz Mayor Ousted.

The Navy Department today received cable advices from Vera Cruz that the Mayor of that city had been dismissed from office for permitting the anti-foreign demonstrations there last Sunday. This Government's reports of these demonstrations were so alarming that the battleships Louisiana and New Hampshire were ordered to proceed to the Mexican port without delay. Reassuring messages came from Vera Cruz after they had departed from Newport, and it was announced at the Navy Department that, with other vessels, they would comprise a special squadron which would establish a base somewhere south of Hampton Roads, so as to be available in the event of serious trouble in any near-by countries. Yesterday the two battleships were off Cape Hatteras. The department said today that it was not known where the Louisiana and the New Hampshire were, but they were still on their way southward. The department declined to say where the base of operations would be established.

The Navy Department's advices concerning the dismissal of the Mayor of Vera Cruz came in a message which the Department summarized in this statement:

"Commander William P. Scott, of the U. S. S. Marietta, senior naval officer at Vera Cruz, has informed the Department that when General Carranza earned of the incendiary speech made by the Mayor of Vera Cruz on Aug. 8, he was very indignant and thereupon removed the Mayor from office and placed him under arrest. Commander Scott further states that the local papers of Aug. 10, quote General Aguilar as stating that the Mayor's action was untimely and ill-advised. It is reported that the demonstration has been generally condemned by the Mexican people as unwise."

A storm has delayed the United States cruiser Sacramento, which is bringing Senhor Cardoso, the Brazilian Minister, from Vera Cruz to the United States. The Sacramento is expected to reach New Orleans tomorrow. Leon J. Canova, Chief of the Division of Mexican Affairs in the State Department, will meet the Brazilian envoy on his arrival and thank him in the name of President Wilson for the services he rendered while in charge of United States interests in Mexico since the severance of diplomatic relations between the Huerta administration and this Government. The President and the Secretary of State feel that too much honor cannot be shown to Senhor Cardoso. Mr. Canova will escort him to Washington, but it could not be said today what arrangements would be made for showing him the appreciation of the Government on his arrival here. From Washington Senhor Cardoso will go to visit Senhor da Gama, the Brazilian Ambassador, at Long Branch. The Sacramento is bringing also Señor Ortega, the Guatemalan Minister to Mexico, who was expelled from the country by General Carranza, presumably to show Carranza's displeasure over the participation of Guatemala in the Pan-American peace conference.

To emphasize its appreciation and gratitude for the manner in which Señor Cardoso had cared for American interests in Mexico City, the State Department today made the following formal statement:

"Senhor Dom J. M. Cardoso de Oliveira in 1896 entered the diplomatic service of his country as Second Secretary to Legation at Berlin; from there he went to Berne in 1898 as Second Secretary, in 1899 as First Secretary at La Paz, Bolivia; same year Chargé d'Affaires at Berne; 1900, First Secretary at Paris; 1901, First Secretary at London, remaining there apparently until 1907.

"In 1909 he went to La Paz, Bolivia, as Minister, occupying that post for three years; in August, 1912, he went to Mexico City as Minister, which post he has since occupied.

"Upon the departure of Chargé d'Affaires of the United States O'Shaughnessy, Mr. Cardoso de Oliveira took charge of American interests about the 1st of May, 1914. Since that time the Brazilian Minister has, by his tact, courtesy, and exceptional ability, most worthily represented this Government unofficially before the numerous Governments that have been set up in Mexico City. A notable incident of his representation was at the time of the death of the American citizen McManus, when, within eighteen days from the time of his death, the widow was paid the equivalent of $20,000 gold and apologies were made on behalf of the authorities."

FIVE STATES DECLARE REVOLUTION ENDED

Their Commanders to Enter Peace Negotiations, Ignoring Old Leaders.

EL PASO, Aug. 14.—Five States and one Territory of Mexico are authoritatively announced to have declared through their military Governors that the revolution is at an end so far as they are concerned.

Carranza and Villa or other forces in arms would be met by resistance should they attempt to enter these precincts of Mexico. Troops in these districts will be returned to peaceful pursuits.

According to the report the declaration of military Governors was made with a view to preserving the autonomy of their communal organizations and to enable them to enter peace negotiations without factional allegiance as between Carranza, Villa, or Zapata.

The Governors who thus declared for armed neutrality are of various shades of political affiliation. The Territory of Tepic favors Villa. Oaxaca State has maintained independence. Guerrero's present status is unknown here. Chiapas is Villa territory. Sinaloa is Carranza territory and Durango is Carranza-Arrieta brothers territory.

It is said the soldiers in these States are to be used in planting and harvesting.

One report states that the forces Villa sent to Durango several weeks ago to head off an advance by General Obregon joined in a State movement there and will not rejoin Villa.

An announcement from Villa sources adds that Governor José María Maytorena of Sonora, Governor Santiago Ramirez of Coahuila, Villa adherents, and Governor Fidel Avila of Chihuahua, may be expected to co-operate with the Villa Government in its recently proclaimed noncombatant attitude.

This would make in all eight States and one Territory of Mexico pledged to some form of peaceful settlement of Mexico's internal disorders.

MEXICAN LEADER TO AID.

Will Try to Prevent Armed Men from Crossing the Border.

BROWNSVILLE, Texas, Aug. 14.—General Nafarrate announced through the Mexican Consulate here that he was trying to aid in stopping the depredations of Mexican outlaws.

General Nafarrate also said he would give orders that no armed Mexicans be permitted to cross the Rio Grande from the American side except at regular ports of entry.

"If they do cross," said Nafarrate, "they will be as bandits, and you know what happens to a bandit."

Sheriff W. T. Vann of Brownsville and Ranger Captain H. L. Ransom, with their men and some of the deputies from Hidalgo county, immediately west of here, concentrated today in searching the brush near Santa María and Mercedes, up the river from Brownsville, for Mexicans, reported to be gathering in that section last night. Late today they reported that no important discoveries had been made.

Minor cases of pillage have been charged to roving Mexican bands.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, Aug. 14.—After a conference between General Frederick Funston, commanding the Southern Department, and a committee headed by Congressman John Garner, General Funston announced tonight that he believed the committee had established its contention that the disorder in the Rio Grande Valley had been fostered by Mexican authorities. Affidavits were submitted to the War Department that a date had actually been set by the Mexicans for the sacking of Brownsville.

General Funston said that up to the time of the conference he did not believe the outlawry in the valley was receiving its backing from the Mexican side of the Rio Grande. But upon presentation of a mass of evidence he said he was convinced the committee possessed information which warranted prompt action.

Affidavits were shown General Funston tending to substantiate a report that General Nafarrate, Carranza Commander at Matamoros, had boasted that when the time came he "would plant the Mexican flag on top of the Brownsville Post Office."

BANDITS KILL POSTMASTER.

Then Loot His Store in Little Texas Border Town.

Special to The New York Times.

EL PASO, Aug. 14.—Crossing the line from Chihuahua, forty miles east of El Paso, a band of Mexican brigands, armed and mounted, this morning invaded the little town of Polvo, Texas, looted the store of Julius Madrid, and calling him to the door of his house, shot him down in front of his family. Madrid was an American citizen, the general storekeeper, and Postmaster of Polvo.

A posse of Texas rangers started in pursuit of the bandits and were trailing them through the woods of the Big Bend country in an effort to capture them before they succeeded in crossing the border again.

GOOD WORK BY RED CROSS.

Silliman Praises Agent in Mexico City—Riots in Durango.

The American Red Cross received through the State Department yesterday a copy of a dispatch from Special Representative Silliman at Vera Cruz, which said:

"From Mexico City papers and from other sources it is very clear that Mr. O'Connor (the American Red Cross representative) is doing a fine and helpful work in Mexico City. It is understood that he has gained the good will of the authorities and he has not been hindered in any way. He made a favorable impression here, as reported by me at that time."

Under date of Aug. 9, a reliable report from Durango, Mexico, says, in part:

"Food riots today. The people are still parading streets and some people sacked three box cars loaded for exports."

"Unless relief is given in some manner, the town is scheduled for another looting," reads a report from Hermosillo, State of Sonora, dated Aug. 3, received by the Red Cross yesterday. "Food is scarce, money worth nearly nothing and merchants are bringing in nothing."

RACE CROWD SEES MARE KILL DRIVER

A. C. Cornwell, 70 Years Old, Is Crushed by Trotter at Mineola, L. I.

CLIMBS UPON HER BACK

Club Official Tries to Stop Animal After Rein Breaks, but She Trips and Falls.

Special to The New York Times.

MINEOLA, L. I., Aug. 14.—The trotters in the eighth race at the Matinée of the Nassau Driving Club at the Fair Grounds here this afternoon had swept down the back stretch and were going into the clubhouse turn when a mare driven by Alfred C. Cornwell, 70 years old, Treasurer of the club, was seen to break. The horses and their drivers were far away from the throng in the grandstand, but the spectators could see clearly as Mr. Cornwell rose slowly in his sulky and crept out along the back of his horse, and they watched breathless with excited interest.

"He said he'd do it," exclaimed Luke Otten of the National Driving Club, to whom Mr. Cornwell had spoken just before he had driven on the track. "He told me then that his mare was acting badly. 'I think she'll run away today,' he said, 'and if she does I'm going to climb out on her back.'"

Far up the track the spectators could see the aged horseman working his way up on the mare's back. Apparently he was striving for a seat on the withers where he could get a short hold on the reins and drag the mare to a standstill, and the watchers looked to see him accomplish this in another moment, when they saw the mare stagger. The animal stumbled and a shout that was half a groan went up as mare and man went down in a heap. The other animals, swung wide of the wreck by their drivers, shot past and onto the track behind them rushed spectators and officials.

Eugene Dower, Superintendent of the fair grounds, was the first to reach Mr. Cornwell. He found him crushed beneath the animal he had driven and with the help of others got the mare off him and carried Mr. Cornwell to the clubhouse.

There a physician was called, but though he worked over Mr. Cornwell for some time he could not resuscitate him. Apparently he had been killed outright.

Horsemen said that a rein had broken and apparently the mare had tripped on the dangling end. Had her feet escaped this Mr. Cornwell would have pulled her down once he was astride her withers.

Mr. Cornwell had been an official of the club for two years. He was a veteran trainer and driver of trotters, and lived at Willis Avenue and Third Street here. He leaves a widow and a daughter, Miss Alice Cornwell.

There were about 200 persons, of which a majority were women, in the grand stand. Mr. Cornwell's son Albert, also a trainer, was on the grounds and was among the first to get to his father.

The trotting was under the management of the Nassau Driving Club and according to the rules of the International Trotting Association. No cash prizes are given. The races are spoken of as "matinees." The winners get ribbons which are pinned on the horses' bridle.

Mr. Cornwell is the owner of much real estate and was reputed to be worth $200,000.

Edison Chemist Poisoned.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., Aug. 14.—Poisoned, in the opinion of Dr. F. Elmore Hubbard, by the fumes of analine dyes, with which he had been experimenting, Frank Savage of 378 Bloomfield Avenue, this town, a chemist at the laboratory of Thomas A. Edison in West Orange, was taken to Mountainside Hospital today. It is said that his condition is not serious.

LODGE SEES UNITY AMONG REPUBLICANS

Bay State Senator Rejoices at What He Says Means Victory for His Party.

WORCESTER, Mass. Aug. 14.—United States Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, speaking today at the outing of the Worcester County Republican Club, deplored the division of the party in 1912 and saw reason for rejoicing in the fact that it was "reuniting once more in a common and commanding purpose." "I do "I prefer to say reuniting," he added. "I do not like overmuch the words 'return' or 'comeback,' for I have no distinctions to draw, and in our reunion, when completed, the Republican party will not only find victory, but, what is far more important, prosperity and repose will once more be granted to our business, and our high standing abroad, so sadly impaired, will be regained."

It was Senator Lodge's first political speech in the State campaign. He cautioned his hearers against allowing any differences in the primaries to develop into a party split, and asserted that "Republican success was never more necessary, not only to the welfare, but to the safety of the country, than at the present time."

Among the other speakers was Representative J. Hampton Moore of Pennsylvania, a member of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives who said:

"'Lest We Forget' is about the best text that can be recommended to Republicans at the present time. The European war and the temporary prosperity it has brought about in spots is being used for all it is worth to make Republicans forget what was 'done to them' in 1912. Above all things this is the time not to forget, but to remember. We should remember that the whole country was prosperous and that all men were employed prior to 1912.

"In seven months, from Jan. 1 to July 31, 1914, the loss of revenue under the Wilson-Underwood tariff law, as compared with the repealed Republican tariff law of the previous year, was upward of $23,000,000. The damage to the country in that period was enormous, and foreign manufacturers displaced $248,000,000 worth of American labor.

"If any one thinks the cost of living has been reduced by Mr. Wilson's plan of reducing the tariff and lowering the 'artificial' barriers which check competitive imports, all he has to do is to compare the prices of 1915 in the heyday of the Wilson Administration with the prices of household commodities in the closing days of the Administration of Mr. Taft.

"And now the Wilson Administration, having passed all the vexatious laws it could, is trying to assure all business, both big and little, that it did not mean any harm."

FALL IN GYMNASIUM FATAL.

Splintered Bone on Spinal Column Results in Paralysis.

An autopsy performed yesterday on the body of Melvyn L. St. John, 120 Brooklyn, who died of paralysis on Friday night, showed that a splinter of bone from the spinal column had penetrated two vertebrae, rupturing a small blood vessel, causing a hemorrhage and resultant clot which pressed upon the spinal cord.

While he was exercising in the Bedford Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association two weeks ago, Mr. St. John slipped and twisted his back. He thought it no more than a strain until early in the week he felt a numbness in his toes. He called in his physician, Dr. J. B. Weighart of the Post-Graduate Hospital, who told him to go to bed at once. The paralysis rapidly extended from the feet up the legs, finally affecting the neck and throat and causing loss of sight.

Mr. St. John was day supervisor of the operating force at the main office of the Western Union. He had lived in Brooklyn for fifteen years, coming from Buffalo. He was a member of Queen City Lodge, Masons.

MRS. BROOKS GIVES A PARTY FOR HER CAT

Flanked by Boy Scouts, Her Pet on a Plush Cushion, She Marches to Central Park.

GIFTS FOR THE HONORED ONE

Under a Spreading Elm a Real Indian Names the Persian Animal "King George VII."

"And this is our hotel!"

The speaker, a young woman gowned in modish taffeta, stood in the doorway of the Hotel Wellington, which is in Seventh Avenue, just above Fifty-fifth Street, yesterday afternoon and watched a motley crew issuing down the steps and straggling in the scorching August sun toward Central Park. She spoke with that drooping inflection that queries more eloquently than slang, "Can you beat it?" Then, having watched a moment, she turned and went in. Pierre, the bus boy, in the dining room, was trying to convey to Mrs. O'Brien and Mrs. O'Neil with many shoulder shrugs and rhetorical errors that he would rather be in the trenches, while those two women merely shook their heads and resumed their mopping.

Meanwhile the strange brigade continued its way up Seventh Avenue. At its head were Boy Scouts Leonard Lane, John Looran, and Eddie Sweeting. Leonard and John carried American flags, their blouses suggesting the origin of the sport shirt, while Eddie bore a cushion covered with a gold-incrusted satin drapery, seated on which was a huge champagne-colored Persian cat. Beside the boy with the cat walked a stately woman. She was a woman of indeterminate middle age, still handsome, and with an erect, masterful carriage indicative of accomplishment. The color scheme of her attire was black and white, even to her striped parasol, which helped make her cheeks seem pinker than they really were; also, she was resplendent in jewels.

Huge Indian Follows.

There followed a huge Indian in the picturesque costume of his fathers, his cerise shirt fairly screaming in the blazing sun, and a squaw, likewise in native garb. Then followed a heterogenous band of men and women carrying concise packages of varying shapes through the covers of which grease was beginning to spread. At a respectful range and slightly detached walked a cluster of men and women, a sprinkling of cameras among them identifying them as newspaper persons.

Stray pedestrians turned to look blankly as the strange procession straggled along. Some stopped to ask its meaning of the rear guard, while others stared stupified and walked on. Those who asked were told that the cat was King Edward VII. and that the woman in black and white was Mrs. Anita Comfort Brooks, his mistress, on the way to the park to give her darling a birthday party. There was no time for more, or the curious might have been told that Mrs. Brooks was President of the Gridiron, Gotham, and other clubs, exponent of the vegetarian cult, believer in a tax on bachelors, and space getter generally. But that would have given the party a chance to get well into the park, through the throngs of Saturday afternoon loiterers and on the green to the south of the large commons on which Formerly Russia but Future America plays ball and tennis.

Here, at the foot of a great elm, black and white striped cloths were spread and the grease-exuding parcels gave up their contents of stuffed eggs, potted ham sandwiches, bananas, and Swiss cheese. While the gift bearers deposited these, Mrs. Brooks was busy talking and dressing King Edward for the photographers. She took from a large box an ermine mantle, a little pink garment, which she explained he wore after the bath, and a tiny gilt crown, studded with brilliants. Then, with the crowned King on one arm and a placard bearing the pictures of the crowned heads of Europe, with the caption "Which Is the Guilty One?" in her hand, she faced the clicking shutters.

Names "King George."

Swarms of people scenting the unusual in the already saturated atmosphere, crowded about the hollow and translated the scene through individual eyes and imaginations. There was flitting and jabbering, and in the general commotion only one face remained placid. It was the countenance of Little Chief Flying Bird, the Sioux of the cerise shirt. Perspiration trickled down the pock-marked face, cast in heroic mold, and streaked the dull red paint that decorated his cheeks quite blatantly, but honestly. There was no other sign of motion on the bronze face of Little Chief, but lines about the corners of his mouth suggested that behind that mask were thoughts that, translated into action, might startle all these pale faces had he not the marvelous self control of generations of warrior ancestors.

Not even when he spoke the Sioux words, "Le oupitu kin West yela Kola," naming the cat "King George VII.," and poured water from a silver spoon upon the crowned head of the champagne-colored cat, did his face shake off its Sphinxian look.

"The spoon," said Mrs. Brooks as she arranged the tableau, "was given me by General Beaureguard, who fought in the late war, and the members of my club had it thus mounted on wood for me to use as a gavel."

The crowd now hung around the feast till the invited guests could scarcely move, until three policemen, for whom an emissary had been dispatched, were seen approaching. This sent the timid scurrying, but a little boy and girl who arrived simultaneously with the policemen had their own reasons for leaving.

"Aw," said the boy when he had surveyed the scene a moment, "this ain't no moving pitcher—it's a party." And turning on their heels disdainfully they withdrew.

More pictures of Mrs. Brooks and King Edward and Little Chief and Waaheha, his squaw, and the Boy Scouts, who by this time had declared themselves irrevocably in favor of angel food and deviled eggs as opposed to Persian cats and tableaux. But Mrs. Elizabeth Turner, a granddaughter of Francis Scott Key, who wrote "The Star-Spangled Banner," was not of them. Mrs. Turner, after careful reconnoisance, was perched on a boulder eating bananas, and she refused to budge even for art and posterity.

At 5 o'clock Mrs. Brooks was still talking, her guests were still eating and the policemen in the distance were yawning and shooing the curious away. King Edward was purring now, for he had eaten a salad of fish and drank his pasteurized milk. And in the depths of their deep sockets the eyes of Little Chief twinkled, but his features remained immobile.

"I'm glad I'm poor if them folks are rich," said one of the policemen to a reporter as he sought the solitudes of the park.

308,213 FORD CAR CHECKS.

Task of Mailing Rebates to Purchasers of Past Year Tremendous.

Special to The New York Times.

DETROIT, Mich., Aug. 14.—From Detroit a flood of wealth—more than $15,000,000—is being distributed to United States folk by the Ford Motor Company. It is not the award of $50 rebate checks to each 1915 purchaser of the familiar little motor cars that is bothering the Ford officials. It is the clerical work of printing, drawing, signing, recording and mailing the 308,213 pieces of welcome paper that has turned the big Ford general offices topsy-turvy for the last fortnight.

Aug. 1 or thereabouts was the date fixed for the big distribution of the checks, and as early as a month ago preparations were made to put them in the hands of the car owners. To do this expeditiously more than 300,000 envelopes were printed, of the open-face variety, of a special size to handle the checks. The checks were lithographed in a special size also to permit of a telautographic device to be used in signing them. Night after night a train of check-bearing trucks comes up to the Post Office portico.

DEAD IN AUTO WRECK.

Headlights Failed; Four Others Hurt as Car Went Into Ditch.

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, N. J., Aug. 14.—One person was killed and four others were injured when an automobile went off the roadway and crashed into a tree on the Mountain Lakes (Boonton, N. J.) highway early today. Leon Veith, 23 years old, of 564 East Twenty-fourth Street, Paterson, died of his injuries in St. Joseph's Hospital, Paterson this morning.

John R. Newell, a draughtsman, 23 years old, of 234 Paterson Avenue, Paterson, is at St. Joseph's Hospital with fractured ribs, concussion of the brain, cuts, and bruises. He probably will recover. Miss Teresa Tierney 22, a school teacher, of 344 Totowa Avenue, Paterson, suffered a broken right arm and cuts about the head. Miss Marion Whitmore, a school teacher, 22, of 158 Hamburg Avenue, Paterson, suffered a broken leg and lacerations about the head and body. George Tierney, a brother of Miss Tierney, was driving the machine and escaped with minor injuries.

The automobile party was planned by the Tierneys and a visit was made to a friend's home in Dover, N. J. Miss Whitmore and Mr. Veith, who were expected to announce their engagement soon, were invited guests. The car, a brand-new touring machine, was owned by James Johnson, for whom Tierney drove. Tierney had Mr. Johnson's permission to use the machine.

The party left Dover on the return trip to Paterson about midnight. Trouble was experienced with the headlights, but after fixing the broken wires, the party resumed the journey. About four miles north of Boonton, near Mountain Lakes, the lights suddenly went out, and Tierney was unable to see the road. Before he could stop the machine shot off across a ditch at a curve and struck a tree sideways. All but Tierney and Miss Whitmore in the front seat were thrown out.

Tierney hailed a passing machine and succeeded in getting four doctors, who, after administering first aid, took all of the party to this city.

Veith was prominent in local athletics and was a student at Springfield (Mass.) Training School, where he was learning to be a Y. M. C. A. physical director. He was also supervisor of the local Monumental Heights playground.

AUTO KILLS NEW YORKER.

Billing Pinned Under Wrecked Car in Colorado—Rawling Hurt.

Special to The New York Times.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Col., Aug. 14.—Arthur H. Billing and Sylvester E. Rawling, both of New York, were hurt, the former dying early this morning, as the result of an auto accident on the main traveled road in Estes Park, 200 miles from Colorado Springs, Thursday afternoon.

Mr. Billing, who was driving the car, occupied the front seat. He was pinned under the car. Mr. Rawling and another man, who were in the rear seat, were thrown clear and escaped with minor injuries. The accident was due to a misunderstanding, an auto failing to turn out to let Billing pass. To avoid a collision, Billing turned his car into the ditch.

Mr. Billing was 42 years old. He came here three years ago for his health, but recovered and returned to New York. He came here last June for the Summer, and soon would have returned to New York. He was an Oxford man, and was once private secretary to Joseph Pulitzer, owner of The New York World.

Mr. Billing was for years on the business staff of The New York World. Mr. Rawling is musical critic of The Evening World. Both were born in Cornwall, England, and had been lifelong friends. Mr. Billing was a member of the Manhattan Club and the Aero Club of America. He had always taken a deep interest in sports, especially aeronautics, yachting, and motoring.

Skull Fractured in Auto Crash.

In an effort to avoid a motor truck on the Hudson Boulevard, near the Flower Hill Cemetery, yesterday, Joseph Signorytis of 122 East Twenty-fourth Street, Bayonne, crashed through a florist's plate glass window, and knocked down August Buttenbaum of 525 Jefferson Street, Union Hill, N. J. Signorytis shot head first against the side of the house. His skull was fractured. Doctors said he would probably die. Buttenbaum was not seriously hurt.

C. P. SERVICE UNCHANGED.

Merger with Allan Line Was for Purpose of Separating Accounts.

The organization of the fleets of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Allan Line into one company under the title of the Canadian Pacific Ocean Service, Limited, with head offices at Montreal, will make no financial or operating changes in the management of the steamers.

Five years ago, when the Grand Trunk Railway was preparing to compete with the Canadian Pacific for the transcontinental traffic, the Allan Line, with its fleet of fifty steamships and fifty years' reputation for safety and comfort, was open for purchase to the highest bidder. The Canadian Pacific accordingly bought the major portion of the stock.

In November, 1904, the Canadian Pacific bought out the Elder Dempster Line from Liverpool to New York from the late Sir Alfred Jones in order to get through rates for their freight from the west, which the Allan Line had declined to give them.

Since 1910 the Allan Line steamers have used the Canadian Pacific piers in Quebec and Montreal, and booked passengers for both lines at their offices in Canada and Great Britain. Two new twenty-three knot turbine liners have been built.

The chief object of forming the subsidiary company in Montreal is to separate the steamship accounts of the Canadian Pacific from the railway. The company has interests in several lines operating from Canada into the United States and has to produce its books for the inspection of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

G. Maitland Mersey, the General Manager of the Canadian Pacific steamships, will hold the same position in the new company, which will begin operation officially Oct. 1.

AT 72 HE WHIPS SON-IN-LAW.

W. C. Smith Thrashes Young Man and Rescues Grandchildren.

Wesley C. Smith, 72 years old, a grandfather, was in the Jamaica Police Court yesterday looking as blithe and chipper as if he had not thrashed his husky son-in-law, Charles Gobel, who is 38, a few hours before.

Smith lives at 121 Enfield Street, Union Course, Queens. His daughter, Mrs. Alice Smith Gobel, and her six children have been living with him. Gobel testified yesterday that he had no home. But it was his desire to take two of his children, Alice, 3 years old, and Oscar, 4, to his unknown place of residence which procured him his thrashing.

It was related in court that Gobel appeared late Friday afternoon, when the children were playing in the street, and, grabbing Oscar under one arm and Alice under the other, started away. Smith heard the outcry of the other children and gave chase. Mrs. Gobel also joined in the pursuit. She said yesterday that her husband, dropping the screaming children, struck her in the face.

Smith sailed in and dealt his son-in-law an uppercut on the nose and a straight jab on the eye, following them with swift blows to the body.

"S'nuff!" said the son-in-law, covering his face with his arm.

Smith seized his son-in-law by the collar and dragged him along the street until he met a policeman. When the case came up before Magistrate Joseph Fitch yesterday Gobel looked much the worse for wear. He was held in $300 bail for trial in the Court of Special Sessions.

STANDARD OIL LOSES CHINESE OIL FIELD

Fails to Conclude Permanent Contract with Government for Concessions.

MAY HAVE WIDE RESULTS

Kerosene Our Chief Export to China, and Competition Might Be Disastrous—Japanese Influence Seen.

PEKING, Aug. 14.—W. E. Bemis, Vice President of the Standard Oil Company of New York, left for the United States today, having failed to conclude a permanent contract with the Chinese Government for the exploitation of oil fields of China. Last year the Standard entered into a preliminary agreement with China for the development of oil districts in the northern part of the country. This agreement expires tomorrow.

The American Legation will continue efforts to reconcile the differences between the Government and the company. The expiring agreement provided for the exploration of the oil fields of the Province of Shen-si and the northern part of the Province of Chi-li. It was contemplated that, should they prove sufficiently valuable, a Chino-American company should be formed, in which the Standard would have a controlling interest, the Chinese Government receiving a certain percentage of the shares.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—Failure of the Standard Oil Company to obtain a permanent concession for the development of oil fields in Northern China, as reported today from Peking, caused much comment in commercial and diplomatic circles here. Officials were inclined to speculate as to a possible connection between the failure of these negotiations and the recent granting by China of commercial demands made by Japan.

More than half of the American export business to China is kerosene oil, and the development of extensive oil fields in China by citizens of any other country would have a disastrous effect upon Chinese-American trade, according to commercial officials of the Government. The United States was the only country doing an increased trade in oil with China during 1914, and the oil is about the only article in that trade which has not met severe Japanese competition.

In a report on China's foreign trade for the last year, made public here today, Consul General Thomas Sammons at Shanghai said:

"Aside from kerosene, the imports into China from the United States amounted to only about $12,000,000 in 1914; kerosene importations were valued at $16,686,146. This great American trade may eventually be largely superseded through the opening of prospective oil fields in Northern China. The Standard Oil Company is expending large sums of money to demonstrate whether China's oil fields are to contribute to the Far Eastern demand for kerosene and other petroleum products. In 1914 this company concluded a temporary contract with the Chinese Government to exploit certain provinces in the production of petroleum."

Paul Reinsch, Minister to China, and Consul Sammons are both in the United States, and will visit Washington before returning to China. It is expected they will confer with State and Commerce Department officials on this and other phases of the Chinese situation.

GAS KILLS DRAUGHTSMAN.

Former Instructor at Cornell Thought a Suicide.

Special to The New York Times.

UTICA, N. Y., Aug. 14.—John T. Williams, 47 years old, a former instructor in the Sibley College of Mechanical Engineering of Cornell University, thought to have committed suicide by gas, was found dead this morning in a humble rooming house. Penniless, shattered in nerves, and a victim of excessive use of chloroform, he was found in his chair by the landlady, Mrs. William W. Irving, with gas fumes escaping from the room. He had been dead two hours. Dr. Stephen A. Mahady, the Coroner, said there was a possibility of accidental suffocation.

Williams came here July 10 to work for the Savage Arms Company as a draughtsman on guns. He was considered an expert draughtsman, but resigned after three weeks. Since then he had remained in his room, a great portion of the time under influence of chloroform.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., Aug. 14.—John T. Williams was an instructor in machine design in Sibley College of Mechanical Engineering until about two years ago, when he resigned to take up the work of draughtsman. It was said here today that Mr. Williams had recently been released from the State Hospital at Willard, but his friends said he had been in ill-health for some time.

CHILDREN'S COURT MOVED.

New Quarters Established in East Twenty-second Street.

The Children's Court held its last session yesterday in the red brick building at Third Avenue and Eleventh Street. While the Magistrate was hearing cases the twenty employes of the court and thirty belonging to the Probation Department, helped to move their office furniture.

Hereafter the Children's Court will be held in the new building at 137 East Twenty-second Street, between Third and Lexington Avenues. The building at Third Avenue and Eleventh Street, which is more than half a century old, will be used henceforth by the Department of Water Supply, Gas, and Electricity as a storage warehouse.

shortly after 8 o'clock they had invited Mr. Hildebrandt to accompany them, but he had declined, saying he was tired and would take a nap until they returned. Apparently he did so, and was surprised asleep.

Mrs. Hildebrandt said that a gold watch and chain and some small change, all the money that her husband had had in his pockets, were missing. Nothing else, however, seemed to have been touched in the house.

The daughter, who was the first to come on her father's body, was so overcome by shock that she ran from the house after returning with Policeman Sullivan and did not return. Dr. Brasted was called from Harlem Hospital, but though the girl had told Policeman Sullivan that her father was breathing when she had found him, Dr. Brasted found him dead.

Occupants of a flat at 5 West 117th Street found at 9 o'clock that a burglar had jimmied open the door to their flat, and the police were inclined to believe that the same man might have committed the murder. Finger print experts hurried from Police Headquarters and went over both flats thoroughly searching for marks that might identify the murderer.

Captain Cooper, in charge of the Fourth Branch Detective Bureau, had a dozen men on the crime a few moments after he learned of it, but none of them found a clue to the burglar.

Mr. Hildebrandt was fifty-three years old and was born in Germany. He had acquired a great deal of Harlem property and was well known for his real estate activities. He was the organizer of the Fifth Avenue Property Business Men's Association and an active mover in all plans for the betterment of Harlem.

5 KILLED, 20 HURT ON ENGLISH RAILWAY

Accident to the Irish Mail in the Stowe Tunnel—Aid Rushed from Northampton.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—Five persons were killed and a score injured today in an accident to the second section of the Irish Mail on the London & North Western Railway.

The accident occurred at the Weedon end of the Stowe Tunnel.

Physicians and motor ambulances were quickly sent to Northampton.

GOAT RAISING IN SING SING.

Prisoner, with One Animal, Hopes to Own Herd When His Time Is Up.

Special to The New York Times.

BEACON, N. Y., Aug. 14.—Goat raising may become popular at Sing Sing if Warden Thomas Mott Osborne remains at the prison. Already through the kindness of Homer H. Stuart, President of the Board of Education here, Martin Sweeney, sentenced to twenty years for murder, has started his herd. The Warden allows Martin to keep his goat on the hill near the prison, and five years hence, when he receives his freedom, the convict figures that the herd will have enough goats to provide him an income.

It was some weeks ago that Mr. Stuart, a breeder of pedigree goats, received a card from Sweeney inquiring about the price of goats and outlining his plan. In reply Mr. Stuart wrote that if Warden Osborne approved, he would donate a yearling kid. Subsequently the goat was shipped to Sweeney.

Sweeney, who has spent fifteen years behind the bars, in a letter to Mr. Stuart, wrote:

"The Warden is Faith, Hope, and Charity personified to his erring brothers. He is just a big brother to us; always willing to help his little brothers help themselves. There is absolutely no big stick in his methods. Kindness is the key he uses to unlock the latent doors in the worst of us. I wish you could find the time to pay a visit here. No matter how good a man you are you will be a better man after a visit here."

UNDRESSES ON TOP OF POLE

Ship Fireman Scares Girls in Telephone Exchange.

Shrieks from girl telephone operators leaving the Madison Square exchange in West Twenty-ninth Street attracted the attention of guests in the Hotel Martha Washington in Twenty-ninth Street near Madison Avenue, and in a few minutes several telephone calls were put in to the West Thirtieth Street police station that a madman was undressing on the crossarm of an electric light pole at Madison Avenue and Twenty-ninth Street.

Lieutenant Siefert operated the flashlight system and hurried six policemen to the corner. Policeman Grimm, the first to arrive, found that the man had thrown nearly all of his clothes to the street. Grimm and other policemen tried to persuade him to climb down, but the man paid no attention to them. Finally they procured a ladder and carried him to the pavement, where the police men formed a hollow square about him and marched him to a doorway, where they dressed him. At the police station he said that he was Yacklim Philpovitch, a steamship fireman, and that he was worried for his family in Russia. He was sent to Bellevue Hospital for observation.

SAVED BY SUSPENDER CLASP

Bullet Glances Off—Assailant Refuses Explanation.

Benjamin Smith of 96 Wythe Avenue, Williamsburg, owes his life to a small steel clasp on his suspenders.

Early yesterday as he was entering his home a man fired a revolver at him. The bullet struck the clasp and glanced off. Smith shouted for help, and his assailant ran in the direction of McCarren Park. He was pursued by Patrolman Waters.

When the fugitive refused to halt in answer to his command, Waters fired three shots in the air, which stopped him. The prisoner said he was Joseph Panice of 308 Union Avenue. He refused to explain why he attempted the life of Smith. In court he was remanded on charges of felonious assault and carrying a dangerous weapon.

CITY COLLEGE ASKS MORE.

Trustees Estimate $782,270 Will Be Required in 1916.

The Trustees of the College of the City of New York have estimated the amount necessary for maintaining the institution through 1916 at $782,270.81, which is $89,314.80 more than the 1915 allowance, the increase asked for in personal service is $74,116.75, of which $63,698.05 is for instruction, $5,115 for administration and $5,926.25 for the care of buildings.

Provision is asked for one professor of German at $5,000, an instructor for the stadium at $1,700 and two tutors for the stadium at $1,000 each. At present the instruction staff consists of 217 members, comprising a President, fourteen professors, fifteen associate professors, thirty-six assistant professors, eighty-six instructors, fifty-five tutors and ten assistant tutors. During the present financial year three assistant tutors will become tutors, eleven tutors will be raised to the rank of assistant professors and eight assistant professors will be advanced to the rank of full professors.

The requests for 1916 make provisions for an increase of the staff by two associate professors, twenty-five assistant professors, sixty-five instructors and nineteen tutors.

TWO MEN SLASHED IN FIGHT.

Panic Among Women Buying Sunday Supplies at "Paddy's Market."

The dense crowd of women bargaining in "Paddy's Market" on Ninth Avenue, about Fortieth Street, was thrown into a panic late last night when five men became involved in a noisy altercation and knives were drawn. Three of the men suddenly leaped from the scrimmage and fled, brandishing their knives to clear a path. They were lost in the big crowd. Then it was seen that the other two were bleeding from knife wounds.

They were Lawrence Reddy, a driver of 605 West Fifty-fifth Street, and Patrick Cash, a driver of 322 West Fortieth Street. After Dr. Lile of New York Hospital had dressed wounds in their necks and bodies, which it was declared would not prove dangerous, the two men said they had been lounging on the corner when three men they did not know jostled them. Reddy and Cash spoke to them angrily and received insulting answers. The fight then began.

INCAS' HEADS ON VASARI.

Peruvian Relics Start Rumor About Beheaded Bandits.

When the steamer Vasari docked yesterday at Montague Street, Brooklyn, the Customs Inspectors were excited over a rumor from Quarantine that a passenger from Texas had brought three human heads with him from Peru. It was stated that the Texan had been attacked by four bandits in the Andes, and had killed three of them. The fourth ran away. The American was so enraged, the report said, that he cut off the three bandits' heads and threw the bodies into a ditch.

When the passengers were asked about the heads by reporters at the pier no one apparently knew anything about the story. Newton, the purser, also was in ignorance. Finally, S. A. Davis, the surgeon, was questioned and he admitted that he had three human heads in his cabin, but said they were not those of bandits nor had he cut them off. They were specimens of the heads preserved by the Incas 400 years ago with the long hair attached, and were in perfect condition after being dwarfed to one-half of their original size by the curing process.

FIRE DESTROYS AN ASBURY HOTEL

170 Guests Safe and Nobody Hurt in Early Evening Blaze Off the Boardwalk.

THEIR BELONGINGS LOST

Frantic Efforts to Save Personal Property Fruitless—Owner's Loss Is $25,000.

Special to The New York Times.

ASBURY PARK, N. J., Aug. 14.—The Carlton Hotel at First Avenue and Heck Street was destroyed by fire, which started shortly before 9 o'clock tonight. The blaze started on the top floor from an unknown cause and spread rapidly through the four-story frame structure. Its spread was aided by a lack of water, due to the smallness of the Heck Street main.

Aid was summoned from nearby resorts.

The hotel was full to capacity, but most of the 170 or more guests were on the boardwalk when the fire broke out, and no one was injured. Most of the belongings of the patrons were lost, however, though daring efforts were made to save them.

The Melita Cottage, a small building to the east of the hotel, of which Mrs. Mary M. Smith was the proprietress, was also destroyed. Mrs. E. Richards Havercamp was proprietress of the Carlton.

The hotel was an old structure and it is thought $25,000 will cover the loss. It was a spectacular blaze, however, and provided thrills for thousands of Summer visitors from this and nearby resorts. Some of the guests were frantic as they watched the destruction of their effects and became hysterical. They were cared for in nearby hotels, where they spent the night. Three firemen were slightly hurt when a ladder broke.

EASTLAND IS RIGHTED.

Property of Victims Recovered When Ship Is Brought to Even Keel.

CHICAGO, Aug. 14.—Three bushels of jewels, purses, and other small pieces of personal property which belonged to victims of the Eastland disaster were recovered today when the ship was restored to even keel. The property was found on the upper decks, which were the first available to search.

No bodies were found in the hold of the Eastland. The Government will not release its attachment on the ship until Tuesday.

Progressives to Discuss the Future.

New York City Progressives will hold a meeting next Tuesday night at the Claremont Club, 550 West 113th Street, to discuss the future of the party in the State. The speakers will be George W. Perkins, Hugh Gordon Miller, who is a candidate for Supreme Court Justice on the Progressive ticket; David S. Ayers, and Robert C. Levis. Mr. Perkins will speak on "The Future of the Progressive Party," and Mr. Miller will give a general review of the Progressive situation in State and nation. Mr. Levis will speak on "Forcing Constitutional Delegates to Take Up Progressive Principles."

ITALIAN WAR BENEFIT.

Many Famous Names in Opera and Drama on Program.

A benefit for Italian war sufferers is to be given at the Century Opera House, Sixty-second Street and Central Park West, on Thursday, Aug. 26, at which many of the greatest dramatic and operatic stars will appear.

It will be given under the management of the International Music and Drama Committees, and the Countess Castelvecchio is Chairman of the committee in charge.

Otto H. Kahn has given the opera house for the occasion, and all the members of the Metropolitan Opera Company now in the city, aided by the Metropolitan chorus, will take part. Among those who will give operatic and dramatic selections are Mme. Mimi Augugila, the Sicilian actress; Mlle. Adele Dilli and Mme. Clementine De Vere-Sapio, soprani; Mme. Louise Vilani, Sig. Pasquale Amato and Sig. Luca Botta of the Metropolitan opera company; Sig. Giuseppe Ansolone and Cav. Dante Del Popa.

A symphony orchestra of sixty from the orchestra of the Metropolitan Opera House will accompany the singers and furnish the music. The Russian Symphony and the Philharmonic Orchestras have also volunteered their services. The conductors will be Maestros A. Bimboni, G. Rafelli, G. Randeggio, and R. Saplo.

Seats, which are on sale at the Longacre Building and at the box office of the Century Opera House starting on Aug. 23, will be sold at from 50 cents to $2. The proceeds are to go to the Italian Red Cross and the families of the Italian reservists in this country whose breadwinners have joined the colors and who are in need.

KILLED BY HUGE COAL SCOOP

Workman Crushed as He Waited to Have Minor Injury Dressed.

Special to The New York Times.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Aug. 14.—Thomas McCormick, 42 years old, who was employed in the shipping department of the Spicer Universal Joint Company's plant in South Plainfield, injured his wrist late this afternoon and went into the machine shop to have it dressed. He was told to sit out in the open until bandages could be procured, and seated himself on a pile of steel outside the door.

No sooner had he done so than a huge steam bucket used to hoist coal swooped down on him. It tore his arm from the socket at the shoulder and crushed his chest so that one rib was forced through his left lung. He died before an ambulance arrived from the Muhlenberg Hospital.

McCormick lived at 446 West Fourth Street. He leaves a wife and several children.

SUMMIT MILLS TO CUT PAY.

Mayor's Committee Decides on 5 to 10 Per Cent. Reduction.

Special to The New York Times.

SUMMIT, N. J., Aug. 14.—There will be posted Monday in the Summit Silk Mill a notice calling for a lower wage schedule, varying from 5 to 10 per cent., according to the kind of work involved. This is in accordance with a report made by the Mayor's Committee, consisting of Thomas M. Debevoise, Oliver B. Merrill, and Francis S. Phraner. The committee was named at the time of the strike in the local silk mill several months ago.

BACK CONNOLLY FOR JUDGE.

Queens Borough President Urged for Humphrey's Place.

It was reported yesterday that Borough President Maurice Connolly of Queens might be the choice of the regular Democratic organization for County Judge. A successor is to be elected this Fall to Judge Burt J. Humphrey, who has filled the office for twelve years. The term of office is six years, and the salary is $10,000 a year, with $2,500 additional for drawing jurors. President Connolly receives but $5,000 a year as Borough President, and he has but one year more to serve.

Friends of President Connolly control the Democratic organization and should he desire to be the candidate he will go into the primary with the backing of the organization. It was understood until yesterday that the organization favored the renomination of Judge Humphrey. President Connolly had denied that he would be a candidate. When the rumor was started yesterday he was not in town to comment upon it. The selection of organization candidates will be made today and will be announced tomorrow.

PORT HENRY IS BOOMING.

Rise in Pig Iron Causes Revival of Activity in Mines There.

Special to The New York Times.

PORT HENRY, N. Y., Aug. 14.—The sharp rise in the price of iron ore and pig iron has caused a great revival of activity in this section, after a nine months' period of dullness.

The Northern Iron Company announced this week that its blast furnace would resume operations on or about Aug. 20, giving employment to 150 men.

The iron ore mines of the Witherbee, Sherman & Co., and the Port Henry Iron Ore Company at Mineville are now operating full time, after having been on part time the last nine months. Two hundred more men are expected the first of next week.

The Lake Champlain & Moriah Railroad Company is sharing in the increased business.

It is said the Cheever Iron Ore Mines, situated three miles from here, in which C. M. Schwab has an interest, will resume operations very shortly. This will mean work for about 300 men.

The Arctic City Film Company, formerly of Saranac Lake, has moved its plant to this village.

GOES TO JAIL FOR HIS PIG.

"Frame-Up!" Owner Cries When He Hears Beast Rooted Lawns.

Special to The New York Times.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Aug. 14.—Arton Keyler of Avy Street, Hillside, a suburb of Elizabeth, was sent to the County Jail for twenty days today when he refused to pay a fine of $10 imposed for failing to keep his pig penned. Neighbors complained that the pig wandered about their lawns and yards. To prove the ownership of the pig Justice Hebbe sent for Mr. and Mrs. Keyler, Mrs. John Howarth, Mrs. Charles Gorlich, and Mrs. E. Schroeder, who live in Avy Street. When a patrolman chased the pig to within a block of the courtroom, Justice Hebbe adjourned the case while the witnesses unanimously identified the trespasser as the property of Keyler.

Keyler, who indignantly declared the proceedings a frame-up, refused to pay.

Michael Didn't Join the Angels.

Michael Angelo, who paints fences among other things to make a living, was arrested yesterday for shooting a gun at the rear of his home at Merrick Road and Central Avenue. Policeman Farrell was afraid Michael would shoot the last letter of his name and become an angel, also that this generation might lose a painter.

BOYS SCATTER DIAMONDS.

Flee from Crowd After Robbing Window of a Jeweler.

Smashing the plate glass of one of the show windows of the jewelry store of J. F. Jarvis & Son at 64 South Fourth Avenue, Mount Vernon, yesterday afternoon, two youths snatched a tray of diamond rings valued at $2,000 and led the police a chase. They were captured by Policemen Mattes and Schafer, who were on bicycles, after a pursuit for a quarter of a mile and a fierce struggle. They gave their names as Louis Daniels, 20 years old, of Williamsbridge, and Harry Tesman, 16, of the Bronx. They had hung about the Jarvis store for a week.

The robbery was committed in the busiest part of the day and hundreds of men and women joined the chase. A third of the jewels were found on one of the prisoners, according to the police. The rest were found scattered along the streets.

At the Mt. Vernon Station Tesman confessed that he had taken part in the robbery of Amelia Rubin at 352 East Houston Street, Manhattan, on Friday, where a brick was thrown through the window and jewels worth $3,000 were stolen. These jewels were recovered when John Noeker was arrested.

Tesman said that Frank Szaley of 79 Avenue B had been implicated in the Rubin robbery, and that they had decided to attempt with Daniels to rob a place in Mt. Vernon in order to make up for their losses in the Rubin robbery and to give bail for Noeker. Detectives Cook, Campbell, and Wuchsner arrested Szaley on the charge of taking part in both robberies. He protested that he was innocent and could establish an alibi in both cases.

PRISONER IN JAIL HE BUILT.

Sentenced for Intoxication, He Says "It Feels Mighty Homelike."

Chester Barnhart of Port Jefferson, L. I., who built the Suffolk County Jail at Riverhead, now looks from behind bars at visitors whom Sheriff Odell shows through the building.

Barnhart was foreman for Campbell & Dempsey, contractors, and he had charge of all the actual building operations.

Several days ago Barnhart was arrested for intoxication. Justice of the Peace Jacob S. Dreyer of Port Jefferson found him guilty and sentenced him to thirty days in the jail he built.

"Anyway, it feels mighty homelike here," said Barnhart yesterday to a visitor who expressed surprise at seeing him behind the bars.

Jersey Farmers Hold Annual Picnic.

Special to The New York Times.

MANASQUAN, N. J., Aug. 14.—Sons and daughters of Jersey's farm lands gathered at the Manasquan Beach today for their annual outing. Farmers and their families were present from Monmouth, Mercer, Middlesex, Ocean, and Burlington Counties. More than 5,000 persons were present. Fakirs of every description overran the beach. The town was compelled to place traffic officers at all the street intersections on the main highways to the beach owing to the great crowd.

Mother Discovers Suicide.

A sufferer from melancholia, Miss Anna Sturtevant, who lived in an apartment at 56 Morningside Avenue, near 118th Street, committed suicide by gas yesterday. She was found by her widowed mother, Mrs. Charles F. Sturtevant, in a bathroom. Miss Sturtevant was 50 years old. She lived with her mother. She had been in ill health, and in the last three weeks she suffered a nervous breakdown and was under the constant care of a physician.

NOTED WOMAN EXILE NOW SENT TO ARCTIC

Breshkovskaya, "Grandmother of the Russian Revolution," Sent to Yakoutsk.

UNDAUNTED AS SIGHT FAILS

Siberian Life Prisoner, Who Tried to Escape, Writes Friends Here She Loves Humanity.

EAST ORANGE, N. J., Aug. 14.—Mme. Catherine Breshkovskaya, known the world over eight years ago as "the grandmother of the Russian revolution," and now serving a life exile in Siberia, has been transferred to the far northern City of Yakoutsk, on the edge of the arctic circle, according to a letter received from her by Miss Alice Stone Blackwell and made public today.

Mme. Breshkovskaya is 71 years old and is suffering from cataracts on both eyes, so that she cannot read. Her only recreation, she says, is sewing for a few hours a day, and then only on white material. Her banishment to Yakoutsk, least desirable of all towns in Siberia, came at the end of eighteen months' solitary imprisonment at Irkutsk for trying to escape from Siberia, to which she had been sent for life. In addition to the eighteen months imposed, she wrote, she served two additional months in prison because no caravan was to start for Yakoutsk for that long when her term ended.

About ten years ago Mme. Breshkovskaya came to America and made many friends in this country, among them Miss Jane Addams and Julia Ward Howe. After her return to Russia, she was arrested, with many other leaders and sympathizers in the growing movement for popular government. She and Dr. Nicholas Tschaikowsky were tried together at St. Petersburg. She was charged with distributing arms, found guilty, and sentenced to life exile; Tschaikovsky was acquitted.

Bound for Yakoutsk.

Where Mme. Breshkovskaya is going, she wrote Miss Blackwell, the Winters encroach on May and August, and the short Summers are insufferably hot. Her letter was dated June 27, at her prison in Irkutsk, and inasmuch as she expected to start in July she probably is at present on her way to Yakoutsk, if she has not reached there.

Mrs. Breshkovskaya's letter reads, in part, as follows:

"I can now tell you with certainty what my future address will be: Yakoutsk, Siberia, Asia, via Japan. The efforts of my friends to have me allowed to live in a more southerly part of Siberia have failed, and I shall be 2,000 versts further north than at Kirensk [her former abode in Siberia.] It is hardly a surprise to me; and life at Kirensk was so hard that no change will frighten me. I am only sorry for the two additional months that I have had to spend in prison here during our short Summer; for the convoy with which I am to travel does not start for the Lena till July.

"At Yakoutsk the cold goes down to 55 degrees, (presumably below zero.) Winter lasts fully eight months. There is hardly any Spring; for in May the ground is still covered with snow, and in August there are sharp frosts at night. The two months of Summer are very hot, and make it possible to raise a few vegetables and a little grain.

"But as it is the capital of the Province of Yakoutsk, which stretches in every direction, there are a few doctors there, and more people than at Kirensk, where there was often no medical aid. There are also some political exiles there. I shall try not to lose what is left of my health, and it is not improbable that I may succeed, thanks to the care that all my friends take of me.

Lover of the Human Race.

"Your letters and papers bring me near to you, and make me share in the interests of another world, and this is of great interest to me, as I love to be in touch with human life. The longer I live the more fully I understand that the deepest thing in me is an invincible and ardent love for the human race, which I am convinced contains within itself all the germs of intellectual improvement to an indefinite extent, of an ascent to a moral life which will make it infinitely happy.

"This habit of living in the life of humanity as a whole has so associated me with the universal psychology that I lose myself in it, and I care very little about my individual fate, which is not dear to me at all when separated from the general course of things. History studies in the past and present of the human race are present with me in their smallest details. Thus I look upon the entire globe as worthy of our attention and devotion."

A letter from Mme. Breshkovskaya received a few weeks ago said that her American friends must not grieve for her, and that she would find persons to read aloud to her as soon as she was sent where there were other political exiles. She added that the doctor said an operation upon her eyes could be performed at the end of six months, if she had access to an oculist.

FAMINE IN HAITI; RED CROSS AIDS

Caperton Reports Destitution and Death as a Result of the Revolution.

FAMILIES STARVE 48 HOURS

Woman and Child Found Dead in Port au Prince Market Place—Capital and Cape Haitien Quiet.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—Famine has followed in the wake of the Haitian revolution and the American Red Cross heeded today an appeal for aid for suffering natives of the island republic.

A report from Rear Admiral Caperton, commanding the American forces in Haiti, said there was considerable suffering owing to the scarcity of food among the poorer people in Port au Prince. He asked for Red Cross aid, stating that there had been at least two deaths from starvation.

The Red Cross at once turned over $1,000 to the Navy Department, which was telegraphed to Admiral Caperton for relief work. If necessary a Red Cross representative will be sent to the island.

The destitution, according to Admiral Caperton, is due to lack of crops and industries as a result of the revolution. "This morning," his dispatch said, "a woman and child were found dead in the market place, their death due, undoubtedly, to starvation."

In many cases, he added, families had been absolutely without food for forty-eight hours. Resumption of public works with the establishment of peace would provide employment for some of the idle, but would not help many women and children who had no means of subsistence.

Admiral Caperton in another telegram reported today that the new President's reception was enthusiastic. The President made public acknowledgment of the part of the American troops in restoring government to the republic.

The Haitian flag flies again over Fort Nationale, and both Port au Prince and Cape Haitien have been quiet since President Dartiguenave took up his duties.

YOUNG AVIATOR KILLED AT CONESUS LAKE

Lawrence Lyon of Ithaca Drowned When His Machine Tips and He Falls from His Seat.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 14.—Lawrence Lyon, 24 years old, of Ithaca, lost his life at Conesus Lake this afternoon, when the plane which he was driving about the lake turned over and dropped into the water.

Those who saw the accident, which occurred off Old Orchard Point, say the plane tipped when Lyon started to turn it about. Some said that when the plane was about fifteen feet from the water Lyon fell from the seat, clear of the machine.

Motor boats, which were standing by, rushed to the point where the man had gone under but found no trace of him. At 6 o'clock tonight his body had not been recovered.

SPERRY SMASHES RUDDER.

Aviator Will Fly Again Today for the $5,000 Curtiss Prize.

After a mishap yesterday, when he broke an elevating rudder on his hydroaeroplane, Lawrence Sperry, the Brooklyn aviator, will try again today to win the Curtiss $5,000 prize for the longest flight in ten hours of one day.

Mr. Sperry reached the Brooklyn Navy Yard yesterday morning about 5 o'clock. At 5:08 he rose in the air from the foot of Little Street and, flying low, went under the Brooklyn and Manhattan bridges, out over the bay, and circled the Statue of Liberty and returned to the navy yard at 5:30 o'clock. At 7:20 A. M. he started for another trial flight, taking a moving picture operator as a passenger. He circled over Hell Gate, but on the return smashed into the old gas house piers, breaking an elevating rudder.

His plans to make the flight were spoiled for the day. It was late in the afternoon when he had repaired the damage. At 5:43 P. M. he left the navy yard for his new hangar at Amityville. He covered the thirty-one miles in thirty-two minutes, reaching the hangar at 6:15 o'clock. He went from the navy yard by way of Bay Ridge and the Rockaways, traveling most of the distance over water.

The aviator said last night he would start early this morning on his contest for the Curtiss prize. He expects to take an eastward course over Great South Bay to Peconic Bay, thence over the Atlantic Ocean to Montauk, and return. He believes the use of the Sperry gyroscope stabilizer will enable him to set a new record for a ten-hour flight. Of the $5,000 of the Curtiss prize, $1,000 goes to the successful aviator and the remaining $4,000 to the manufacturer of the winning airship.

Held for Disrobing on Beach.

Detectives Major and Wilson arrested twelve men on charges of disorderly conduct yesterday for undressing and donning bathing suits near Oriental Point, Manhattan Beach, within sight of the automobile drive and the Oriental Hotel. Several were held over night in the Coney Island station and others were released in $500 bail for hearings this morning.

Cast and Bowman in the finals of the men's doubles on Monday.

WANTS RUNAWAY SON HELD.

Schenectady Woman Believes He's Bound for South America.

"My son has run away," said a woman's voice over the telephone to Lieutenant McCarrick at Police Headquarters last evening. "He left Schenectady with a college chum on a train that gets to the Grand Central station about 8 o'clock. The two boys are going to South America. Please stop them and send them home."

The woman said she was Mrs. Bush, wife of the General Manager of the New York office of the General Electric Company, and was telephoning from her home in Schenectady.

Detective Barber of the Second Branch Detective Bureau, went to the Grand Central Station and met incoming trains until 10 o'clock, but no one answering Mrs. Bush's description of her son appeared. The police believed that if the boys started they left the train before it reached this city.

Mrs. Bush said she had tried to reach her husband in New York, but his office was closed. Lieutenant McCarrick said as young Bush was 19 years old and not amenable to the juvenile delinquency law he could only deliver the mother's plea to the runaway if he met him.

SHANGHAIED SAILORS SAVED

Rescued by Ferryboat After Escaping to Raft in Bay.

Two half-drowned men, tossed about on a raft made of a few planks tied with ropes, were picked up at 10:30 o'clock last night by Captain George Kimball of the ferryboat John Englis on her trip from St. George, S. I., to Sixty-ninth Street, South Brooklyn. Some of the passengers on the forward deck of the ferryboat saw the raft when the Englis was about midway in the bay. The crew got the ferryboat close to the raft and pulled the castaways on board with ropes.

After the two rescued men had been warmed and fed in the engine room, they gave their names as John Moran and Daniel Hensen, and said they had been shanghaied from a waterfront boarding house to a vessel lying in Gravesend Bay, from which they escaped at dusk last evening.

"The ship, the name of which we had no chance to learn, sailed for South America this afternoon," said Moran. "We knocked together a few planks, and when it got dark we shoved them overboard and jumped. We had been in the bay two hours when picked up."

NORMAN TOWER LAID BARE.

Curious Result Develops from a Suffragette Outrage in 1914.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—There has been a curious result of one of the fires caused by suffragettes in 1914. The fire in question practically destroyed the historic Church of St. Mary at Wargrave, near Henley, which, among other interesting objects, contained the tomb of Thomas Day, the author.

The church is now being rebuilt. In the restoration of the tower it was found that the present casing of red brick is only a covering for the original Norman tower. The latter proves to be a very fine example of Norman architecture—one of the best, in the opinion of experts, existing in England.

When the tower was cased with red brick is a mystery, but the work was probably done in the reign of Henry VII. or that of Henry VIII. Among other discoveries made as a result of the performance of the suffragette "arson squad" are a number of vaults under the chancel, of which no one had guessed the existence.

PLATTSBURG CAMP TO SUPPLY OFFICERS

New and Important Source in Case of Emergency, General Wood Points Out.

WOODS NOW A ROOKIE, TOO

Police Commissioner Joins Recruits —Mayor Mitchel Is Made a Sergeant—Lists Soon to Close.

Special to The New York Times.

PLATTSBURG, N. Y., Aug. 14.—Major Gen. Leonard Wood, commanding the Eastern Department of the Army, with headquarters in New York, in a talk with newspaper men at the United States military training camp, on Lake Champlain, told of the sources from which the thousands of officers who would be needed to officer volunteer armies, in the event of a national crisis, would be drawn. Camps like this one, attended by leading business and professional men from all parts of the country, form a new and important source to which the nation could turn in the event of trouble.

General Wood talked while the 1,300 lawyers, bankers, merchants, and others who make up the civilian regiment under training here were at drill on the Plattsburg barracks parade ground, and the drill plain of the training camp to the south of his own field headquarters.

"The sources," said General Wood, "from which our volunteer officers would have to be drawn are:

"(1.) Officers who have been in the regular service, volunteers, militia, or marine corps, men who have had military training and are now in civil life. Number very limited.

"(2.) Men who have qualified through special examination and have been listed by the War Department as available for commissions. Very small number.

"(3) Men who have been graduated from the agricultural and mechanical colleges, at practically all of which military instruction is given under an officer of the army. These institutions were endowed under what is known as the Morrell act of 1862, passed at a time when the country felt acutely the need of trained material for officers. We have about 32,000 students at schools of this type. Instruction in these schools varies in quality and character. It should be standardized and efforts should be made to assure the men at the end of their junior and senior years a period of intensive training on the lines followed at the students' military instruction camps. These men are well educated and, generally speaking, of a good type.

"(4) We have also a very large source of supply of officers in the military colleges and schools of the type of the Virginia Military Institute, Norwich University, Pennsylvania State College, and many others. There are about 10,000 students at these institutions who are receiving military instructions under officers of the army. These men should be taken for training, if practicable, at the end of their junior and senior years, with the exception of one or two of the better institutions where the camp might be limited to one at the end of the senior year.

9,000 Men a Year.

"These two sources, the agricultural and mechanical, and the military colleges, would give us a graduating class of probably not less than 9,000 a year. Of these, as many men as possible should be given the intensive training.

"With reference to the statement that we should not depend upon a system based upon volunteers, there is nothing in this remark which in any way reflects upon or belittles the volunteer. He has always been one of the fine figures in our military history. I am not discussing the individual or the spirit which prompts him, but speaking of the system we have followed in depending upon volunteers when war is upon us or imminent. If these volunteers had been raised, organized, equipped, and trained in time of peace they would be comparable to the old system of a volunteer fire department, which at least had its engine, hose, ladder, officers, personnel, &c. Unfortunately, the volunteer system as we apply it is comparable not to any organized establishment, but to a fire department organized after the fire has started, to be made up of volunteers, how many no one knows, without equipment or knowledge of the use of it. It is necessary to gather equipment, designate officers, and instruct them in the use of equipment during the continuance of the conflagration. This is the kind of volunteer system we have followed. If we organized our volunteers and equipped and trained them during peace the system would be reasonably dependable provided we organized enough.

"The experience in training men which our officers are getting here will in effect double their efficiency in the line of ability to create new organizations. They are learning a great deal themselves in addition to transmitting information to the newcomers. Our regular arms value to the country as an instrument of defense would be greatly increased if this kind of work, namely, the creating of new organizations alongside of regulars could be carried on systematically throughout the country every year."

General Wood, accompanied by Colonel John B. Ellinger, Chief Quartermaster of the Eastern Department, left for New York late this afternoon. He will inspect the artillery camp at Tobyhanna, Penn., and return here Tuesday morning to remain most of the time during the business men's encampment.

Colonel Edwin A. Glenn, U. S. A., General Wood's Chief of Staff, arrived this morning, and is the ranking officer present in the absence of his chief. Colonel Glenn was accompanied by Police Commissioner Arthur Woods of New York, who immediately on arrival cast aside his civilian garb, donned the army khaki and enlisted as a private for the rest of the encampment in Camp D.

"This is the life," said Private Woods as he greeted Sergeant John Purroy Mitchel. The Mayor was promoted to a Sergeant of Cavalry this afternoon. For three hours this afternoon Private Wood was kept busy in the awkward squad. He will be ready to take his place in the company lines by Monday.

At the office of the camp Quartermaster it was stated this afternoon that the men were eating an average of five and a half pounds of food each day. In the five days they have been here they have eaten more than 1,100 pounds of bacon, 17,000 eggs, 5½ tons of potatoes, 3,000 pounds of beef, 1,100 pounds of bread, 550 cans of sweet corn, 2,500 pounds of ham, 3,100 lemons, 12,000 rolls, 1,500 pounds of sugar, 1,000 cans of salmon, 30 barrels of cabbage, 20 crates of cucumbers, 80 crates of cantaloupes, 300 pounds of coffee, 250 pounds of lima beans, 200 gallons of ice cream, 1,000 pounds of beans, 80 pounds of tea, 300 pounds of salt, 400 gallons of fresh milk, 200 pounds of green onions, 700 pounds of cake, 80 gallons of olives, hundreds of pounds of pickles, and 900 pounds of butter.

Lieutenant C. N. Sawyer of the Thirtieth Infantry is in charge of the commissary. Assisting him is a corps of the most efficient Quartermaster Sergeants in the regular army and a whole company of trained cooks and bakers from the army cooking and baking schools in Washington and at Fort Leavenworth.

Although the men have been here only since last Tuesday, today ends the first official week of the camp. Not a day has passed during which they have not been drilled from three to four times, sometimes the drill periods lasting more than two hours. Not a man has been incapacitated and not one has been absent from the drills without a good excuse. The attendance at all drills will figure more than 99 per cent. Tomorrow being Sunday there will be no scheduled drills, but volunteers will be called for and those who respond will repeat the regular schedule of drills and other exercises. There is betting at fifty to one that nearly everybody volunteers tomorrow.

Thousands of persons are expected to visit the camp tomorrow afternoon; automobile parties are expected from all parts of the State. Automobiles probably will be excluded from the camp proper and ordered to park in the open field opposite the camp.

On the bulletin board of Company C is a paper bullseye at which Walton Clark, Jr., shot at sub-calibre target practice yesterday afternoon. The holes in the target showed that Mr. Clark's record for the afternoon was 100 per cent. of hits.

The strength of the regiment has increased steadily since the first day, and the number of men is now 1,310. Owing to the progress made by the regiment no new recruits except those with previous military training are being accepted and the lists will close to all within a few days.

"The progress of the men," said Captain Dorey, the Camp Commander, "has been so remarkable it would be unfair to the man without previous training to admit him to the organization now. Next year we will be able, I hope, to care for everybody who is physically fit who applies for the service."

Captain Dorey, as he talked, had in his hand a telegram from two Ohio lawyers asking permission to enlist. They were both without previous training and their applications were for that reason declined with regrets.

Among the new recruits in camp is Captain J. P. Drouillard, formerly of the Ninth Regular Infantry, a veteran of the Philippines and Boxer campaigns. He enlisted as a private in Company F, of which Captain James Regan, at one time an enlisted man under Captain Drouillard, is the Commander. Captain Drouillard, however, did not long remain a private and was soon named Adjutant of the Second Battallion.

The drill this afternoon was witnessed by a large crowd and the efforts of the men were applauded generously. Colonel Glenn witnessed the drill for the first time.

"The most remarkable exhibition of the kind, all things considered, I have witnessed in forty years," the Governor's Island Chief of Staff said afterward.

The inoculation of the command for typhoid fever was accomplished this afternoon. The majority of the men submitted to the inoculation, which the regular surgeons of the camp had advised all of them to take.

S. Stanwood Menken, President of the National Security League, was one of the speakers at the early night gathering on the drill plain tonight.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—Authority has been granted to Major General Murray, commanding the Western Department of the Army, to hold a business men's military camp at American Lake, Wash., from Aug. 22 to Sept. 12, similar to the ones authorized in California and at Plattsburg, N. Y.

WANT SCHOOLBOYS TO DRILL.

New Jersey Officials Favor Laws for Military Training.

SPRING LAKE, N. J., Aug. 14.—Laws looking toward the establishment of military training in the public schools of New Jersey probably will be advocated at the next session of the Legislature. Calvin N. Kendall, State Commissioner of Education, favors the creation of a military training course.

His position is in keeping with the attitude of Lieut. Col. William G. Schauffler, Surgeon General of the New Jersey National Guard and for many years President of the State Board of Education. Military training to create a superior system of discipline and not for militaristic reasons is the idea of Colonel Schauffler.

STEEL MILLS GET HEAVY RAIL ORDERS

Business Comes In at a Time When They Are Rushed with European War Contracts.

RUSSIAN ROADS BUYING

Billets Take a Sensational Jump—Plates Also Advance—Big Demand for All Metals.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 15.—Rail orders are coming in to the Eastern steel mills at a time when they are discouraging the rolling of standard sections of rails. The rail mills are being utilized in rolling large round shapes for the manufacture of shells, also billets and bars. Railroad tonnage has increased to such an extent, however, that some of the trunk lines have been forced to place orders for rails which they have been holding off for a year or more.

On top of this, Russia and France have entered the market for rails and equipment. The Russian Government has placed orders for fully 200,000 tons. Another mill has an offer for 20,000 tons, and France is here with an order for 30,000 tons. For home consumption the Reading Railroad has placed orders for 8,000 tons with the Pennsylvania Steel Company and 2,000 tons with another steel maker. The Baltimore & Ohio has placed an order for 17,000 tons.

It is reported, although it has not been verified, that rails for foreign shipment are bringing higher prices than are those sold at home. Thus conditions are being reversed. During the life of the famous rail pool, when rails were held at $28 a ton, the same sections were sold for export for $20 a ton. This action was used as an argument by free-traders during the controversies on the subject in favor of lowering the tariff on manufactured steel.

Billets Go Up.

One of the most remarkable jumps in steel prices is that of billets. Last week the market was quoted at $22.50 for open hearth billets. This week an advance of $9.50 a ton has been noted by some makers in the East, they having asked $52 a ton. This cannot be accepted as the ruling market price, however, as Western mills can undersell and pay the freight. The demand is so insistent, however, and the scarcity so serious that it is reported one Eastern steel maker proffered an order at $56 a ton, which was accepted.

The Italian Government is asking for 15,000 tons of billets and an Eastern manufacturer is in the market for 25,000 tons. Pittsburgh and Youngstown mills are practically out of the market. Some of the larger manufacturers are figuring on buying in the open market rather than attempt to supply their own requirements.

The Cramp shipyard has contracted to build another steamer requiring 5,000 tons. Altogether fifty vessels have been ordered from Eastern shipbuilders since the first of the year, and a large number are being figured on but cannot find builders.

Plates have been advanced to 1.30c, with the probability that 1.35c will be asked next week. Western plate mills have also advanced prices, making quotations more uniform all over the country. The steel car plants in this district are beginning to operate to capacity, taking up a large tonnage of plates. Foreign inquiries for steel cars do not attract the attention they did several months ago, and car makers are loath to accept offers with the domestic demand increasing and prices advancing.

Order for Rifle Barrels.

The Pennsylvania Steel Company obtained an order from the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company for 4,000 tons of 1½-inch rounds for the making of rifle barrels. A similar tonnage is to be let by the same company for delivery next year. The Carnegie Steel Company has accepted an order for 5,500 tons of 3¼-inch rounds from the Bartlett-Hayward Company of Baltimore, to be made into shrapnel. A Chester, Penn., firm, recently organized for the manufacture of ammunition, is out with an inquiry for 25,000 tons of rounds. Large rounds are quoted at from 2.50c to 3c. Pittsburgh mills have practically all their capacity filled on some sizes.

Notable activity has set in in the production of pig iron. Here, too, prices are being advanced each week. Buying is very heavy and iron that had been ordered for delivery later in the year is being used as quickly as it is delivered. Speculative buyers who entered the market earlier in the year are holding for higher prices. The Steel Corporation is said to be in the market for a large tonnage of basic and Bessemer iron. There are still twenty idle furnaces of the smaller types, and it is a question whether these will be put into operation or whether the iron will be purchased from the merchant furnaces.

Advances of from 50 cents to $1 a ton have been recorded, and the end is not yet. Sales of 50,000 tons of iron have been made in and around Philadelphia during the week. New York buyers have been very active bidders for iron. Buffalo furnaces sold No. 2X for delivery after Jan. 1 at $14. The Standard Manufacturing Company ordered 20,000 tons for their Pittsburgh plants and 5,000 tons for the Louisville plant for delivery next year.

Birmingham quotations are up to $11 for No. 2 foundry, and 20,000 tons were sold for delivery during the first half of 1916 at $12.50. The stocks on hand are said to represent only 175,000 tons at Southern furnace yards. The Tennessee Company will blow in its No. 4 furnace at Bessemer, Ala., which will make twenty furnaces in operation with eleven idle. In the north the Shenango Furnace Company is preparing to fire its No. 4 furnace soon. The American Steel and Wire Company will place the Emma furnace at Cleveland in operation within the next few weeks, and the Toledo Furnace Company will fire its stack at Toledo, Ohio.

Crop reports are a factor in strengthening steel wire, tin plates, sheets, hoops, bands, and warehouse material. Wire rods are quoted at $27 per ton at mill. The rising price of steel has hastened the placing of numerous structural contracts that have been dragging for several months. Quotations are maintained at 1.30c., with a possible advance owing to the upward trend of steel prices and increased tonnage requirements of shapes. Awards during the week in New York and the New England States aggregate 25,000 tons. Chicago prices have been advanced $1 per ton, the Western market having been below that of the Eastern.

Eastern sheet makers have been steadily advancing prices. Orders have been accumulating. Black sheets represent 1.00c. and blue annealed 1.50c. Galvanized sheets have gone down to 4c., although there are few mills producing them. Prices seem to have gotten away from conservative steel manufacturers, who advocated smaller gains to steady the market.

TO SAFEGUARD J. P. MORGAN.

Precautions Planned When He Returns to Bank Tomorrow.

Special to The New York Times.

GLEN COVE, L. I., Aug. 14.—J. P. Morgan will return to his office on Monday, it was announced today, having fully recovered from the wounds inflicted by the assassin who tried to kill him early in July.

Precautions are to be taken to safeguard Mr. Morgan, at least for a time. The yacht Corsair, from a cruise upon which Mr. Morgan has just returned, will carry him each day to and from New York, and the landing place will not be made public. An automobile will meet the yacht and Mr. Morgan will go to the office behind drawn curtains.

There is no danger of any crank reaching Mr. Morgan at East Island, which is now heavily guarded. The land entrance is blocked by heavy gates and chains, which no one is permitted to pass without orders.

Leper Escapes in Washington.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—Emil Grable, an inmate of Washington's detention hospital for lepers, escaped some time between 7 o'clock last night and early this morning. The police have no trace of him. The only other inmate of the hospital is John Early, who, like Grable, contracted the disease while serving as a soldier in the Philippines.

PLANS FOR SAFER STREETS.

Traffic Committee Will Submit Six Ordinances to Aldermen.

As a result of numerous investigations of street accidents the Street Traffic Committee of the Safety First Society has made a report recommending new regulations which it is believed will minimize the number of accidents on the streets. The recommendations, it was announced yesterday, have been referred to William Bondy, general counsel of the Safety First Society, with instructions to prepare the necessary ordinances for introduction in the Board of Aldermen. These are the ordinances recommended:

A new ordinance to provide for the elimination of dazling head and side lights. (The present ordinance is not satisfactory.)

An ordinance requiring parallel parking at the curb for all vehicles of the delivery type.

An ordinance requiring the use of mirrorscopes on all motor vehicles operated in Greater New York. (New Jersey now requires the use of mirrorscopes.)

An ordinance requiring owners of all motor vehicles with chain drive to inclose the chains with suitable guards.

An ordinance making it a misdemeanor for any person to "hitch on" or treepass upon a motor truck or horse-drawn vehicle, unless employed by the owner of such vehicle.

An ordinance requiring that when a motor vehicle is at a standstill and unattended the vehicle shall be safeguarded as follows: (A) The motor of a gasoline-propelled vehicle must be stopped. (B) On electric motor vehicles the control handle or the current cut-off switch must be locked so that the vehicle is rendered inoperative. (C) On all steam-propelled motor vehicles the throttle or shut-off valve must be locked so as to render the vehicle inoperative. (D) The emergency brakes on a motor vehicle must be properly set so as to prevent such vehicle from moving.

The society, it is said, will also request the Police Department to enforce the ordinance requiring that no operator shall approach within eight feet of a trolley car which has stopped to discharge passengers, also the ordinance requiring lights on all vehicles and that which requires automobiles to display properly placed lights.

The Street Traffic Committee commends the plan of Commissioner Fetherston to flush the streets at night so as to eliminate daytime sprinkling of paved streets. It also commends Police Commissioner Woods for putting the new traffic semaphore signals in Fifth Avenue, and the Fifth Avenue Coach Company for installing side fenders on its buses.

Get No Increase in Cattle Rates.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—The application of Western trunk lines for an increase of rates on cattle from Colorado, Montana, the Dakotas, Kansas and Nebraska to Missouri River and Mississippi River points was refused today by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Dr. P. M. Wood Left $300,000.

According to appraisals just filed with the Transfer Tax Appraiser in Queens, Dr. Philip M. Wood, formerly one of the best-known physicians of Queens and who died at Jamaica on May 14, left about $500,000. He invested most of his fortune in mortgages in Queens County. The property is left to his wife and daughter. A trust fund of $100,000 is to be established for the daughter, who is now 18 years old.

CITY BREVITIES.

Bradford Sherman, 9 years old, was taken to the Volunteer Hospital with a fractured left leg last night after he had been run over in front of his home at 38 Greenwich Street by an automobile, owned and operated by Walter S. Kirkwood of 202 Thirty-first Street.

Louis Shadd, 40 years old, of 304 West 145th Street, died in Gouverneur Hospital last night of a fracture of the skull, suffered when a elevator, which he was operating in the Cirke Storage Company warehouse at 664 Water Street fell fifty feet.

The body found in the harbor off Governor's Island on June 18 was identified yesterday as that of Delia Coleman, a typist, 33 years old, who had lived at 630 Second Avenue. The body of a man picked up in the East River, off 134th Street, on Aug. 10 was identified as that of John C. Jester, 45 years old, a deckhand of 448 East 135th Street.

Stephen Moskowitz, 5 years old, of 960 Simpson Street, the Bronx, playing in Southern Boulevard near his home last night, was struck by a motorcycle operated by Lewis Lipschitz of 1,447 Bryant Avenue, the Bronx. His skull was fractured.

WIFE SUES A. K. BOYESEN.

Would Divorce Author's Son Now in the British Army.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Aug. 14.—Mrs. Adelaide B. Boyesen, formerly of Westbury, L. I., and once a resident of Pleasantville, has brought suit here against Algernon Keen Boyesen of Hendon, England, for absolute divorce. The alleged indiscretions were committed at a hotel outside of London in May of this year.

The Boyesens had a pretty country home in Westbury, which is now occupied by Herbert M. Harriman. The rents are paid to Mr. Boyesen through the Guaranty Trust Company of Manhattan. Mr. Boyesen is an aviator and is said to be in the aviation corps of the British Army, although at present stationed near London.

The couple were married in Pleasantville in 1903, and they have two children. They have lived part of the time in England, but in 1914 they returned to this country. In April of this year Mr. Boyesen returned to England and Mrs. Boyesen left him.

Mrs. Boyesen is represented by Dixon & Holmes of Manhattan. Mr. Boyesen has a brother, Hjalmar Boyesen, with offices at 49 Wall Street, Manhattan. He is a son of the late Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen, the famous Norwegian author.

Justice Morschauser has ordered service of the papers by publication.

ELECTRIC MARVELS IN NEW POST OFFICE

Belts, Lifts, and Chutes Do All but the Thinking in Building That Opens Today.

COVERS N. Y. CENTRAL YARD

Built to Handle 800,000 Pounds of Mail a Day—Room for 33 Cars of Sacks at Once.

The Post Office Department will take possession this morning of the new building constructed for its use by the New York Central Railroad, in which there is the most extensive and complete system of mechanical conveyors in the world. The building occupies the block between Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Streets, Lexington Avenue and Depew Place, directly north of the Grand Central Post Office. It is a part of the terminal group of buildings and was built by the railroad. The Government holds a lease for ten years, with an option of a ten years' renewal.

The system of conveyors which makes this Post Office unique is the result of the work of a commission appointed five years ago during the administration of Postmaster General Hitchcock. E. M. Norris, E. B Simmons, and John C. Koons, officials in the department, were named as a committee to work in conjunction with a committee of experts from the New York Central to study the problem of efficiency in the handling of mails at railway terminals. Existing systems were studied, and by the application of known mechanical principles and devices the elaborate system installed in the new building was evolved by the railroad engineers.

The system of mechanical carriers is so comprehensive and intricate that the sacks of mail brought by the mail trucks to the Post Office platform may be taken into the building for sorting and then dispatched to the waiting mail train without being handled except by the sorters. There are three devices, each of them comparatively simple, which in combination form the system—the moving belt, the bucket lift, and the chute.

All Carried by Belts.

One of these moving belts runs beneath the receiving platform and when a load of mail bags arrives they are dumped upon the belt through holes in the platform. The belt carries them to another belt moving at right angles into the building, and from this the bags are elevated by means of a bucket lift to a third belt which reaches the length of the big distributing room. At intervals along this belt are trippers operated from a central switchboard by electricity, so that bags on the carrier may be deflected at any point along its length.

The building is three stories high and is constructed so that other stories may be added. The Post Office will use two floors, comprising about 100,000 square feet. The first flood will be devoted exclusively to second-class and parcel post matter, while the floor above will be used for paper mail and probably some letter mail. There are two systems of communication like that described above from the receiving platform to the first floor, one to handle the second-class and the other for the parcel-mail. Mail to be worked on the second floor is carried up by bucket lifts.

Underneath the building are two mail tracks with an island platform between. This platform is 1,700 feet long, accommodating sixteen mail cars on one side and seventeen on the other. Thus thirty-three cars may be worked simultaneously. When the mail has been sorted and resacked it is placed on the moving belts and shot down chutes which empty on another belt running above and parallel to the platform. From this chutes lead to the car doors, electrically operated trippers shunting the sacks down the proper chutes. Mail brought in the cars and destined for the sorting room is dumped upon belts beneath the platform. Also there are belts connecting the new building and the Grand Central Post Office in the terminal building on the south side of Forty-fifth Street. When the system is completed there will also be a belt conveyor running from a point near Vanderbilt Avenue eastward, crossing every track in the terminal, thus eliminating the trucking of mail from incoming trains to the Post Office.

All Runs by Electricity.

The belts are made of canvas and rubber and are three feet wide. They pass over rollers set close together in a steel frame and around cylindrical drums at the ends at a speed of 150 feet a minute. Electricity is the motive power, and the whole plant is operated from a central board, so that one man may control the whole system. A system of signals and telephones enables the operator to keep in touch with the various parts of the plant.

It is estimated that approximately 800,000 pounds of mail a day is handled at this office. Two hundred and twenty-seven trains daily, eleven of which are solid mail trains of from nine to fourteen cars each, come in and out of the terminal. It is believed that the conveyor system will not only greatly facilitate the handling of this mail, but will reduce the number of men required to take care of it. Heretofore the bags were moved from the wagons to the sorting rooms and then to the cars on small trucks pushed by porters. All of this work will now be done by the mechanical carriers. There is even a series of belts around three sides of the great room, so that packages may be transported from one part of the room to another. In the event of an accident there are elevators and bucket lifts which form an auxiliary emergency system.

This is the only plant of its kind in the world and its workings will be watched by postal authorities with great interest. While it will be several days before everything is in smooth working order and will require a still longer period to accustom the Post Office employes to its use the building will be turned over by the railroad to the department this morning.

At the main Post Office at the rear of the Pennsylvania station there is a lift and chute system which carries the bags to the upper level from the train platforms and vice versa, but these are not connected with carrier belts. The Department has appropriated $100,000 for the installation of a similar system at the Pennsylvania Post Office and it is expected this will be in by the first of the year.

Great Periodical Centre.

The importance of New York as a periodical publishing centre and the growth of the parcel post service made the adoption of more expeditious methods imperative. The great bulk of mail that will be handled through the new plant will consist of periodicals sent from here to all parts of the country and parcels. The methods used in sorting letter mail will be applied to the latter, the parcels being grouped in sacks and sent direct to their destinations. This will expedite delivery on this class of mail.

LIFE SAVERS IN COAL MINES.

Anthracite Companies Planning First Aid Competitions.

Anthracite coal mining companies of Pennsylvania are planning a series of competitions to be held this month and next among their different corps of trained life savers. Members of the teams are voluntary students of methods to preserve life and limb in coal mine accidents. They have been trained in anatomy, the diagnosis of injuries, proper bandaging, prompt stopping of bleeding, the resuscitation by means of pulmotors, lung motors and manipulation of persons overcome by gases, 'proper methods of handling and transporting the injured and the treatment of burns.

"Many of the mine operators and officials," writes Deputy Chief Frank Hall, in a bulletin of the Pennsylvania Department of Mines, "have given liberally of their time and means to train the men to a high degree of efficiency in the work. The first organization of the kind in Pennsylvania, and probably in the United States, was a corps organized at the Jermyn Colliery of the Delaware & Hudson Company in 1899 by Dr. M. J. Shields. Since that time the beneficent work has been extended until to-day there are hundreds of first-aid teams comprising more than 5,000 men, and the total number instructed in the work thus far is approximately 10,000. In 1913, forty-seven lives were saved by the prompt treatment rendered by this efficient agency."

Every company which boasts a first-aid corps has one or more physicians or a competent instructor teaching its members ten months in the year. The two other months are devoted to preparing for the many first-aid contests. The principal ones are those of the Lehigh & Wilkes-Barre Coal Company, the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Company, the Lehigh Valley Coal Company, the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Company, the Susquehanna Coal Company, the Philadelphia & Reading Coal and Iron Company, the Pennsylvania Coal Company, and the Hillside Coal and Iron Company. On the last Saturday in September the annual meeting of the Red Cross Society of Pennsylvania is held, in which first-aid teams from many companies take part.

CHURCH FUND IS $309,000.

Episcopal Missions Board Collecting $400,000 for Emergency.

The Board of Missions of the Episcopal Church reported yesterday that it had received $309,000 of the needed $400,000 for its emergency fund, which is being raised by gifts of "one day's income," in addition to regular gifts for mission work. The object of the fund is to wipe out a seven years' deficit and prevent a further one on the current year.

The largest gift was received a few days ago, when the board got a check for $25,100 from "two friends." There have been forty-one gifts ranging from $5,000 to $1,000, while the total number of gifts is 8,127. Thousands are, of course, represented in the parish offerings.

Bishop Tuttle, the presiding bishop of the church, has addressed a letter to Episcopalians, which says, in part:

"I am an old missionary bishop of twenty years' experience in the Rocky Mountains The Board of Missions and Missionary Bishops, twenty of them in the amazingly expanding work under the flag and nine of them abroad, as in the wonderful awakening nations of the Orient, are in the thick of the same sort of work that I tried to do. Under them are 2,700 missionary workers. And month by month these must have bread and butter. Hundreds of chapels, schools and hospitals must be maintained. Do you know that last year our missionary hospitals helped nearly 500,000 people? To do all this we must have near a million and a half dollars each year."

Besides their regular gifts for missions, these dioceses have contributed to the fund as follows: New York, $35,000; Pennsylvania, $35,500; Massachusetts, $18,500; Newark, $16,700; Connecticut, $12,300; Rhode Island, $7,000; Long Island, $5,300; Chicago, $6,500.

EXPRESS CO. HEADS TO MEET

Superintendents of American Will Study Terminal Conditions Here.

More than thirty superintendents of the American Express Company, from all parts of the United States, will meet here tomorrow for the purpose of making a closer study of traffic conditions at the various terminals of the company throughout the country. The meeting, which will last three days, will be held at the Biltmore Hotel. At the close of the meeting the party will take a special car to Philadelphia and thence to Boston, where a careful study of conditions and facilities will be made also.

At the recent meeting in Chicago of 250 officials of the American Express Company, during the course of a speech on the necessity of out-of-town agents and officials reaching a definite understanding and adopting uniform methods of handling the traffic with the least possible loss and damage to goods in transit, J. R. Christie, Superintendent of the Department of New York, suggested that the various superintendents get together in person with these objects in view. President George R. Taylor and Vice President Robert E. M. Cowie approved, with the result that the meeting to begin tomorrow was called.

Mr. Christie will take the divisional officials in charge as soon as they reach New York, and act as Chairman of the convention. He will also accompany them on their tours to Philadelphia and Boston.

FEVER PATIENT A SUICIDE.

Delirious Mill Worker Jumps from Flower Hospital Window.

Delirious from fever, William Rosenweig of 50 Willow Avenue, Astoria, L. I., leaped from the second-floor window of Flower Hospital on the Sixty-third Street side yesterday to the concrete pavement below and suffered injuries from which he died a few hours later.

Rosenweig was injured on Friday while operating a cross-cut saw in a mill where he was employed at 93 Willow Avenue, Astoria, and was taken to Flower Hospital. He became delirious early yesterday and in the absence of his nurse leaped to the street.

ASK ELKS TO SEEK TWO MISSING GIRLS

Mabel King and Margaret Dotterwick Disappeared from Homes in Bronx Aug. 5.

MAY BE HELD AS PRISONERS

It Is Thought They May Have Been Enticed Away by Two Men Seen in Black-Bodied Automobile.

The Elks of every lodge in this part of the country will be asked tomorrow to look out for Mabel King, the 17-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William King of 567 Courtlandt Avenue, who, with Margaret Dotterwick, a girl companion, disappeared from the Bronx on Thursday, Aug. 5. Their disappearance was reported to the police the following day. Mr. King is sending out circulars because he believes the police method of sending out a general alarm is ineffective. He has found policemen in at least three precincts in the Bronx who never heard through official sources that the girls were missing.

Mr. King said yesterday he was sure his daughter was being restrained against her will, and he was of the opinion that police activity would result in finding the girls prisoners, perhaps in the Bronx. They were enticed away from home, he believes, by two men in a black-bodied automobile, and from information that has reached him since the girls went away he is sure they formed the acquaintance of the men several days before Aug. 5.

Miss Dotterwick is nearly 18 years old. She lived with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Dotterwick, at 363 East 152nd Street, which is near the home of Miss King. Margaret worked in a silk mill in 174th Street. On the night of her disappearance she sent her younger sister to the King home to ask Mabel to come for a walk. The sister returned with a message from Mabel to the effect that her father would not allow her to go out and asking Margaret to come over to the King house. When her sister delivered the message Margaret took up her black and white checked coat and told her mother she was going for a walk. She has not been home since.

When Miss Dotterwick reached the home of the Kings, Mabel came down to the gate to talk to her. That was about 8 o'clock. She had left the porch only a short time when Mr. King looked out and saw the girls at the gate. Later, when he meant to call his daughter in, both were gone. Though recovering from an operation on one of his feet, Mr. King at once began a search for his daughter. He continued it all that night. It was he who first came upon the trail of the men and the automobile. On Wednesday night, before the girls disappeared, Mabel had asked permission to attend a social gathering in the neighborhood. She returned home about 10 o'clock. After she disappeared her father discovered she had not attended a party the night before, but had been seen getting out of an automobile around the corner just before she came home.

The police of the Bronx Detective Bureau have been looking for the girls, and their theory is that both are away of their own will. In the case of the King girl, they believe that, having stayed away all night, she is now afraid to come home because of the strict rule of her father. It was said at the bureau that the general alarm had been sent out through the regular channel and the case given publicity.

Mrs. Dotterwick is building hopes on an unsigned letter received on Friday. The note was evidently written by a woman, and it tells of having seen both girls on Wednesday afternoon at 162d Street and Third Avenue. That was six days after they left their home. They were then accompanied by another girl of about their own age. The writer advises the mother to be in "court" on Monday at 9 A. M., and adds: "Then you will know me."

In the description sent out by Mr. King he says Mabel is one of her friends is known as Dorothy. She is described as being well developed for her age, about 5 feet 3 inches tall and 130 pounds in weight, with light brown hair, blue eyes, and fair complexion. She wore a black and white checked skirt, white shirt waist, black girdle, maroon sweater, black shoes with gray tops, a gold chased bracelet, a gold ring with a blue stone, and a small bar pin. She wore no hat.

Her companion is a good-looking brown-eyed girl, with brown hair and about 5 feet 1 inch tall. She wore a blue skirt, a white waist, and a checked coat. She wore no hat.

"I believe my girl is being held a prisoner," said Mr. King yesterday. "I am sure that no matter whom she went with she would have come back home before this. She did not intend to leave home when she went to the gate, for she was not dressed to go out. The men who lured her away evidently won her confidence upon the previous night, when she went riding, and returned early, as was the rule."

Mrs. Dotterwick is also of the opinion that men in an automobile persuaded the two girls to go for a ride. Her daughter did not have a hat on and did not wear her best clothes. That she did not intend to leave home is evidenced by the fact that she left undrawn a week's salary at the silk mill.

LAST OF OLD FAMILY IN JAIL.

Gerard Doty Locked Up In Westchester for Vagrancy.

Gerard Doty, 83 years of age, sole surviving member of a wealthy old Westchester family of that name, was arrested yesterday afternoon in the village square of Westchester by Patrolman Kessler charged with vagrancy. The old man has lived on the bounty of the people for more than sixty years. He admitted yesterday that he has been a beggar since before the civil war.

With a white beard, reaching almost to his waist and carrying a heavy blackthorn stick, the patriarchal old man sat in his cell and recounted many incidents of former splendor of his family. The police say the family broke up shortly before the war. A brother of the aged prisoner built the old Morris Park Race Track.

HOMERULEPROPOSAL WILL BE REDRAFTED

Constitutional Convention to Recommit Amendment for Correction of Ambiguities.

CITY CONTROL OF 'BUSINESS'

Might Lead to Dangerous Experiments in Municipal Socialism, Louis Marshall Points Out.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 14.—Delegates to the Constitutional Convention are in a hopeless tangle over the Low home rule proposal. This became apparent during the debate on that measure today, when no two delegates who participated in the discussion interpretated alike the language in which the most vital provisions of the Low proposal had been couched.

It was said after the convention had adjourned at 1 o'clock this afternoon, to meet again Monday, that the home rule proposal in all likelihood would be withdrawn from public debate and be recommitted to the Cities Committee to give ex-Mayor Seth Low, its chairman, and his colleagues on the committee an opportunity to go over the bill again and repair defects pointed out in the course of two days of debate on the floor of the convention.

More home rule and less ambiguity of language are demanded by many earnest advocates of greater liberties for municipalities, who declare that they will be unable to make an aggressive fight for the home rule proposal in its present form against the very large element in the convention which is opposed to any new grant of power to the cities and which is prepared to advocate a plan which would shift the fight for that reform from the Constitutional Convention to next year's session of the Legislature. It was said today that Senate Leader Elon R. Brown, who is a pronounced foe of home rule and who is chairman of the legislative committee which, within a few weeks, will start an investigation of the New York City Government, was the secret sponsor for this policy. The plans of this element would remove from the Constitution a clause which stands in the way of the Legislature delegating some of its legislative powers to the cities and let it go at that.

Louis Marshall had the floor for the greater part of the session today. He addressed himself in particular to the provision of the Low home rule proposal, which would give municipalities full sway without legislative check over all matters "relating to their property, business or local affairs." Mr. Marshall offered an amendment yesterday which would eliminate the word "business" from the section defining the powers of municipalities under the Low proposal. Mr. Marshall declared that it was a new idea which if incorporated in the Constitution might send cities off on a policy of financial and commercial adventure.

"Business" Too Ambiguous.

"I look with much suspicion upon the interpolation of this new idea as expressed in the word 'business,'" said Mr. Marshall. "What is meant by the word 'business' as here used? If it is used in the colloquial sense it might refer to any kind of business; in its legal sense it might refer to any kind of business. It certainly must mean something different from government. The word 'business' cannot mean the same as 'government,' it cannot mean the same as 'property,' it cannot mean the same as 'local affairs'; it therefore means something else.

"Among various schemes which have been proposed there have been those which relate to embarking in the business of a public utility corporation, the running of street railroads, the operating of electric light plants for the sale of electric light, or gas plants for the purpose of the sale of gas. There have been those who suggested forming various mercantile enterprises, the conduct of stores for the sale to the public of goods at reasonable or cost prices. There has been one enterprising gentleman in one of the cities of this State who has sought to empower his municipality to engage in the business of selling milk to the inhabitants, and with milk would go butter, cheese, and buttermilk. There are those who think that it is within the power of the municipality to deal in coal or ice or any other subject of merchandise.

"There is no limit to which these gentlemen that have these grand ideas will not go. Are you prepared in the year 1915 to embark on such a Socialist enterprise? I am not using the words in any invidious sense. Are we prepared to depart from the functions of government—the legitimate functions of government—and to enter upon the carrying on of the business enterprises? Wherever the effort has been made in that direction, so far as I have been able to learn, it has not been successful. The City of New York has had one experience, with regard to the ferry extending from the lower part of Manhattan to the County of Richmond; while that ferry under private control was a paying enterprise, it has been a losing venture for the City of New York. Thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars have been poured into it.

A Great Political Machine.

"If the city is to engage in business, it would mean that eventually a very large percentage of the population of the cities would be in the public service, they would be engaged in carrying on these different occupations and you would soon build up within every municipality a political machine compared with which no one has yet in the history of our country succeeded in even imagining a structure of such magnitude.

"Now, I should say that there is mischief latent in the use of this word 'business.' I am not speaking unadvisedly, because, as I have been informed, when the distinguished Mayor of the City of New York appeared before the Cities Committee he was asked whether he believed that the city should have the power to institute or purchase its public utilities, to which he answered in the affirmative. And in answer to the question, 'Would that not give the city, if it was so inclined, the power to threaten existing corporations?' the Mayor said: 'I do not think so. Of course, it is very hard to make any material grant of power without the possibility of having that grant of power abused, whether it be under legislative control or whether it be by constitution; but what I personally believe in, if you really want me to make a declaration of it, is that the city should have the power to acquire such public utilities as its electors see fit, acting throught their representatives; and, personally, again, I believe in the qualified control of these utilities running entirely within the city, and I do not believe the municipal authorities would abuse that power to any great degree.'

"Now, there we have from the Chief Magistrate of the City of New York an expression of purpose, intent, and policy. I am not interested in the question as to whether it would threaten the existing provisions. I am only interested in this question from the standpoint of the taxpayer. I am interested from the standpoint of one who is a lover of good government and one who desires to see that government remain on the rails and does not run wild cat into every domain of business and of human activity and endeavor. I therefore trust that the committee will see the advisability of eliminating this word 'business.' If this word is retained, however much I am impressed by the general plan of the committee, I should feel it to be my bounden obligation to contest and fight against the adoption of this provision to the utmost of my power."

Can Trust the Courts.

Ex-United States Attorney General Wickersham suggested that the courts would put a reasonable interpretation on the phrase 'business' and declare that it could have reference only to business coming properly within the purview of a city government. Mr. Marshall said that inasmuch as cities would have the right to amend their own charters under the proposal, they could create from time to time new business, declaring these municipal functions.

"Today I am sure no Court of Appeals, no Judge of the Court of Appeals, would consider it a proper, legitimate function of a city to engage in the business of selling dry goods or clothing, or coal, or wood, or milk, or any similar commodity," Mr. Marshall said, "but if you put the word 'business' into the Constitution now, I venture the prophecy that there would be no possibility for the court to hold otherwise than that those occupations might be carried on by the city under the power thus granted. I cannot conceive of anything else that the word 'business' as used in this connection would mean, and especially in view of the fact that effect must be given to every word used in the Constitution."

"I take it that the delegate would not deny the power of the municipality to enter into the business of furnishing water and light to its own citizens?" said Mr. Wickersham.

"That has been decided as being a legitimate function of the city, because water and light are necessary, in the one case for protection against fire and for the usual purposes of a municipality, and light, as well, for the purpose of illuminating the highways; and the furnishing of gas and light in that connection would be a mere incident," said Mr. Marshall.

De Lancey Nicoll asked Mr. Marshall if he was not aware that the City of New York was running ferries, and at a great annual loss.

"I am woefully aware of that, because my taxes have increased in consequence," said Mr. Marshall. "Hence these tears."

Ex-Mayor Low said the ferry was conducted under municipal auspices in lieu of a bridge, which it would be impractical to construct.

"I will say that I am not here to discuss this woeful experience of the City of New York," said Mr. Marshall. "At any rate that is now a local affair. I will not say it is a local affair of dishonor, but it is a local affair of bad judgment, and what I am trying to avoid is increasing the situation to such an extent as to have further business ventures which are even less kindred to the ordinary functions of a municipality than the conduct of a ferry."

When the session adjourned and further debate on the home rule proposal was continued until Monday some twenty amendments had been sent to the desk.

TRUST WHITMAN'S RECORD.

Constitution Framers Heedless of Reports Governor Is Reactionary.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 14.—Leaders in the Constitutional Convention are not disturbed by the reports that Governor Whitman is opposed to the plans for an executive budget and for a thorough reorganization of the State Government in the interest of economy and efficiency which now are pending before that body. The budget proposal presented by the Committee on State Finance, of which ex-Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson is Chairman, has been advanced to the order of final reading by a practically unanimous vote.

The short ballot proposal, presented by the Committee on Governor and Other State Officers, of which Republican State Chairman Fred C. Tanner is Chairman, probably will be placed on second reading early next week. It is expected that this latter measure will come in for some attack, but members of the convention who are in a position to speak authoritatively on the subject express themselves as confident that it will win.

The attitude of some delegates to the Constitutional Convention who hold office under the Whitman administration has lent color to the reports that the Governor is using his influence to defeat these measures, both drafted in accordance with Republican platform declarations and perfected after months of careful investigation and painstaking labor by two of the most important committees of the convention. Lemuel E. Quigg, who is regarded as a close personal friend of Mr. Whitman and his adviser on political matters, is one of the leaders in the fight on the two reform measures. Ex-Senator George E. Green of Broome, who has been appointed Excise Commissioner by Mr. Whitman, and Jesse S. Phillips of Allegany, who, a month ago, took office as State Superintendent of Insurance under a commission from Governor Whitman, have expressed themselves as opposed both to the executive budget and the short ballot.

The convention leaders, however, refuse to look upon the attitude of these men as indicative of the attitude of Governor Whitman. Both are devotees of the old school of politics.

Governor Whitman was prompted by the reports to deny today that he had told Chairman Tanner that he was opposed to the reorganization of the State administration involved in his short ballot proposal. He also denied that Mr Tanner had called on him and asked him to use his influence with his personal appointees in the interest of the short ballot proposal. Mr. Whitman made it plain that he regarded any meddling on his part in affairs of the Constitutional Convention as improper.

The serenity with which the convention leaders received the disquieting reports regarding the Governor's attitude, it was said today, were due in a large measure to Mr. Whitman's public utterances with reference to budget and administrative reforms. Aside from this, the Governor has assured the thirty-four delegates who are members of the two committees that framed the measures that these are in perfect accord with his views.

TYPHOID EPIDEMIC ON HART'S ISLAND

Sixty Patients Taken to City Hospital in Three Weeks, and One Is Dead.

TWO CARRIERS SUSPECTED

Employes to be Detained While It Is Determined Whether They Spread the Disease.

Typhoid fever has attacked prisoners in the branch workhouse and boys' reformatory on Hart's Island, it was learned yesterday, and in the last three weeks sixty patients have been transferred to the City Hospital on Blackwell's Island. One death has resulted.

Commissioner Davis of the Department of Correction notified the Board of Health of the epidemic on Aug. 1, and since then Dr. J. S. Billings, head of the department of communicable diseases, has had charge of the situation. All of the 700 inmates of the two institutions—prisoners, servants, and officials—underwent anti-typhoid inoculation, and it is believed now that the epidemic is under control; but as incipient typhoid sometimes does not betray itself in symptoms for as many as seventeen days after the germs enter the system, persons who became infected before the Department of Health took charge may develop the disease. As the disease usually breaks out in fourteen days, Dr. Billings hopes that the epidemic is under control. According to a report made to Commissioner Davis, there were no new cases yesterday.

The cause of the epidemic has not been determined, but Dr. Billings believes the prisoners became infected from two typhoid carriers, men employed in the branch workhouse, one as an assistant cook, and the other as a waiter. Neither is a prisoner. These men were isolated as soon as suspected and are now being held under an examination that will determine beyond doubt whether they are capable of carrying and spreading typhoid bacilli. Dr. Billings said last night that it might be several days before an absolute decision could be made, for typhoid bacilli are emitted by carriers only during irregular periods.

Though believing that the epidemic on Hart's Island is due to typhoid carriers, Dr. Billings admitted yesterday that the disease might have been caused by pollution of the beaches or by poorly drained sewage. There are a great number of flies on Hart's Island, which are probably responsible for the spread of the disease.

The epidemic is considered a mild one, Dr. Billings said. There are few severe cases, and the death of only one out of sixty is far below the average of epidemics. Usually 15 per cent. of the persons who contract typhoid do not recover.

The attributing of the epidemic to human typhoid carriers recalls the case of Mary Mallon, widely known as "Typhoid Mary," who is now detained on North Brother Island, after having caused at fewest seven typhoid epidemics, and probably more. Like one of the suspected carriers on Hart's Island, "Typhoid Mary" is a cook, and it was through her handling of food that she spread the disease. Between the years 1900 and 1907 she is known to have conveyed the disease to twenty-six persons, some of whom died.

That the woman was a carrier was discovered in 1906 by Dr. George A. Soper, sanitary expert of the city, and in 1907 she was made a prisoner on North Brother Island. She protested and sued the city for her freedom and for damages of $50,000, but she was helpless against the facts of science.

Facts about typhoid carriers, their number and personal immunity from the disease, have been set forth by both Dr. Soper and Dr. Ogan, who have made an especial study of them. Dr. Soper asserts that the condition of typhoid carriers cannot be cured, and that there are about 200,000 of them at liberty in this country today.

SECURITY LEAGUE GROWING.

Whole Country Taking Up National Defense Movement.

The national defense movement is making headway throughout the country, according to a report made yesterday by the National Security League, 31 Pine Street. Two Statewide rallies have been planned in New England, the first to be held Sept. 15 in Rhode Island, and the other on Oct. 15 in Massachusetts. Initial steps have been taken to organize branches in Hartford, Bridgeport, and New Haven. In the last city a mass meeting will be held Tuesday to hear S. Stanwood Menken, President of the National Security League, and Captain Matthew E. Hanna.

On the Middle Atlantic Coast the movement also is gaining popularity. Congressman Miller of Delaware has consented to participate actively in the formation of a State branch, and large accessions to the league also are reported in Virginia and North Carolina.

William B. Brewster, a Field Secretary of the league, reports he has met with great success in the Middle West. Wide indorsement of the movement was found in Cleveland, Ohio, where a branch was organized under the leadership of Myron T. Herrick, ex-Ambassador to France. Branches also have been organized in Detroit, Milwaukee, Minnesota, and other branches are being started. The activities of the league found support in Louisville, Atlanta, Chattanooga, and other Southern cities.

"We feel that we have thoroughly aroused the people on the Atlantic seaboard to a realization of the necessity of putting into actual effect the plans for better national defense submitted by army and navy boards, and now we have brought all our force to bear upon the Middle West," said Mr. Menken. "It is pleasant to know that the sentiment of the Middle West is thoroughly in sympathy with our efforts."

NATION EAGER TO AID WOULD-BE CITIZENS

Educational Campaign of Bureau of Naturalization Is Proving Popular.

TO MINIMIZE REJECTIONS

Nearly 85,000 Applicants Failed Where 650,000 Were Admitted During Last Nine Years.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—Since the establishment in 1906 of Federal supervision of the working of the Naturalization Law, almost 2,500,000 foreigners have asked for citizenship, 335,000 of these having declared their intention and petitioned for naturalization during the last fiscal year, according to a report made public today by the Bureau of Naturalization in the Department of Labor. More than 750,000 have asked for final papers, and, of these, about 650,000 have been admitted to citizenship.

"During the same time," continues the report, "there have been upwards of 85,000 foreigners who have been refused admission to citizenship. Over one-half of these have been denied because of mental and moral unfitness. The bureau has kept a close supervision over this phase of its work and as early as 1907, through its activities, the public mind was directed to the necessity for providing some means to enable these unfortunate candidates from the vast foreign populace, not only to accomplish the act of admission to citizenship, but to equip them better to carry on the daily fight for their livelihood.

"While the above figures indicate a large number among the foreign element of this country coming forward for citizenship, the number does not appear relatively very large when it is known that in 1910 there were nearly 14,000,000 foreigners in this country, that of this number 9,000,000 were not citizens. By far the larger portion of the foreign residents of this country have retained their allegiance to the sovereignty of their birth. Recently reports in the public press have shown many of these are ready to respond to the behest of these sovereignties.

"Among the approximately 14,000,000 foreign alien residents, 1,850,361 are classed as illiterate. These illiterates are the natural prey of the designing and scheming foreigners and natives, as well, at every turn.

"For years this condition has been studied by the Bureau of Naturalization in its application to the administration of the naturalization law. In many places the public schools have, under the inspiration of the Bureau of Naturalization, opened their doors to the foreigner and have taught him the duties of American citizenship.

"The law permits an alien to declare his intention who is an illiterate. In from two years to five he is eligible to petition for naturalization. During that period, while the United States holds the candidate to be on probation, it has done nothing heretofore to help his claim except in a very meagre way. The Bureau of Naturalization has been the only Government agency which has extended to him the helping hand.

"To overcome this the Bureau of Naturalization has brought its educational movement to the attention of all of the Superintendents of public schools, wherever there is any foreign population, for the purpose of enlisting these educators in carrying forward this movement.

"The bureau in its letters to the Superintendents of schools has shown the number of foreigners applying for citizenship during the last three years in the localities to which the letters go. The purpose of the bureau in sending these names is to enable the school authorities to become acquainted with the candidates for citizenship and to offer such inducements as they can that will inspire every candidate for citizenship to attend the public schools unless he already has a mastery of the English language. At the same time the bureau sends literature to the candidate for citizenship to apprise him of the individual, personal, industrial, social, and moral advantages which will accrue to him by an attendance upon the public schools.

"Some of the school authorities have agreed to furnish descriptive matter printed in various tongues, for further facilitating the foreigner in the selection of a school. All have agreed to give their heartiest endeavors toward the realization of the desires of the Bureau of Naturalization and to get the Chambers of Commerce and other civic organizations and the press behind the movement locally so as to arouse public sentiment and start the wheels into operation to secure the appropriation of the necessary funds for opening the public schools or extending their activities where they have been open to foreigners."

BOY BURGLAR DROPS TOOLS.

Cartridges Hit Detective's Feet, and Sullivan Law Charge Results.

As Tony Maderis, 17 years old, of 89 Transit Street, Providence, R. I., was walking down the gangplank of the Fall River liner Commonwealth, from Providence, yesterday morning at the foot of Fulton Street, he pulled his handkerchief from his pocket and jerked out a box of cartridges. The box broke, the cartridges went rattling in every direction, and some hit the feet of Detective Lauckman of the First Branch Bureau, who "frisked" the youth and took from him a revolver, an electric flashlight, a burglar's jimmy, and a screw driver.

At headquarters, according to the police, Maderis frankly admitted that his business in New York was burglary. He had done several successful "jobs" in Providence, he said, but had found the financial returns too small. He was charged with violation of the Sullivan law.

GOVERNORS TO VIEW FLEET.

Will Visit Warships During Their Conference at Boston.

BOSTON, Aug. 14.—The Atlantic battleship fleet, or part of it, will be reviewed by the Governors of the country at their annual conferences to be held here Aug. 24 to 27, Governor Walsh announced tonight.

His statement was made upon receipt of a telegram from Secretary Daniels, saying that a warship would be detailed Aug. 25 to take the Governors to Gloucester and that other vessels of the fleet would be lined up off Boston Light for review.

WAR DISPUTANTS WARNED.

Magistrate Corrigan Loses Patience with Curb Orators.

Curb stone oratory on the war finds little favor with Magistrate Corrigan, who announced in the Tombs Court yesterday that in the future he would deal severely with noisy partisans who disturb the peace in front of Park Row bulletin boards. With this warning, he suspended sentence on two Germans who were taken before him on charges of disorderly conduct. They were Joseph Newburger of 111 Third Street, New Brighton, S. I., and Leonard M. Gohs of 454 Woodward Avenue, Brooklyn.

Newburger advocated "uber alles" principles of "Deutschland" in so loud a voice in Printing House Square on Friday night that Policeman Lally of the Oak Street station decided to suppress him for his own safety. But Newburger would not be suppressed and Lally arrested him. Gohs interfered, denouncing the policeman's action as a violation of the right of free speech. Lally could not see it that way and arrested Gohs also. When Magistrate Corrigan heard the case he said:

"The streets are made to walk on and not to talk on. If the Park Row Debating Society wants to hold a caucus on the war, they should hire a hall or disband. I suspend sentence now, but in the future I shall not be so lenient."

FIND RECLUSE HAS $10,000.

Neighbors Aid Strange Woman Who Suffers Paralytic Stroke.

When Mrs. Maria Bartlett, 65 years old, of 204 East Twenty-fifth Street, was seized with a paralytic stroke yesterday afternoon her cries summoned neighbors and two policemen, who called an ambulance and sent her to Bellevue Hospital. The policemen then searched the poorly furnished two-room apartment and found bank books showing savings of almost $10,000 and insurance policies amounting to $2,000 more.

Little about the woman was known by the neighbors. She was always poorly dressed and was not known to have any relatives or friends. Other tenants in the house, who saw her daily, seldom spoke to her and regarded the source of her livelihood as a mystery. At the hospital it was said she was not expected to live.

EX-ARMY OFFICER MUST PAY ALIMONY

Wever Seeks Annulment on Basis of Illegal Divorce Got from a Former Wife.

FOUR WOMEN IN THE PAPERS

Last Wife Complains of Attentions to Clerk Employed in a City Department.

Mrs. Lita Picabia Wever of 557 West 178th Street yesterday obtained an order from Supreme Court Justice Delehanty granting her $75 a month alimony and $250 counsel fees, pending the trial of a suit for annulment against her brought by Benjamin S. Wever of 936 St. Mark's Avenue, Brooklyn, who is an Assistant Engineer in the Department of Finance.

Mrs. Wever sets up a counterclaim for a separation on the grounds of cruel and inhuman treatment and his "association" with Gertrude Farrington, a file clerk in the Board of Water Supply, where Wever was an Assistant Engineer in 1910.

In her papers asking for alimony Mrs. Wever says that her husband told her he was a West Point graduate and attached at one time to the regular army. She also says that she sent for the records and they disclosed that Wever was appointed a Cadet from Plattsburg, N. Y., in 1876, was graduated from the academy in 1880 and was promoted to the rank of First Lieutenant in 1887. She also recites that the record shows that Wever in 1886 was absent without leave from the army and was under arrest at the Presidio, California, on that charge from Oct. 30 to Dec. 29, 1886. He deserted the army from Angel Island, California, on June 5, 1891, she says, and the record shows that he was dropped from the roll on Sept. 1 of that year. He is a brother of the late John M. Wever, who was President of the Merchants' National Bank of Plattsburg, she says.

Based on Illegal Divorce.

The former Lieutenant, the papers of Mrs. Wever read, bases his annulment suit on the fact that he was divorced from his first wife, Mary Elizabeth, daughter of a Major D. F. Callinan, U. S. A., retired, in South Dakota, in 1894, without having served her with papers in that State. Such service is not legal in divorce proceedings in this State, the papers recite, and Wever claims that since such a divorce is invalid here, where he married his present and third wife, he could not legally marry the latter.

This contention of Wever, the papers recite, further complicates the case, because Wever, immediately after the divorce, married a Miss Margaret Wyant, who was the mother of John Wever, the little son, who now lives with Mrs. Wever the third. Mrs. Wever says that if the divorce were not valid, then her husband could not legally have married his second wife, the boy's mother.

Mrs. Wever then recites that she was a student nurse in St. Luke's Hospital in 1898 when Mrs. Margaret Wyant Wever, the second wife, was a patient there. A friendship grew up between her and Mrs. Wever and the engineer, Mrs. Wever the third says, and when she was graduated in 1899 she was invited to the Wever home at Westwood, N. J., for week ends.

Then, in April, 1900, Mrs. Wever says, the second wife was taken suddenly ill and died in ten days. Mrs. Wever says that "at the request of the plaintiff, (Wever,) and his family," she remained in charge of the home and the care of his son, then 3 years old, and that on Dec. 18, 1901, she married Wever and was happy for seven years, caring for the boy "with a mother's love."

The defendant in the annulment suit and plaintiff in the separation suit then recites that in 1907 she found letters expressing affection written by Miss Farrington to Wever, and that he admitted he had carried on flirtations with Miss Farrington, consisting of "notes, caresses and kisses," in the Board of Water Supply while the young woman was his stenographer in that department. Miss Farrington expressed remorse, Mrs. Wever says, when confronted with the letters. After that, Wever became very cold and distant in his manner to her, Mrs. Wever says.

Attentive to Miss Farrington.

In 1908, when the son, John, was undergoing an operation and was later convalescing, Mrs. Wever says, her husband caused Miss Farrington to move into a house adjoining his residence at 163 Prospect Park West, Brooklyn, and although Wever promised not to pay such attentions to Miss Farrington, he continued to meet her and "would stand in the public street beneath the windows of her apartment for hours at a time, creating a public scandal by his conduct."

In 1910, her papers recite, her husband's kisses from the street to Miss Farrington became so notorious that the neighbors began to complain. Then it was, Mrs. Wever says, that she received letters, presumably from neighbors, signed "X. Y. Z.," one of which read in part:

"Mrs. Wever, don't let that husband of yours make a fool of you any longer. Your friends and neighbors know about it and pity you. Can't you stop his running around with other women while you stay at home?"

Another letter filed with her papers reads in part:

"It is high time some action on your part was taken to end this notorious affair between your husband and his stenographer. Ask him to explain the taxi of Jan. 28, (1910,) while you rode in a trolley. You are to be pitied as being bled by such creatures. Your friends and neighbors will stand by you and open their doors to you."

Mrs. Wever then says that she separated from her husband in the Spring of 1914, he agreeing to pay her alimony at the rate of $60 a month.

She then says that on June 24, 1915, Wever induced her, under the pretense of giving her an alimony payment, to meet him at the Murray Hill Hotel, where a lawyer served her with the papers in the annulment proceedings. She also accuses her husband of then sending her a newspaper clipping which stated that an annulment had been granted on conditions similar to those recited in his complaint.

She says, too, that her husband then told her that this was the best way to settle their marital troubles, because she could not afford publicity, as her friends would then know that she was not legally married to him.

PENSION NOT VESTED RIGHT.

Creditors' Plea to Get Hoag's City Annuity Denied by Judge.

In an opinion filed yesterday in the United States District Court, Judge Augustus N. Hand denied a motion made by the trustee in bankruptcy of Sidney Willet Hoag, former Deputy Chief Engineer of the Dock Department, for leave to sell the former official's pension for the benefit of his creditors.

Hoag became incapacitated from further performance of his duties at the Dock Department last year when an attack of apoplexy caused the paralysis of the left side of his body. The Board of Estimate by a resolution adopted Jan. 15 last awarded him an annual pension of $2,100 for life. He later went into bankruptcy.

In refusing the trustee the right to attach the pension, Judge Hand said: "A pension is not a vested right, but a bounty granted by the Government to encourage persons engaged in public service. It can be recalled at will and is not therefore an asset which passes to the trustee in bankruptcy.

JOBLESS, RETURNS TO CRIME

John Noeker Admits $4,000 Theft from Jewelry Store.

After serving a prison sentence of twenty months and then living honestly for three years, John Noeker, 22 years old, of 82 East Second Street, by his own confession, turned criminal again and is now awaiting trial on a charge of burglary. Noeker was arrested on Friday afternoon after he had thrown a brick through the display window of the jewelry store of Mrs. Amelia Rubin at 352 East Houston Street and attempted to run away with $4,000 worth of jewelry snatched from the window.

At Police Headquarters yesterday morning Noeker told his story. He said that when a youth of 17 he was sentenced to Sing Sing Prison, where he remained twenty months. He was released three years ago, he said, and in that time held three different positions, in each of which he earned a good living through honest application to his work. He obtained work each time, he said, through the help of friends who introduced him as a convict who wanted to "make good."

"But," Noeker continued, "I found myself out of work in New York recently and I could not get a job. So I determined to commit a crime that would either give me money or get me in jail, where I would not starve. I tried to get away with a bunch of jewelry but they caught me, so I guess its jail and food for me."

Noeker plead guilty when arraigned in the Essex Market Court yesterday afternoon for burglary, and he was held in $2,500 bail.

Movies to Show Kindred, Fugitive.

The pictures and description of Edward C. Kindred, Cashier of the Flinn-O'Rourke Construction Company, who disappeared with about $20,000 of the firm's cash, will be flashed on the screens of moving picture theatres throughout the city and nearby Summer resorts today. This novel attempt to get a clue to Kindred's whereabouts was arranged by the Police Department with several film companies yesterday.

HASTINGS TO HELP ITS RICH FIREMEN

Funds for New Engine House Will Be Raised at Show by Ben Greet Players.

WANT ELECTRIC ALARM, TOO

Volunteers Fight Flames in Spotless White Duck, and They Need Room for Uniforms.

Special to The New York Times.

HASTINGS-ON-HUDSON, Aug. 14.—The Riverview Manor Hose Company of Hastings, which is composed of well-known professional and business men of New York City, and is probably the wealthiest volunteer fire-fighting organization in the country, is to build a new fire house on Euclid Avenue, within a block of the present quarters on Calumet Avenue. When the 75-horse-power automobile combination fire engine is backed into the one-story fire house it leaves little space for the seventy-five members, and as there is a long waiting list the need for larger quarters is imperative.

As the members fight fires in white duck suits and white shoes they require many changes, for there is a rule against turning out in soiled suits, regardless of the frequency of alarms, so the company uniforms fill more space than the old quarters provide. The new building will be designed to provide in addition to the fire needs rooms for the Hastings Country and Golf Clubs and other social features.

The Building Committee consists of Gustave Heubach, manufacturer; John Donnelly, sculptor; Edward Perot, Jr., of the National Conduit and Cable Company; Charles Doty, banker; Philip L. Spear, engineering department of the Erie Railroad; Walter Storm, merchant; John S. Miller, publisher, and Charles L. Brookheim, attorney.

The cost of the uniforms is the least item in the expense of the members, who not only buy all apparatus, hose and other materials, but pay for the maintenance of the organization in every way. These neatly uniformed firemen have on many occasions fought hard fires here and in other Hudson River towns and have saved lives and much property. The big automobile fire engine, which comotnes in its carrying capacity also a hose and ladder wagon, is said to have cost the members $10,000. John Fimian, a merchant, is the foreman.

Every one of the members owns an automobile and knows how to drive the engine, and it is the general rule that the first member to reach the fire house acts as chauffeur. The running of the big white machine, which is always kept in spick and span shape, with the white-clad citizens grouped upon it in responding to an alarm, is a constant source of pride to the residents.

Because of their popularity and as a token of appreciation of good service given many of the citizens, society folk and personal friends of the volunteer firemen have asked permission to subscribe to the building fund. This will not be done, but they will permit their friends to help by attending the performance of "Twelfth Night," to be given for the building fund on Aug. 21 by the Ben Greet Players.

Some of the volunteer firemen want an electric fire alarm system established in Hastings. At present when a fire is discovered the operator at the telephone exchange is notified. She telephones to the fire house. There a fireman rings the bell in the tower, and the factory of the National Conduit and Cable Company spreads the alarm by blasts from a big steam whistle.

Dig Up Dynamite Buried Ten Years.

Three one-pound sticks of dynamite believed to have been lying in the ground for the last ten years, were unearthed yesterday by workmen digging a trench under the new elevated railroad structure in White Plains Avenue, the Bronx. Michael Tulli, the foreman of the squad working on the trench, notified Owen Egan, Inspector of the Bureau of Combustibles, who destroyed the explosive power of the sticks. The dynamite was found in old drill holes where Inspector Egan believes it was placed ten years ago when much rock blasting was done in White Plains Avenue.

INDUSTRIAL BOARD WINDS UP ITS WORK

Makes Three Reports to Congress and Its Members Issue Individual Statements.

ONE AIMS AT STANDARD OIL

Mrs. Harriman Signs Findings Drawn Up by Prof. Commons—Walsh and Garretson Explain.

CHICAGO, Aug. 14.—The United States Commission on Industrial Relations, which for two years has been investigating industrial unrest and its causes, concluded its session today and adjourned. Three reports were made ready for submission to Congress with several supplemental reports and opinions.

One report was prepared by Professor John R. Commons of Wisconsin, which also was signed by Mrs. J. Borden Harriman of New York, Richard H. Aishton of Illinois, S. Thurston Ballard of Kentucky, and Harris Weinstock of California.

Another, announced as the "staff or main" report, was finished, in which all of the findings of fact and practically all of the recommendations, it was said, were concurred in by Commissioners Austin B. Garretson of Iowa, John B. Lennon of Illinois, James O'Connell of the District of Columbia, and Frank P. Walsh of Missouri.

The third report, giving reasons for signing the "staff" report, was signed by Commissioners Lennon and O'Connell and concurred in by Garretson and Walsh.

Commissioners Garretson and Walsh each submitted a statement setting forth their views on the causes of industrial unrest.

Chairman Walsh left here for Kansas City tonight, but will return Monday to supervise the distribution of copies of special reports on the Colorado and Bayonne, N. J., strikes and other disturbances. These are being scanned by members of the commission before being released.

One of the reports says that John D. Rockefeller and the Standard Oil Company not only connive with other employers to keep wages as low as possible, but that they provide no means whereby the men may have their grievances heard.

SUED FOR WIFE'S GOWNS.

Dressmaking Concern Alleges Stewart M. Jones Owes $5,215.

The Lichtenstein Millinery Company yesterday started suit in the Supreme Court against Stewart M. Jones, a wealthy realty operator, to recover $5,215 as the balance due for gowns and other clothing delivered to his wife, Mrs. Eleanor T. Jones, during the period extending from Oct. 5, 1910, to April 19, 1911. The complaint alleges that the full bill for that period was $7,215, but that $2,000 was paid on account.

Included in the list of items was a pink fur coat upon which the firm set a price of $3,100. There were also a white crystal net and plush princess gown, $425; a silver fox muff and scarf, $1,800, and several princess gowns ranging from $250 to $385 each.

There are Many Beautiful Models from Which to Choose, in

The AEOLIAN-VOCALION

"THE PHONOGRAPH THAT CALLS FORTH HIDDEN BEAUTIES FROM YOUR RECORDS"

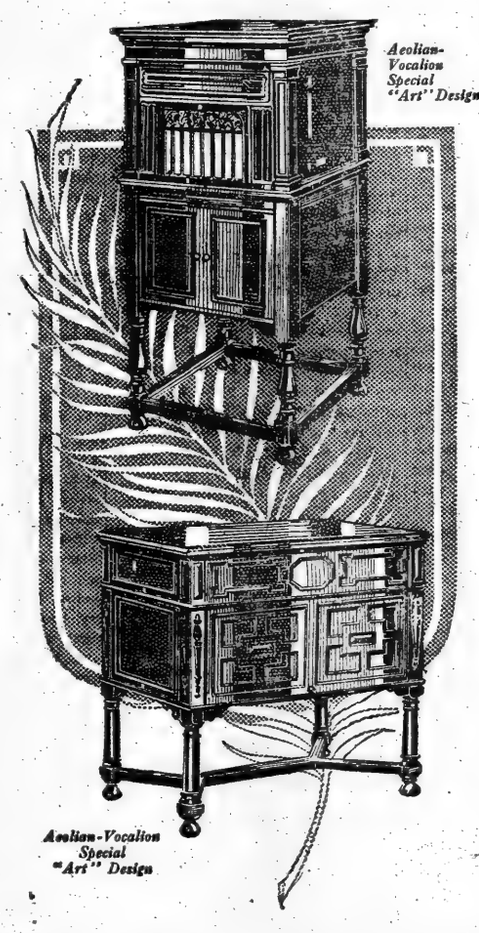
WE show here five from among the wide variety of beautiful models in which the Aeolian-Vocalion may be obtained.

This wonderful, new Phonograph is not only far in advance of other instruments musically, but architecturally as well.

Indeed, the first impression one receives of it is an entirely unprecedented beauty of line and finish. Even the simplest model —that costing but $90—charms the eye both by its design and rare piano finish. For these phonographs have all the rich depth of coloring that distinguishes the finest pianofortes.

New Tones from the Phonograph

It is small wonder that the Aeolian-Vocalion has in so short a time assumed pre-eminence in the field of the phonograph. In this superb instrument, developed from the point where other phonographs leave off, science and musical skill have incorporated inventions and features that have made virtually a new creation, delightful even to the most critical ear. These features enable the Aeolian-Vocalion to draw from records, old and new, tones so delicate that no phonograph ever produced them before.



Aeolian-Vocalion Special "Art" Design

Aeolian-Vocalion Special "Art" Design

They enable it, while developing every high brilliancy of tone, to awake velvet vibrancies of rich depth unknown to the phonograph before. They enable the Vocalion to delicately differentiate and clearly distinguish the subtlest character of all vocal or instrumental tone.

They enable the Vocalion even to vary the performance of a single record—just as a singer varies at each performance, a single song.

So when you hear the Vocalion playing an orchestral piece you hear the soft, low tones pulsate with the depth of life—thanks to the Vocalion's new Sound Box, of a type never used before.

So you hear sweetly the true, natural tones of flute, of violin, of oboe; the blare of the trumpet; the faint plucking of strings. And all are so delicately set forth and preserved in their true proportion by the New Symphonetic Horn that the very living music itself is in your presence when you play the Vocalion in your home.

Personal Control

And you can temper the music to your own mood. With the Graduola device in your hand you can, if you wish, soften each strain, shading down, down, down, to a very whisper of sweetness, then let it swell up and up till the full, fresh volume seems to pulse from the finger tips.

All of these things, foreign to other phonographs, the Aeolian-Vocalion offers you, in addition to a beauty and exclusiveness of design delightful to the most fastidious taste.

It must not be understood, however, that the Aeolian-Vocalion differs from other phonographs in its ordinary uses. For example:—you may use the Graduola tone-shading device when you wish, but you are not obliged to do so, as the instrument will play itself like other phonographs.

Neither is the Aeolian-Vocalion higher priced than other phonographs of equal capacity. While beautiful art models of exclusive design are available for those who wish them, other models, relatively as fine, may be purchased from $90 upwards and on payments as low as $5 monthly.

AN INVITATION

We want you and your friends to see and hear this wonderful new phonograph. A spacious, cool and beautiful department is devoted to it at Aeolian Hall. Our demonstrators are salespeople only to those who specifically wish to buy. To all others their business is simply to extend hospitality. Your visit, therefore, will entail no obligation but will be simply a pleasurable musical experience.

THE CONSTITUTION MAKERS.

The Constitutional Convention at Albany holds its mandate, not from the insignificant April vote, when by a mere shred of a majority the convention was ordered, but from the popular vote for delegates last November. The people who elected the delegates can reject the convention's work. That thought is present in the minds of some of the wiser and more far-seeing members of the convention, but it has not yet been impressed upon the minds of all the delegates. Probably when the proposed amendments are assembled for final scrutiny as a whole there will be changes, some of them will disappear; there will be need of firmness and great wisdom in the sifting process.

The convention has shown a disappointing want of courage in failing to provide for the appointment of Judges. A large number of the delegates, and among them men who are best qualified to pass upon such a question, feel and know that the Judges of our courts should be appointed, not elected. The inherent vices of the elective system have been made known to them by authoritative argument and appeal. The convention is too timid to propose the change. It fears rejection by the people. That would not necessarily follow, for there would be time enough for a convincing campaign of education. But it is probably too late for that great reform.

The convention was timid again in making only a moderate approach to the principle of the short ballot. To be sure, something has been gained in the amendment providing that certain State officers shall be appointed, not elected. But too many officers remain upon the elective list. The proposed Article V., relating to State officers and departments, contains, however, one section that should be expunged. It is Section 4, creating a Department of Public Utilities to consist of two commissions, of five members each, appointed by the Governor, but removable only by the Senate upon the Governor's recommendation. This is the outcome of the effort of certain public service corporations to get the Public Service Commissioners put into the Constitution. It has the appearance of one of those "jobs" which we expect from Legislatures, which vigilant guardians of the public interest are always watching for while the Legislature is in session. Such work is not expected at the Constitutional Convention.

There is no reason on earth why a Public Service Commissionership should be made a constitutional office. There are many reasons against the change. There are far too many constitutional offices, and it is illogical to decrease the number with the one hand while increasing it with the other. Moreover, what is the sense of creating a State department consisting of two commissions with equal and co-ordinate powers distinguished one from the other only by geographical jurisdiction? We are familiar with two-headed, three-headed, and five-headed commissions, but a State department with two bodies and no head is something new in our administrative zoology. Some other reason than a consideration for the public interest prompted the introduction of Section 4 of the proposed Article V. It should be struck out.

Mr. BARNES has been wise enough to assent to a postponement of his amendment restricting the powers of the Legislature in ways which might be described as reactionary. His example might with propriety be followed by those who are supporting amendments of the contrary tendency. Too much radicalism in the new Constitution would be as fatal to its acceptance by the people as too much reaction. Mr. LOW is by no means a radical, but if Mr. LOUIS MARSHALL'S criticism of the home rule amendment is well founded, that too should be materially modified, although Albany advices indicate its rejection altogether. The amendment would confer upon the City of New York "exclusive powers to manage, regulate, and control its own property, business, and local affairs." Mr. MARSHALL was of the opinion that the word "business" in this amendment would naturally be construed as conferring power upon the city "to enter upon a policy of business adventure." The city does not want that now or any time. Yet it is quite conceivable that with such an amendment in the Constitution the City Government might at any time, without express authority from the people, commit them to senseless and costly adventures in municipal operation. Home rule is a precious theory, but if we should get too much of it the time would surely come when we should pray for restraint from Albany.

WHERE ARE THE CATES OF YESTERYEAR?

From the Eastern Shore of Maryland is a sound of sighing sent to The Baltimore Sun. Divers correspondents, forgetting that their stomachs are not as young as they used to be, grumble at the fare in the Eastern Sho' hotels. The hand of the Senegambian cook has lost its cunning. The physiologists of taste find it in the once famous, savory messes of the dusky Phillises no more, alas! no more. Dr. JOHN S. FULTON, "an original Eastern Shore man," mourns the absence of the old, familiar indigenous dishes, now displaced by imitations of an alien cuisine. Where is the Sally Lunn of our grandmothers? Where crackling bread, broiled chicken, Maryland biscuit? With hardly less elegiac eloquence did the old English Chief Justice, lamenting the decay of the ancient nobility, ask: "Where is BOHUN? Where is MOWBRAY? Say, what is more and most of all, where is PLANTAGENET?"

Simultaneously, The Richmond Times-Dispatch and other connoisseurs ponder the decline and fall of the mint julep in a South grown Dry. Ubi sunt, O, pocula, dulciora melle? Where are the juleps, sweeter than honey? Where can you get 'em for love or for money?

So, at table with the products of French cookery, the country-bred Yankee regrets the hasty puddin' and milk of nights and mornings of his youth; the hasty puddin' and molasses, the latter a little central lake in a continent of "mush," a geographical arrangement attributed to Dr. FRANKLIN; "Injun puddin'," and such plain living. He orders them cooked at home, storms at them, writes letters to the newspapers. Is real cornmeal unprocurable? So the homesick Louisianian in New York—but why go on? It is youth that we vainly seek to recapture with a sophisticated, jaded palate. In these Arcadian velleities we blame the cooks instead of the fugacious years. Once upon a time spring water, with your hands for goblet, was more to you than Closp de Vougeot can ever be; a turnip prigged from the fields and pared and eaten, sans salt or pepper, with a penknife, more than canvasback.

Scorn not the cooks, brethren, if they cannot give you the elixir of youth for sauce.

IRREPRESSIBLE RACE EGO.

In the first competitive search for a fundamental sin of heart, mind, or instinct on which to blame the war, the sin of nationalism was heavily scored upon. What had been honored as patriotism was suddenly treated as a geographical absurdity. Ethnologists proved that people were arbitrarily divided by frontiers which had no relation whatever to facts of racial likeness and unlikeness. Psychologists proved that the phenomena of distorted national ego were similar to those of abnormal individual ego; therefore, an excessive sense of nationalism was psychopathological. Theorists in mechanistic reactions proved that two or three egoistic phrases could produce a kind of national insanity.

Germany was the instance, the amazing example, of nationalism or race ego gone mad, as might happen to any other people unresolved to be rid of that same sin. But, alas! nobody sufficiently believes an example. Since the beginning of the war nationalism, racial ego, whatever you please to call it, has developed in the world at a rate unparalleled. People who had no frontiers before, no separate political existence, now suddenly erect racial consciousness into a yearning for nationalism and territorial independence, as, for instance, the Czechs, who would no longer be a people submerged but a State unto themselves. Countries that have rigid frontiers and do not covet territory are yet constrained in the flux of things to demand concessions to the future of their national dignity and importance. In that group are the Scandinavian countries.

Better known are those countries whose "aspirations" can be gratified only by territorial expansion. Each has something to give or withhold, for a price in terms of land. One is tempted to say rather that each has something to sell. Italy made no secret of demanding a large tract of territory from Austria as the price of her neutrality. The concessions offered by Austria being insufficient, and in any event not immediate in their nature, she took up arms against her former Teutonic allies. Rumania has been trading shrewdly on her very valuable neutrality. So has Greece.

Bulgaria is, as one might say, on the auction block. The Germanic Powers and the anti-German allies bid furiously against each other for the use of her mailed fist, and her Premier frankly announces that Bulgaria "is prepared to enter the war "the moment she receives absolute "guarantees that by so doing she will "attain that for which other nations "already engaged are striving, namely, the realization of her national "ideals." And her national ideals happen to require that Bulgaria shall possess a large tract of territory called Serbian Macedonia, whereas, of course, Serbia's national ideals would in that way be extremely discomfited. This has the sound of selfish barter, or, worse yet, a division of the earth loot beforehand. And then one little unexpected phrase is quite enough to change it all around, to put in place of cynicism a very different, nameless feeling. "We will fight but for one "end," the Bulgarian Premier says. "That is to extend our frontiers until "they embrace the peoples of our "own blood."

The ethnologist may prove that there is no pure blood in the world, least of anywhere in Europe, wherefore the phrase, "people of our own blood," is intrinsically empty. But that would not answer anything. The Bulgars are a very medley of blood mixture and yet they are to themselves Bulgars only, unlike other peoples, and, therefore, emotionally related to all Bulgars beyond the national frontier as to no other human beings in the world. Italy's "aspirations," possible of gratification only by the acquisition of territory from Austria, wear at once a different aspect, even an unselfish one, when expressed as a patriotic desire to liberate from foreign rule territory outside of Italy where the Italian tongue is spoken.

There is no help for this. Civilization has come to us through clans and tribes. The tribal instinct is the urge to nationalism. It would be very hard to argue that the war so far had impressed upon the political thought of man the desirability of abolishing frontiers, thereby achieving a brotherhood of nations, degoized.

IN THE BACKGROUND.

It is easy enough to account for the pro-German pacifist. He has no objection to war, provided it is not war with Germany. He would welcome war with England or France. But as there is no likelihood of war with anybody, he helps Germany as best he can by trying to prevent the exportation of war material until such time as Germany shall be able to buy some. He needs help, and in looking about for it he finds people who are opposed to war and think they can always avoid it by not being ready for it. These people, too, are against the exportation of munitions. They call themselves pacifists. So he calls himself a pacifist, too, dons a uniform of sheep's clothing, denounces war with his tongue in his cheek, and joins an alliance about as natural to him as would be an alliance with the Prohibitionists.

So much for the pro-German element in pacifism. But how about the rest, and how does the pro-German find this factor ready to his hand, ready for him to ally himself with? How comes it that in the United States, known and even derided among nations for its knowingness, and never suspected of being a moonstruck nation, there should be any sentiment strong enough in favor of turning the other cheek to make it worth an alliance?

There are a good many Socialists and there are anarchists few but highly audible. All the anarchists and many of the Socialists are revolutionists. The Socialists learned when they were few, and the anarchists have never grown numerous enough to forget, that a minority can obtain much that it desires through getting it by degrees; that even men who shrink from it with horror will agree with some one thing on its program, and that the thing to do is to bring that feature forward and get these men to be its sponsors, while the minority remains in the background and only furnishes the ideas. That feature won, a battle may be made for the next, this time getting another set of men who happen to agree with that to go to the front while the minority furnishes the motive power.

The Socialist program includes many things, one of which is the abolition of standing armies. The anarchist proposes the abolition of all government, and of course the first thing to abolish is the military part of it. The revolutionist is afraid of an army when a revolution, or even a riot or strike, comes, and every proposal to increase the military strength of the country is a blow aimed at him personally, or he thinks so. He opposes even proposals to increase the strength of the police or the National Guard, and such a thing as the Pennsylvania State Constabulary finds him with no words to express his outraged feelings. But the public generally has been little interested in the Socialistic theory of an international industrial brotherhood, with the nations in control of production; it has not warmed to the anarchist idea of abolishing the army and navy as a prelude to abolishing Congress and the courts; it has been cold to the revolutionist idea that when the revolution comes it should not be handicapped by encountering soldiers.

It so happens that a war comes along, and this particular number on the revolution program is therefore the easiest thing on which to arouse public sentiment. There are in the country many amiable people who would rather theorize about the beauties of peace than look at the grim fact that other people may not let you be peaceful, and that you had better be prepared for them. It is the line of least resistance, for the moment. So these people are aroused, formed into a party, and made to do the work of the Socialists, the anarchists, and the revolutionists. The fact that they know nothing about Socialism or anarchism and would probably oppose both makes no difference; for the moment they are doing the work of Socialism and anarchism. The real creators of the sentiment regard it as highly profitable propaganda, as "sowing the seed," and are content to stay in the background. "I Didn't Raise My Boy to Be a Soldier" was sung in Socialist circles, and made its way before a public which knew nothing of its sponsors.

What the pacifists think they want—for the present the withholding of arms from the Allies, next the prevention of any preparation for defense on the part of the nation—will not be achieved. When the agitation is over this country will still be furnishing supplies to any nation that can buy them, and the nation will be in the way of being put in a state of defense. But the "seed" of an important part of the revolutionist propaganda will have been sown; and that is all that the real originators of the movement care anything about.

LITIGATING A SUBWAY CONTRACT

The city is hardly now a novice in subway building. Contracts to the value of scores of millions have been let upon the same terms as those offered to the contractors at the latest bidding. Yet the successful bidders have begun a lawsuit to prevent the city's altering the contract after the bidding. It is lamentable that there should be litigation regarding the Broadway subway between Twenty-eighth and Fifty-first Streets, the section which Mr. McANENY calls the keystone of the dual subway. It would also be lamentable if a contract of such importance should be let on terms unfavorable to the city. It is not alleged that there have been unfavorable results from earlier contracts containing the same provision. It is sure that there could be no unfavorable result without failure of duty on the part of the Chief Engineer of the Public Service Commission, who is not said to have given grounds of fear that he will err in this case. Yet, in what seems like an excess of precaution, the Board of Estimate protected the city against a theoretical danger and thrust it into perhaps greater actual danger. After the bidding was closed, and, according to the successful contractors, after the contract was actually awarded, the Board of Estimate struck out a clause providing the method of payment for extra work which had been customary. The Board of Estimate provided another method, which may or may not be better, but which certainly has not yet been proved better than the one against which there are no public charges. The Public Service Commission authorizes a statement that an alteration of a contract by the Board of Estimate being practically a refusal to approve the contract, there will be no further contracts until the dispute is settled.

It ought to be settled promptly, either by decision of the court or preferably by agreement. Fortunately the wrangle does not affect the very large contracts now proceeding. It may or may not be worth while to adopt the suggestion for all future contracts by orderly procedure. But after the city's prolonged experience there is no reason for eleventh-hour amendments of contracts with possibilities of evil rivaling any possibilities of good. No slight cause should impede the completion of work upon which hundreds of millions are to be spent, and which involves the daily life of the city's entire population. The loss of interest and the delay in operation outweigh any but the most solid objections.

Frustrated Fountains.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Half a century ago there existed in New York City what was known as the Sabbath Committee. This committee came naturally into collision with the Sunday liquor traffic, and I believe it was out of this that there grew an effort, supported by THE TIMES and other dailies, to have public drinking fountains. Your own editorial on May 18, of a year which is uncertain, but between 1855 and 1859, says: "We have already expressed a cordial approval of the proposition before the Common Council for the establishment of 500 Croton fountains. As a public necessity there should be no hesitation or delay in building them."

Will you allow me now to call attention to the fact that after half a century substantially nothing has been done. In other cities it is occasionally possible to find conveniently on the main street a fountain which requires the use of no drinking cup and which any one can patronize with safety. From time to time there has been an effort made to establish these inexpensive and most useful conveniences and there may be a few scattered about town. But when one considers the many thousands of human beings who are frequently thirsty and the thousands of miles of streets with drinkable water just below the surface in pipes, it would seem that the citizens of such a place were lacking in common sense not to have numerous fountains, accessible to everybody.

The Nation Speaks

Children of Liberty, awake!
In ordered ranks your places take!
Where Freedom's sons have blazed the trail,
Shall you, their leal descendants, fail
To hold in trust the ideal pure
That is their heritage secure?
Against the hour you would know how,
Learn ye to serve me—learn it now!

You, who from forms of bondage drear,
Have sought and found a refuge here—
Who reap the fruit of bitter tears
And patriot blood of former years,
Taking the most that I can give,
Learning how God meant men to live—
You promised fealty. Your vow
Was pledged to me. I need you now!

I need you now, my sons! Why wait
Till an invader storms the gate?
Your desperate resistance then
Might not avail. A host of men
Untrained, undisciplined, are less,
In time of peril and distress,
Than half that multitude would be,
Versed in the arts of soldiery.

Oh these, my children! So secure,
So confident, so over-sure,
While Europe dies, with warning writ
In blood across the face of it!
Valor, I doubt not, warms your heart—
Discretion is the better part!
Lest to the scourge your neck must bow,
Be ye prepared! I need you now!

THE END OF BABEL.

A Discussion of the Possibility of a Peaceful, One-Tongued Europe.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In a recent issue of THE TIMES there appeared an article on "German as a World Language," quoting the opinion of a German professor to that effect. The writer of it properly takes the position that the professor is greatly mistaken. Many more reasons can be given in proof of it, however, than are stated in the article in question.

To begin with, so far from spreading to other peoples and nations, German is not even the common language of Germany. In Northern and Western Germany, the region of the Baltic, where the business activity is greatest, the people do not use the classic or high German of literature and the schools. The so-called low German or Plattdeutsch is the spoken language, even in Hamburg and Bremen. Everything (even the school books) is written in the Hochdeutsch or high German, but the people commonly speak Plattdeutsch. Nothing is written in it, however; not even a newspaper. It is considered vulgar. Still the people cling to it.

The reason, no doubt, is that it is much simpler and shorter in its forms than the high German, and better suited to the needs of the people. Probably in North Germany, where the commercial activity is greatest, the people have not time to use the cumbrous high German, which is the spoken language in South Germany, far inland, where probably the people are slower and have more leisure. The fact that the people of Prussia and North Germany cling to Plattdeutsch, in spite of its lack of literature and all the efforts to displace it, is significant.

Another example is that of Holland, right on the borders of Germany. Dutch (of which Flemish is a dialect) is also an abbreviated form of German. Being spoken by but about six million people, naturally it has very little literary value. Still the people cling to it. The reason probably is that it is better suited to a commercial people, like the Dutch, than German. Its words being shorter and more easily pronounced, the people can talk more rapidly with it. The same is true of Flemish, also a Teutonic tongue, and very similar to Dutch. A large portion of the Flemings, however, speak French. The reason, no doubt, is that the Flemish speakers are too few to maintain much literature. Therefore, as France is right on the border, the people have gradually acquired French until now nearly half of Belgium is French. Perhaps it would spread over Holland, too, if Holland were on the border of France. The only obstacle would be the fact that Holland is Protestant, while France is Catholic. Belgium is solidly Catholic.

In fact, it may be said that no purely Teutonic tongue can ever be a "world language." Any one who studies one of them and a Latin tongue, like French, will be convinced of this. They are all too hard to acquire, and are too cumbersome in their forms to be used to any extent by outsiders. Then the sounds and words are too harsh. They would grate on the ears of a Frenchman or Spaniard.

On the contrary, the Latin languages are too soft to be used by the world generally. There are too many occasions where a few strong, vigorous sounding words are needed. This is too much lacking in most Latin tongues.

In fact, it is probable that the language that is generally needed is some tongue combining both Teutonic and Latin elements. That language is the English, which is the only tongue of the kind that has any literature. It is very probable that if an English-speaking community were built up on the Continent of Europe, with all the necessary schools and colleges and newspapers, the language would spread gradually over Europe. Then, with the nations of one language, there would be no more need of wars.

The Man-Eating Shark.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In a recent issue of your paper you had an interesting article on man-eating sharks. When I was serving as Consul General in Singapore, British Malayo, the French steamer La Seyne collided with the British steamer Onda and went to the bottom of the Straits of Rhio in November, 1907. The panic-stricken passengers threw themselves into the water and were instantly attacked by some man-eating sharks, and the waters were reddened by the slaughter. About ninety people lost their lives. When the news of this disaster reached the United States I received several letters asking if it were true that such a thing existed as a man-eating shark. I at once sent out fifty letters to various points, from the Philippines to the Red Sea, asking for verified incidents of the work of the man-eating shark. I received sixteen affidavits from American Consuls, Philippine officials, and one Indian official, reciting interesting incidents of the man-eating sharks attacking and wounding or killing and eating human beings. One of the most interesting statements I received was from Aden, on the Gulf of Aden, where the Tomali boys dive for coins thrown from the passenger ships. One day as a Tomali boy was creeping back into his dugout with the coin in his mouth he was used by a man-eating shark and dragged back into the waters, never to return. A passenger on the steamer happened to take a snap shot at the time of the tragedy and photographed the shark just as he was disappearing in the waters with the boy. This photograph is the only one existing, I believe, which shows the shark in actual contact with the human body.

WHO LAID THE NAVY'S KEEL.

Credit to Grover Cleveland for His Effective Foundational Work.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As a Democratic reader of your paper for many years, and believing in your desire to publish the truth, I feel privileged to correct your statement in Saturday's edition in which you credit the late General Tracy with "rebuilding the American Navy." Without, in the least disparaging the services of Mr. Tracy, I claim that the statement does grave injustice to Grover Cleveland and his Naval Secretaries, Whitney and Herbert, and, besides, is contrary to the facts, as you may verify from your own files, including your reports on Mr. Whitney's death.

Everybody should remember that the white squadron was the crowning achievement of Cleveland's administrations, and the records show that in Mr. Tracy's short term of office, less than four years, three battleships were laid, while in the two terms of President Cleveland four new battleships were laid and upward of fifty fast cruisers, destroyers, and torpedo boats were started or completed, great battleships not then being considered the most desirable type. Mr. Tracy merely continued the policy inaugurated by Cleveland. The new ships were the best built at the time, and the building of the new navy devolved upon the Democratic Party after the Republican Party in its first twenty-five years of absolute control had spent about one-half a billion dollars and left us with no navy.

History now repeats itself, as, according to a statement made a few days ago by ex-Secretary of War Stimson, (who ought to know,) the Republican Party in its past sixteen years of absolute control spent one-half as much on the army and navy as Germany spent for the same purpose, and yet his fellow party orators are wildly proclaiming to all the world our defenseless condition, and condemning President Wilson because he does not remedy it over night.

Valor on Cider and Buttermilk.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In the opinion of the writer, if the actual participants in the European war were consulted, a large majority would evince as great a "weakness for peace" as H. Ropke attributes to the American people. He should give himself no concern on the score of Americans displaying as much "ginger" in their fighting as their opponent, if a demonstration becomes necessary. We did it once, and I for one do not believe we have been deteriorating so that it would be noticed when it came to writing history.

In the early days of this country many had their warlike natures bred on nothing stronger than hard cider, and, if statistics had only been taken, perhaps their valor would appear as no greater than that of their contemporaries, who shook their heads and contented themselves with buttermilk or cinnamon, sugar, and water, (not bad, either.) I do not question the greater propensity of the drinking man to get into a brawl than the man who does not, but the odds are not with him in the betting.

Wouldn't it be nearer the point of reason to claim that three square meals a day and a clear conscience will produce the fighter that will stand his ground and leave the question of drinking alcoholic drink in the domain of ethics? RACHEL BOLSHAW.

The City Mosquito.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have noticed with interest the newspaper accounts of campaigns against the mosquito in various rural and suburban communities. As to the success of these attempts to exterminate the pest under varying conditions I am not in a position to comment, but I feel sure that if the proper department attacks the situation in New York City with energy and method this pest of the air, which is now making a large proportion of the best residential sections of the city unbearable from dusk until daybreak, can be dealt with in summary fashion. While we are always inclined to discuss the mosquito with more or less levity, I think the time has now arrived when the city authorities should take this matter earnestly in hand.

The Preference for Dogs.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In answer to "Perplexed," who cannot account for the assertion by M. C. Tener, in a previous letter, that the author of "A [not 'The'] Dog of Flanders" was a woman-hater, I would say that Louise de la Ramee, (Ouida,) the author, was absolutely devoted to dogs, and remarked once, "The more I see of men, the better I like dogs." Whether she included women in her stricture, as being of the genus homo, I am unable to say; hardly think she did, although she might be severe on any one who had not the faithful, noble qualities of her four-footed friends.

Up to a Certain Point.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

May an obscure suffragist protest in your columns against the stand of the extreme peace advocates among the woman's rights party as well as against the idea that the whole of that party is of the same mind? Most suffragists are probably peace advocates. Up to a certain point, that is, they desire to have the conditions which produce war done away with, but thousands and thousands must feel that, since all efforts have failed to avert this war, there is nothing for it but to fight it out to the finish.

AS AN ENGLISH MYSTIC SEES THE WAR.

Through a Veil Show Good and Evil, Like Two Enormous Spirits, Contending For the Mastery of Mankind on Earth.

Letter from a Distinguished Physician with the Expeditionary Forces in France.

Hotel Champlain, Aug. 10, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Some months ago the writer sent to a distinguished member of the British expeditionary force in France a copy of President Eliot's essays upon the war. The answer, which sets forth with such force the true essence of the cause for which France and England and Russia and their allies are fighting today, seems to him so fine that it deserves to be given to a larger public. It expresses in language of rare beauty the thoughts of many who appreciate the real significance of that for which this country has stood from the day of its birth; who know too well how utterly foreign, how fundamentally opposed are the principles for which Prussia is contending today, to those ideals and aspirations which are dearer to us than life itself.

W. S. THAYER.

The Letter.

* * * May 9, 1915.

My Dear Thayer: Thank you very much for sending me Eliot's book. It breathes a fine spirit, and takes the right view ("orthodoxy is my doxy, heterodoxy is the other man's doxy") of the course to be pursued. I think him hopelessly unworldly in projecting an international control under any conditions that we can yet foresee. Indeed, the present war is in a sense an attempt at it. Our side is fighting that treaties may be kept, and arbitration (Serbia) substituted for force. We are trying, like the police, to keep the peace. The only possible chance is that other nations, more than at present, should join in doing so.

You cannot prevent a nation becoming strong, nor will you ever get other nations to make war upon it for building too many dreadnoughts or enlisting too many battalions. Yet war is the only "sanction." You can only stop breaches of agreement by punishing them. You cannot then have any other police than the battalions and ships of other nations. At the same time, war being what it is, it is hopeless to expect that any nation will engage in it who does not fear great loss or hope great gain. They will always be swayed by the influences which are now swaying Italy, Greece, Bulgaria, and Rumania. No desire of justice would lead those countries to join us. I doubt if it would justify their rulers in declaring war.

An international police, therefore, will not in any measurable distance of time be anything else than it now is, the nations in arms; and the cry is that of an unworldly man who thinks that the world can save itself trouble by an agreement. The world could save itself trouble, but it is obvious that not much help can be obtained from agreements.

I am, however, surprised to find a very charming compatriot of yours speak hopefully of Eliot's idea. He dined with me two nights ago, and we discussed it.

I will tell you another way in which Eliot does not satisfy me. I, skeptic though I am, am, like every Englishman, a mystic. I see in this war almost literally a fight between God and the devil. All is at stake that we think highest and noblest. If you ask yourself what is highest and noblest, what is the real meaning of progress and civilization, you will give up all material things as unimportant. You will find that what we call intellectual growth is only a summation of items, not a real advance of the individual intelligence, and that the things that matter are moral. I think they are the ideals of justice, freedom, and pity, and I am not sure that they cannot all be resolved into the latter. Christ taught it, but it was not new even then. I think it has been taught more forcibly by the masses of the poor and oppressed, who have taught it by deed rather than by word, and have compelled respect by hard fighting. But without religion I am certain it would not have had the vogue it has.

It is easy to see its weakness. We English are a set of sentimentalists, and have lost in our worship of pity much of the sternness that leads to health. The sense of this extravagance has led short-sighted Germans, like young men in revolt against the ideals of their elders, to declare all pity mere idleness. Pity, they say, is a decadent nation's excuse for not polishing its sword.

By our unwillingness to compel we have fostered selfishness. We have said the man is the greatest. Do you remember your Aristotle? He must have free play. He must grow as he pleases. The State will grow with him, and since we know less about the State than about the man we must legislate for the man, and so the State will come by its gain.

The German does the opposite, and has a noble ideal of his own, but a narrow mind to worship with.

Now, with all my soul I believe that the ideal of pity is the noblest thing we have and that its denial, which waves on every German flag, is the denial of all that the greatest men have striven for for centuries. I see in this war the colossal strife between the doctrine which I call good and der Geist der stets verneint. You see, I am almost borrowing the language of the Kaiser. I feel that the two enormous spirits that move this world are showing their weapons almost visibly, and that never was the garment of the living world so thin over the gods that it conceals.

I am not much elated by the thought. I have little opinion of Providence as an ally, and I am surprised at the weakness that the Kaiser shows for his pocket deity. What we have to do in my opinion we do ourselves, and our task is none the lighter that we defend the right. But I am hardened and set by the thing I believe. We feel that we are fighting for the life of England—yes, for the safety of France—yes, for the sanctity of treaties—yes, but behind these secondary and comparatively material issues, for something far deeper, far greater, for something so great and deep that if our efforts fail I pray God I may die before I see it.

The words of Elliot, interesting, true, and graceful as they are, sound not in me with the terrific ring that this war merits. I see in every skirmish the fight between heaven and hell, between the thing that I blindly worship and the thing that it despises and abhors. A tel.

WHERE RUMANIA'S HEART IS.

For the Balkan States to Stay Neutral Is to Commit Suicide.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

For the sake of truth and justice, I beg for space in the columns of your estimable daily to counteract the erroneous impression that the article appearing in last Monday's TIMES under the heading "Believes Rumania Will Stay Neutral" might convey on the uninitiated ones in Rumanian politics, as well as history.

First of all, I disclaim the assertion of your informant, Mr. Solomon Sufrin, that "The Rumanian people have served notice on their Government not to join the Allies," as he produces no facts whatsoever to substantiate his assertion. As far as I am aware, neither the foreign press nor the Rumanian one records anything of the sort.

Though it is an undeniable fact that German influence in Rumania was far reaching during the late King Charles's reign, yet the people more than once showed their resentment when any foreign influence was likely to conflict with their national aspirations. It is said that while the late King, a few weeks before his demise, was still inclined toward the central powers, because of his Hohenzollern word he gave them, the representatives of the people answered him promptly that "they know no Hohenzollern but the King of Rumania, and if he persists in his personal inclinations he might be the first victim." The division, therefore, of the Rumanian people into a "student class and a people class" is an obvious absurdity because it is non-existant. The people as a whole are in perfect harmony in the world's war issue. And if Mr. Sufrin would be less querulous about anti-Semitism, which in Rumania is more imaginary than real, and face the facts like a student of current events, he would soon find out that the real cause of Rumania remaining neutral so long is the thick-headedness, petty spitefulness, and thirst-for-revenge of Bulgaria. The Balkan nations to remain neutral in this world's war is like committing suicide.

The Rumanian people don't hate Russia; they mistrust her because of her ungratefulness for the aid Rumania gave her in the Russian-Turkish war. Russia, in this case, is not so much to be blamed as the Hohenzollern William I. and his blood-and-iron Chancellor, especially the latter, who was all-powerful in the Berlin Treaty councils. On the other hand, Austria is hated, yes, despised, by all classes because of her century-long treachery toward the Rumanian people. Austria showed her first unspeakable treachery about the close of the sixteenth century, when Michael the Brave, the foremost Rumanian ruler who united for the first time the whole of old Dacia under his sway and at the same time fought Austria's battles against the perfidious Hungarians, was shamelessly assassinated in his tent by the contemptible Austrian, General Basta.

The year 1775 is also memorable of Austria's treachery toward Rumanians. Without the slightest pretense of conquest—as she didn't fire a shot—she tore away the Bukowina, the original home of the Moldavian Princes, and annexed it to her already vast empire; and ever since she was the prime plotter for the division of the Danubian principalities.

The climax of her treachery was reached in 1867. The Hungarian revolt of 1848 and 1849 caused the House of Hapsburg some anxiety, yet the enslaved Rumanians of Transylvania fought her battles in the hope of gaining freedom; but how have they been rewarded? After she was badly worsted, both by the Italian and Prussian wars, Austria bethought herself to pacify the Hungarians by granting them a constitution and giving them a share in the government of the empire, but the enslaved Rumanians of Transylvania, who always stood by her, instead of being granted autonomy, were delivered over as a prey to the fury of the Magyars.

Again, Mr. Sufrin is decidedly misinformed when he says: "This cry, that millions of Rumanians are held in subjection in Transylvania, is far from the truth." Ever since 1867 the Rumanians more than any other nationality in Hungary are despised, maltreated, and persecuted in every conceivable way. They are treated as strangers in their own land. Their representation in Parliament is so insignificant, (not even 25 per cent. of what rightly they are entitled to,) that it is nothing short of a farce. Half of the Rumanian votes are not counted at all. It would be very ungrateful of me to take up more space on this subject, but for the sake of getting better and direct information, I would advise Mr. Sufrin to try and come in contact with Transylvanian Rumanians in this country. There are here about 75,000 of these people. Every one is sighing for the day when they shall be united with the mother country. They are banded together in about ninety societies, under one supreme executive. Every society is the proud possessor of a Rumanian tricolor banner, (no Hungarian at all,) together with a United States one, both of which they cherish dearly.

These are the sons and daughters of the Rumanian "Iredenta." No threat, menace, nor coercing will ever indnce Rumania to takes sides with the central powers. Rumania will remain neutral until the unity of the Balkan nations is an accomplished fact. The sooner that happens the better for the whole of Europe.

Mr. Woolf's Discovery.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I read the articles in your valuable paper of Aug. 6 and 7 relative to a most wonderful discovery made in Paris by the joint efforts of the Rockefeller and Lister Institutes. "This wonderful discovery" is but a repetition of a discovery and the scientific and artisan application of the discovery by A. E. Woolf, a chemist, of this city, made twenty-five years ago. It was used by me in the deodorizing and disinfecting of steerages, and as an antiseptic and germicide, during the greatest cholera impact at Quarantine, Port of New York, and in the scare of 1892. Frequently I used it in preference to the poisonous bichloride of mercury solution, which was recommended by local and Government health authorities at that time, but since largely discontinued, for obvious reasons. It was used at that time by me, as the Health Officer of the Port, of the State Quarantine Department, and it has since been used by me in private practice as a deodorant, antiseptic, and germicide with great satisfaction. It has been used throughout the country and in the cleaning up of Havana during the American occupation, just after the Spanish-American war.

I write this, not as a boost to a most valuable product, but in order that the real discoverer, A. E. Woolf, may receive the credit due him for bringing to notice the value of the hypochlorites.

The Terrifying Bicycle.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I came to New York from a quiet Virginia town a month ago. I can now ride on the subway without stopping my ears, walk beneath the elevated without feeling the bottom drop out of my stomach, and can even think on Broadway. But when I hear an awful shriek, dying away to a grewsome moan, and rising anon to a nerve-tearing screech, and I feel the hair rise on my head, and conjure up pictures of banshees, torture chambers, murdered women, maniacs having their finger nails pulled out—and then a boy turns the corner on a bicycle, I feel that here is a chance for the City Fathers.

WEDS MISS ANDREWS IN A FLORAL BOWER

Morgan Belmont Takes as His Wife Member of Oldest Family in Newport Social Life.

SERVICE READ BY BISHOP

Bride Wears a Tulle Gown and Is Attended by Ten Maids in Orchid-Colored Satin.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 14.—Miss Margaret Andrews, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul A. Andrews of Newport and Boston, was married at 3 o'clock this afternoon to Morgan Belmont, son of August Belmont, at Rockery Hall, the home of her parents, on Bellevue Avenue. The service was read by Bishop Thomas F. Doran of Providence, assisted by the Rev. James T. Ward, pastor of St. Mary's Church of Newport.

The occasion marked the union of members of two of the oldest families in Newport's social history, and a representative gathering of the Summer colony was present. Owing to the bride's family being in mourning, the number of guests was limited to 150.

The bridal party walked to the altar in the drawing room through an aisle formed with standards which were topped with orchid colored asters and blue hydrangeas. The same flowers were used throughout the house.

The bride, who walked with her father, was preceded by the ushers and her bridal attendants. The Lohengrin wedding march was played on the organ, supplemented by orchestra music. On the altar were two tall silver vases filled with asters and hydrangeas and the lighted candelabra.

The bride's gown was of simple design, made in bretelle of white tulle, which seemed to envelope her like a cloud. The skirt was made in flounces over an underdress of white satin with scalloped edge, with bands of rose point lace. The corsage was of tulle, the neck cut V-shaped, with elbow sleeves. The tulle veil, which had as its border of rose point lace, fell in voluminous folds, being caught at the coiffure with the lace, which was arranged well over the forehead. Her only ornament was a large brooch of diamonds, encircling a superb square-cut emerald. She carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley and white orchids.

Bridesmaids Number Ten.

There were ten bridesmaids, including the Misses Marie Tailer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Lee Tailer, who is engaged to S. Bryce Wing; Helene Fish, daughter of Hamilton Fish; Katherine W. Porter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. Wyman Porter of Tuxedo Park; Ethel Huhn, cousin of the bride and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George A. Huhn of Philadelphia; Dorothy Gordon King, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Gordon King of New York; Caroline Hulbert Schermerhorn, cousin of the bride; Brown, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Brown; Rhoda Fullam, daughter of Rear Admiral William F. Fullam, U.S.N., and Mrs. Fullam; Dorothy Watts, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Watts, and Hanna Randolph, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Phillip S. P. Randolph of Philadelphia, who are at Narragansett Pier for the Summer.

They wore frocks of orchid-colored satin, veiled in tulle of the same shade, and edged with silver, with girdles of hydrangea heads, which matched the frocks, were trimmed with garlands of French flowers. Each carried a bouquet of purple orchids, tied with long streamers of orchid-colored ribbon.

Raymond Belmont was his brother's best man. The ushers, most of whom were the bridegroom's classmates at Harvard University, included August Belmont, Jr., another brother; William H. Chatfield of Cincinnati, Charles P. Curtis, Jr., Addison Phillips, George L. Aspinwall of Boston; Lewis Stuyvesant Chanler, Jr., C. Oliver Iselin, Jr., Edwin D. Morgan, Jr., and H. Cary Morgan, all of New York, and Samuel C. Hopkins of Catskill, N. Y.

A reception followed the ceremony. The bride's mother wore a gown of pale gray, with flounces of lace, with a corsage bouquet of orchids and pearls. Mrs. August Belmont was in pale blue. The bride's table was placed in the library, the table being decorated with gardenias and lilies of the valley.

Mr. Belmont and his bride left about 5 o'clock in their motor car on their honeymoon trip. They will occupy for a time one of Mr. Belmont's houses at Hempstead, L. I. The bride's going-away frock was dark blue Georgette crêpe with a hat to match.

Bride a Social Favorite.

The bride has been a social favorite in New York and Newport since her coming-out about three years ago. She is devoted to outdoor life, and has appeared in many amateur entertainments and tableaus for charity.

Mr. Belmont was graduated from Harvard University in June, 1914, and is one of the best known polo players among the younger players at Newport and on Long Island. He returned last Spring to Europe, where he had been for six months hunting big game.

Among those at the wedding were Mr. and Mrs. August Belmont, Mr. and Mrs. Perry Belmont, the Russian Ambassador and Mme. Bakhmeteff, Governor and Mrs. R. Livingston Beeckman, Edward J. Berwind, Mrs. William Watts Sherman, Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence W. Dolan, Mr. and Mrs. James Laurens Van Alen, Mrs. Elisha Dyer, Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Astor, Mme. de Constantinovitch, Mr. and Mrs. Stuart Duncan, Mrs. Reginald C. Vanderbilt, Mr. and Mrs. J. Stewart Barney, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin D. Morgan, Mrs. William Grosvenor, Mr. and Mrs. Dudley Davis, Mr. and Mrs. Scott Cameron, Mr. and Mrs. Prescott Lawrence of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Clark of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Scott Andrews, Mrs. George A. Huhn, Mrs. J. Gordon Douglas, Mr. and Mrs. Fitz Eugene Dixon, Mr. and Mrs. J. Francis A. Clark, Mrs. William F. Fullam, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick E. Pellinghuysen, Mr. and Mrs. John Fell, Miss Gerry, Miss Mimi Scott and Mr. and Mrs. John Russell Pope.

Also Mr. and Mrs. George Gordon King, Mrs. Le Roy King, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Legare, Dr. and Mrs. John J. Mason, Mr. and Mrs. E. Hayward Perry, Mr. and Mrs. William de Forest Manice, Mrs. Roderick Terry, Mr. and Mrs. Bradford Norman, Captain Rodgers, Miss Tiffany, Colonel and Mrs. Charles L. P. Robinson, Mr. and Mrs. John Sanford, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Sedgwick, the Rev. and Mrs. Herbert Shipman, Mr. and Mrs. Edson Bradley, Mrs. J. Lee Tailer, Mr. and Mrs. Leonard M. Thomas, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph S. Stevens, Senator and Mrs. George Peabody Wetmore, Mr. and Mrs. Egerton L. Winthrop, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Lorillard Spencer, Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Derby, Mr. and Mrs. Eric Winston, Mrs. August Belmont, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. George Wagstaff and Mrs. Charles P. Curtis, Jr., of Boston.

N. B. Ward Weds Miss Wilson.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., Aug. 14.—Miss Ruth Averill Wilson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Marcelon S. Wilson of 229 North Mountain Avenue, and Norman Brewer Ward, son of Mr. and Mrs. Barton B. Ward of 13 Gates Avenue, were married this afternoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus B. Walser, 183 Lorraine Avenue, by the Rev. R. G. Davey of Lake Mahopac, N. Y.; formerly pastor of the Christian Union Congregational Church of Montclair. Mr. Ward is a graduate of Columbia University and is a mining engineer in New York.

Miss Ruth Taussig Engaged.

Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Ruth Taussig of 777 West End Avenue and Julius Lichtenstein, son of Bernhard Lichtenstein, and a brother-in-law of Commissioner Isadore M. Levy of the Board of Education. Miss Taussig is the daughter of Mrs. Emil Taussig, whose husband was lost in the Titanic disaster.

Among her guests were Miss Katharine Birney of Washington, Mrs. Henry Foster of Birmingham, Ala.; Miss Edith Lester and Miss Elizabeth Swan and Miss Katharine Schermerhorn of New York, King Collins, Harold Babcock, Ralph Cross, Lincoln Vaughn, Wheaton Vaughn and Alan Blanding.

At a birthday dinner given for Miss Madge Bannigan of Providence, at the Casino tonight, the guests included Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Hanley, Mr. and Mrs. William C. Hunnewell of Providence, Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Hughes of Philadelphia, Mr. and Mrs. John E. Daniell and Mr. and Mrs. I. W. Prickett of New York, and Thomas A. O'Gorman of Providence.

Mrs. William B. McElroy, who has returned recently from a motor trip through New England, gave a dinner for a party of ten tonight at the Casino. Others who entertained at dinner tonight were Dr. A. F. Hopkins, and Mrs. Hopkins of Washington, D. C.; Frederick Gibson and David Stevenson, of New York, who gave a dinner for Mrs. William G. Lee of Baltimore.

NEWPORT ACTIVITIES.

Birthday Dinner Given in Honor of Henry Clews's Anniversary.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 14.—Mr. and Mrs. James Laurens Van Alen were the principal entertainers tonight, giving a dinner of fifty covers at Wakehurst. These guests were joined later by many others coming from other dinner parties, including those given by Mr. and Mrs. Pembroke Jones, Mr. and Mrs. Forsyth Wickes, Mrs. Hamilton McK. Twombly, and Dr. and Mrs. Henry Barton Jacobs.

The largest luncheon parties today were those by Governor and Mrs. R. Livingston Beeckman and Mrs. Fletcher Ryer.

Mrs. Edmund Willets and Samuel Willets of Westbury and W. S. Hoyt of New York are at Hill Top Inn.

William A. Hazard of New York is here on board the yacht Beluga.

Philip O. Mills of New York is passing the week-end as guest of Preston Gibson, leaving Sunday for Canada at Pittsburg.

Richard Stevens and children have joined Mrs. Stevens and Miss Elsie Stevens at the Muenchinger King.

Mrs. E. S. J. McVickar of New York is visiting Mrs. Oliver Perrin.

Hearty congratulations on his birthday anniversary today at his residence near Bailey's Beach with Mrs. Clews, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert E. Parsons, his son-in-law and daughter, and five grandchildren, Masters John E. Parsons, Herbert Parsons, Jr., McElvaine Parsons, and Henry Clews, 3d, and Miss Elsie Parsons. Mrs. Clews gave a luncheon in honor of the double occasion, Mr. Clews's anniversary and that of their grandson, Master John E. Parsons, Jr., who was 12 years old today.

This evening Mr. and Mrs. Clews were among the dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. Pembroke Jones.

CHAS. MAPES LOSES HIS WAY

Playwright's, Aged Father Knocks at Wrong Door, Seeking His Home.

Charles Mapes, father of Victor Mapes, the playwright, one of the collaborators of "The Boomerang" current in the Belasco Theatre, was found last evening knocking on the door of the house at 60 West Fortieth Street and demanding admission, saying he lived there. Sergeant Rafsy took him to the Thirtieth Street Police Station, where it was decided that he was suffering from loss of memory.

The Mapes home at 140 West Fifty-seventh Street was notified, and Miss Mary Harten, Mrs. Mapes's housekeeper, took him home. Miss Harten explained that Mr. Mapes, who is 71 years old, had been at the University Club in the afternoon, and upon leaving the club, which is at Fifth Avenue and Fifty-fourth Street, had become confused and walked south instead of north.

MISS GERHARDT WEDS.

Army Major's Daughter Bride of Lieutenant J. H. Stutesman.

Major Charles Gerhardt, Tenth Infantry, U. S. A., and Mrs. Gerhardt announce the marriage, on Aug. 12, in St. Thomas's Church, of their daughter Miss Virginia Gerhardt and Lieutenant John Hale Stutesman, Twenty-third Infantry, U. S. A. Mrs. Gerhardt and her daughter arrived in New York from Panama a few days ago, and Lieutenant Stutesman arrived about the same time from the West. None but near relatives was present.

Major Gerhardt is stationed in Panama. Lieutenant Stutesman and his bride have gone to Fort Leavenworth, where he is attending the officers' school.

OUTING FOR FILM PEOPLE.

Players and Others to Hold Festivities Next Saturday.

The movie folks are going to have a big outing at the Brighton Beach race track next Saturday. The affair will be under the auspices of the New York Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and it is expected that most of the stars who flicker on the films throughout the world and who happen to be in New York just now will be on hand.

The festivities will begin at 10 o'clock and will reach their height at 1:30, when there will be a parade, led by Mary Pickford, Lottie Briscoe, Mary Fuller, Lillian Walker, Anita Stewart, and Beverly Bayne. Before that there will be swimming, canoe, automobile, and all the regulation track races for both men and women. A shore dinner and dancing contest will end the outing.

Not only will scores of players take part, but every branch of the picture business will be represented, a general holiday having been declared for the day.

Ban on Film Play Lifted.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 14.—By an order made tonight by Chancellor Walker, City Commissioner William H. Bartlett, Director of Public Safety of Atlantic City, N. J., and other officials of that resort are restrained from interfering with the motion picture drama "The Birth of a Nation," being exhibited at the New Nixon Theatre. A rule to show cause why an injunction should not issue prohibiting the Atlantic City authorities from interfering with the production has been allowed. It is returnable Aug. 24. Mr. Bartlett had given notice that on and after Aug. 16 the exhibition would be prohibited.

Storm Holds Ships at Havana.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

HAVANA, Aug. 14.—Weather conditions are still so bad that many steamers do not dare to leave port. The steamship Miami, carrying U. S. mail, and several other steamers have been compelled to return to port. The American steamer Calamares, which sailed, despite the warning of the Captain of the port, who refused to give her clearance, sent a wireless message late this afternoon that she was breasting the storm successfully.

GOTTHEIL ATTACKS MELTZER'S SOCIETY

Rabbi Sees in Physician's Medical Brotherhood a German Propagandist Scheme.

DECLARES FOR THE ALLIES

Head of New Body Defends Its Mission, Asserting Surgeons Treat Foes as Well as Friends.

Dr. S. J. Meltzer of the Rockefeller Institute yesterday made public a letter from Dr. William Samuel Gottheil attacking the Medical Brotherhood, of which Dr. Meltzer is President and which has been formed for the purpose of raising the standards of international morality after the war. In his letter Dr. Gottheil said:

"The rejoicing of the German medical men here over the slaughter of Americans on the Lusitania, the medical names appended to the misleading and untrue pronouncement of the '92,' and the general attitude of the German profession both here and abroad lead me to believe that your proposed Medical Brotherhood is simply another scheme of propaganda similar to the many others with which we have been favored. It is additional evidence, to my mind, that the German doctors and their half-American colleagues here are as much deluded as the rest of the German nation.

"Believing as I do that the time for peace can only come when Prussian militarism is finally crushed, that it is America's duty, and will ultimately become her necessity, to take part in some way in this world task, you will see that I cannot join any such society as you propose.

"What little I can do is naturally devoted to the service of the Allies."

In reply, Dr. Meltzer said it was at the urgent request of scientific men, non-medical, that the brotherhood was formed by medical men who are giving in the war an example of the highest humanitarian ethics in showing as much care to foe as to friend. He said that President Eliot of Harvard and Andrew D. White had heartily commended the formation of the Medical Brotherhood.

"It should be expressly understood," he said, "that it is not the object of the proposed brotherhood to influence the feelings and views in any way regarding the problems involved in the present war. It is desired merely to bring to the full consciousness of the members of the medical profession the exceptional moral position which all civilized nations, even while at war, permit and expect medical men to occupy, as least so long as they remain in the medical profession and act in that capacity. After the close of the present war the brotherhood could, without doubt, facilitate the reunion of members of the medical profession of all the nations which are now at war and increase good feeling among them.

"The striking feature of this war is the great destruction of human life, which owes its success to the employment of scientific results in carrying on the war. All sciences which may contain some practical element are contributing in some way or other to the wholesale destruction of life. And not only the scientific results, but the scientists themselves, are active at the front in laboratories and provised in large automobiles to search for new inventions and discoveries to use in the war.

"But there is one inspiring exception to this sorrowful rule. It is the utilization of the medical sciences and the behavior of medical men in the wars. None of the numerous important discoveries made in the medical sciences was ever used for the destruction of life or harming the enemy in modern civilized warfare. Any discovery or invention in the practice of medicine, made in one of the warring countries, is freely given to the medical fraternity of a hostile country, unless it involves a business relation over which medical men have no power. It is illuminating to read a review in an English medical journal of medical reports made at a German medical meeting held on a battlefield.

"On the battlefield, on the firing line, perhaps in the midst of a hail of bullets and shrapnel, physicians and surgeons pick up wounded soldiers without regard to nationality and treat friend and foe alike. It is practically of no moment to the sick and wounded soldier to which of the hospitals established by belligerent nations he will be taken for treatment. The physician, as a physician, knows no difference between races and nations, between friend and foe.

"Here are representatives of humanity as a whole; here is a most encouraging example of an elevated international morality. In the worn of history the medical man was also the treasurer of philosophy and morals. Could he not become again the bearer of the flag of morals, especially of international morals? In the furious struggle that is going on at present among the civilized nations international morality has lost its friends; religion, sciences, and the brotherhood of mankind proclaimed by followers of socialism failed it; medicine alone did not desert it. All medical men of various shades and groupings ought to unite for this time being right to establish a Medical Brotherhood for the purpose of upholding and accelerating the progress of international morality.

"The initiative ought to be taken by a large neutral country, but we may appeal to our neutral brethren in other neutral countries to join our crusade. However, we must not approach our medical confrères in the belligerent nations as long as the war lasts, lest it may be interpreted as an attempt to weaken their patriotism and their enthusiasm for the cause of their particular countries, of which they are an integral part."

Bridge Party for Synagogues.

The Sisterhood of the Spanish and Portuguese Synagogues of New York will give a bridge tournament on Thursday afternoon at the Deal Casino, Deal Beach, N. J. Among the patronesses are Mrs. Julius Beer, Mrs. Abram I. Elkus, Mrs. Albert J. Elias, Mrs. Murry Guggenheim, Mrs. Isaac Gimbel, Mrs. Albert Hendricks, Mrs. Alfred Hess, Mrs. Julius Keyser, Mrs. L. Napoleon Levy, Mrs. N. Taylor Phillips, Mrs. Isidor Saks, Mrs. Jacob Wertheim, Mrs. Julius R. Wolff, and Mrs. Isidor Wormser.

Lectures for Housewives' League.

A series of lectures, with demonstrations, on cooking will be held the coming week at the National Housewives' League, 25 West Forty-fifth Street. They will be held at 2:30 P. M., except Saturday's, which will be at 10:30 o'clock in the morning for the Junior League. Mrs. Nellie Snyder of the State School of Agriculture at Farmingdale, L. I., will demonstrate on Tuesday the newest and best methods of canning. On Friday Miss Edith Deshler will recount her experiences in the inspection of ice cream factories.

The Wertheimer-Ellias Wedding.

The wedding of Miss Marian G. Ellias, daughter of Mrs. Simon Ellias of 410 West 130th Street, and Leonard Wertheimer of Birmingham, Ala., is to take place on Wednesday at H. B. Guggenheim's, 315 Lexington Avenue. Miss Helen Ellias will be her sister's maid of honor. The couple will live in Birmingham.

A Vacation for You and "Tenement Tommy"

We know many puny children down in Allen, Cherry, and other crowded streets who are starving for fresh air. They're like plants kept in a cellar all Winter.

Three dollars will pay for a week's seashore vacation for one of them.

Won't you give at least one the same health-restoring opportunity you are going to have this Summer?

Multiply the number of days you expect to be away by forty-three cents, send us the amount and we will keep at least one of these little victims of poverty at Sea Breeze while you are away.

HONOR EARLY SUFFRAGIST.

Will Celebrate Centenary of Elizabeth Cady Stanton's Birth.

Special to The New York Times.

JOHNSTOWN, N. Y., Aug. 14.—This city is to pay tribute to the memory of Elizabeth Cady Stanton, its noted daughter, by celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of her birth in October.

Another and more important motive is behind the centenary anniversary, and that is the part this jubilee will play in the campaign being waged by the Empire State Campaign Committee to further the cause of "Votes for Women." Mrs. Harriot Stanton Blatch, a daughter of Elizabeth Cady Stanton, has already visited this city to make preliminary arrangements for the celebration, and Mrs. Margaret Stanton Lawrence, another daughter, is expected to arrive here soon to take charge of the ceremonies in honor of her mother.

Among the speakers to be present will be Dr. John Elliott of New York, Senator Edgar T. Brackett of Saratoga, and Mrs. Blatch.

Elizabeth Cady Stanton called the first Women's Rights Convention at Seneca Falls, N. Y., in 1848. She addressed the Legislature of New York State on the rights of married women in 1854 and in advocacy of divorce because of drunkenness in 1860. She was a candidate for Congress in 1868.

APPEAL TO NOTED WOMEN.

Dressmakers Start Crusade to Make Employers Raise Pay.

Young women belonging to Ladies' Tailors and Dressmakers' Union, No. 38, who are employed for the most part by Fifth Avenue firms, sent out appeals yesterday to Mrs. Phoebe A. Hearst, Mrs. William B. Wilson, Miss Anne Morgan, Mrs. John Jay Mason, Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, and other prominent women asking them to buy clothes only from makers who are paying their girl employes a living wage.

The union leaders say that girls employed in making gowns which sell for hundreds of dollars receive an average of $5 a week. A campaign is now being started to organize all the women workers in the industry before the agreement between Local No. 38 with the employers expires on Sept. 19, when demands for wage increases will be made and the question of a strike will be considered.

Some of the young women at a meeting yesterday urged that representatives of the union be sent to Newport, Atlantic City, and other Summer resorts to try to enlist the support of wealthy women. Benjamin Schlesinger, President of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, will return to this city tomorrow and take charge of the strike plans.

MASK BALL AT JEFFERSON.

Prize Offered by Mrs. J. Cabot Morse for Best Costume.

Special to The New York Times.

JEFFERSON, N. H., Aug. 14.—The bal masque at the Waumbek tonight comprised a striking combination of new steps and old costumes. Many guests motored over from Mount Washington, Profile, Maplewood, and Mountain View. Mrs. J. Cabot Morse wore a Salome costume, Mrs. Renwick Dimond was garbed in Turkish dress, and Renwick Dimond appeared as a Mexican.

Among the other guests were Mrs. Clarke Runyon, in a Turkish Harem costume; Miss Margaret Kemp as a Spanish girl; the Misses Ide Beadle, and Mrs. E. E. Smathers of New York, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Lippincott, and Mark Willing.

The prize for the best costume was offered by Mrs. J. Cabot Morse, and the judges were General McCook, Mr. Dollier, Mr. Dimond, Mr. Staats, and Mr. Soule.

Among the arrivals this week at the Waumbek are Mrs. Grafton D. Dorsey of New York, Mr. and Mrs. William Seaman, and Mr. and Mrs. E. Bass of New York, Mr. and Mrs. Frelinghuysen of Newark, N. J., and family, Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Smathers, New York, and daughter, and Caruthers Ewing.

JOHN W. HARPER, PUBLISHER, IS DEAD

Was Last Survivor of a Firm Long Famous as a Producer of Books and Magazines.

BECAME ITS HEAD IN 1897

Brought Forward Many Authors and Artists and Did Much to Develop American Literature.

BIDDEFORD, Maine, Aug. 14.—John Wesley Harper of New York, last survivor of Harper & Brothers, publishers, died today at Biddeford Pool. He was 84 years old.

The death of Mr. Harper marks the passing of the last of those who made Harper & Brothers such a famous institution that the late J. Pierpont Morgan wrote at the time the concern was in financial difficulties in 1899: "The downfall of the house of Harper & Brothers would be a national calamity."

Forever connected with the old house are the names of many famous authors and artists of the past and present, among whom were Henry J. Raymond of The New York Times, George Ripley, Lewis Gaylord Clark, Charles Dudley Warner, William Dean Howells, Henry M. Alden, Edwin Abbey, Howard Pyle, and A. B. Frost.

John Wesley Harper, who became President of the firm in 1897, was a son of John Harper, who with his brother, James Harper, founded Harper & Brothers in 1817. He was born in this city and was one of four brothers. The others were James, Joseph, and Fletcher Harper, the last of whom died in 1877. After being prepared at the Anthon Grammar School, Mr. Harper entered Columbia College, from which he was graduated in 1852. He made a distinguished record at college and delivered the valedictory on commencement day. At first he elected to study medicine and went abroad. After being in Europe for several years, he returned to this city and entered the employment of the publishing house, becoming a member of the firm in 1869. Under his direction the scope of the firm's business became so broad that when he became its President it was said to be the greatest in the world.

The history of Harper & Brothers is the history of the Harper family. Until 1833 all the publications issued by the firm bore the imprint of J. and J. Harper." Then the name Harper & Brothers was adopted. In 1850, the firm started in the magazine field, then in its infancy, with Harper's New Monthly Magazine. This was followed by Harper's Weekly in 1857, and then came Harper's Bazaar and the Round Table, which was discontinued in the late nineties.

The old Harper building, which was erected after the firm had been burned out in 1853, fronted on Pearl Street, under the shadow of the Brooklyn Bridge, and stood with the statue of Benjamin Franklin in front and ran back to Gold Street. This was said to have been the first steel structure building in this country and was an object of interest for many years, in fact, until the skyscraper period began.

In those days the building was considered one of the sights of the city, and visitors were often shown through it. The members of the art department, many of whom became famous artists, objected to being viewed and regarded the sightseeing tours through the building as a nuisance. Pyle, Frost, Abbey, and Thulstrup were among the most distinguished of this group, and it is related that the moment visitors were heard approaching they would get on their hands and knees on the floor and make the roars, bleats, and other noises usually associated with the inmates of a zoo. The visitors thought the artists of Harper's were lunatics, and the sightseeing visits were soon discontinued. The late Charles Parsons was in charge of the artists' rooms in those days. It was he who gave the late John W. Alexander a job as office boy in the art department. Mr. Alexander went to Paris, studied art, and became one of the most famous portrait painters in the world.

After the failure of Harper & Brothers Mr. Harper retired from the publishing business. He lived at his home, 45 East Eighty-second Street, and was seen now and then at the University and Century Clubs, of which he was a member. Mr. Harper is survived by his widow, who was Miss Eleanor E. Brown, and by two sons.

Edward Hett.

Edward Hett, inventor of the multi-color printing press, died yesterday at his home in Cedar Grove, New Dorp, S. I., in his forty-ninth year. He was born in Chicago and came to this city when a boy. Mr. Hett invented the press eighteen years ago and later sold it for several hundred thousand dollars. He then built the New Dorp Beach Hotel, which was destroyed by fire twelve years ago, and with it were lost the patents for several other inventions. Since then he has owned a number of bungalows at the beach. His widow and four children survive him.

The Rev. J. J. F. Donnelan.

ERIE, Pa., Aug. 14.—The Rev. John J. F. Donnelan, rector of St. Peter's Cathedral and Chancellor of the Catholic Diocese of Erie, died late this afternoon at the home of his sister in Jersey City, according to a telegram received here tonight. Father Donnelan was 43 years old.

General Trepoff's Widow Dead.

Mme. Sophie Serguielvna Trepoff, widow of Major General Dimitri Fedorvitch Trepoff, who was dictator of Russia during the revolutionary period after the Japanese War, died recently at her home in Tzarskoe Selo, near Petrograd, in her fifty-third year, according to word received in this city yesterday. She was related either by marriage or blood with many prominent families in Russia. Mme. Trepoff is survived by four daughters, Mme. Martinoff, Mme. Hall, Mlle. Mary Trepoff, and Mlle. Vera Trepoff.

"Luna's Broadway Echo" Opens.

The first performance of "Luna's Broadway Echo," a musical show, took place last night in the Luna Summer House, a theatre remodeled from the Castles' Summer House at Luna Park, Coney Island.

PROF. F. W. PUTNAM DEAD.

Honorary Curator of Peabody Museum Was Noted Anthropologist.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 14.—Professor Frederick Ward Putnam, honorary curator of the Peabody Museum at Harvard, and a noted anthropologist and zoologist, died today. He was 76 years old, and had edited all of the publications of the Peabody Museum since 1873.

Professor Putnam was one of the founders of the American Naturalist, a member of the Legion of Honor, and from 1894 until 1903 was curator of anthropology of the American Museum of Natural History in New York.

He was born in Salem, Mass., and was graduated from Harvard University in 1862. He first became Curator of Ornithology at the Essex Institute in 1858 and continued his association with that institution until 1884. From 1867 until 1879 he was a Vice-President of the East India Marine Society. In 1869 he joined the Peabody Academy of Sciences as a Director and retained this office until 1875.

Professor Putnam went to Harvard University in 1886 and was active in the work of the Peabody Museum until 1910, when he became Professor-Emeritus.

Professor Putnam received many honors for his research work, among which were the Prezeval gold medal for Archaeological Research. He was a member of the National Academy of Sciences, a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, a member of the American Philosophical Society, the Massachusetts Historical Society, the American Antiquarian Society, the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia, the Numismatic and Antiquarian Society of Philadelphia, the American Institute of Architects, and the Boston Society of Natural History, of which he was Vice President from 1899 until 1907, and President from 1888 until 1889. He was also a member of many foreign scientific societies.

He was a member of the Harvard Chapter of the Phi Beta Kappa Fraternity and the California Chapter of Sigma Xi. In addition he belonged to the Harvard and Century Clubs of New York, the Colonial Club at Cambridge, and the Faculty Club of the University of California.

WILLIAM R. HUNTER DEAD.

Prominent Newport Man Was President of Clambake Club.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 14.—William Robinson Hunter, president of the Newport Clambake Club, the Outer Fountain Fishing Club, and a member of the Governing Committee of the Reading Room, died this morning at his home, "Belair," from hardening of the arteries, in his fifty-third year.

Mr. Hunter was one of the noted figures of the Summer colony here and was a son of the late Charles G. Hunter and Mrs. Elizabeth Hunter, who were among the pioneers in Newport. He was educated at Fay's School here and for many years was a member of the real estate firm of Debiers, Hunter & Eldridge. After retiring from the firm he organized the Citizens' Association of Middletown and was a member of its Town Council for three terms. At that time he owned a farm near that town, which he later sold to M. M. Van Buren of New York, then returning to this city to live.

Mr. Hunter is survived by his widow, who was Miss Edith Norman, and by a brother, Charles Hunter, a half-brother, John J. Taylor of Stamford, Conn., and three sisters, Mrs. W. Rogers Morgan, Mrs. Shafter Howard, and Miss Augusta Hunter.

BIDS FOR MACHINISTS TO WORK IN ENGLAND

British Agent Wants War Workmen Who Are Threatening to Strike Here.

FEDERAL PLANTS MENACED

Metal Trades Unions to Demand an Increase at the Navy Yards and Arsenals.

For the third time within a week a representative of the English Government went yesterday to the headquarters of the International Association of Machinists, 116 Nassau Street, and asked for American mechanics to do war work in England. The British agents are especially busy at this time in view of the possibility that strikes in the eight-hour campaign of the metal workers may make more mechanics available for work across the seas.

W. H. Johnston, President of the International Association of Machinists, said later that in the last ten weeks 10,000 American machinists had gone to England, most of them on a six-month contract at $5.50 a day with bonuses. He said there was a standing order for as many more, but they could not be obtained because of the manufacture of war munitions in the United States.

While most of the American mechanics were at work in English munitions shops and navy yards, hundreds had been put to work on English ships, some of them in the Dardanelles, Mr. Johnston said. He asserted that not a few of the American mechanics had been slain by the Germans, and that the question of pensions for their families was to be taken up with the British Government.

Labor officials announced that within a few weeks the metal trades workers in all of the United States navy yards and arsenals would demand an increase in pay varying from 15 to 25 per cent. The men in the Washington Navy Yard have asked for a 25 per cent. increase. The men in the Government shops now have the eight-hour day.

See Time for Action.

This move by the machinists is taken at a time when they believe the Government regards its military equipment as so important that it will take no chance of industrial trouble.

"I believe there will be no strike in the navy yards," said J. J. Keppler, Vice President of the machinists. "I believe our demands will be granted by the Government. That is all taken up with the Federal officials direct in Washington, and I expect quick results."

Only the heads of the Navy and Army Departments know just how seriously the country would be affected by a strike in the navy yards and armories. At fewest, two dreadnoughts would be delayed in completion and two others in outfitting, and there would be a tie-up of repair and maintenance work, all of which could not be shifted to private shops without peremptory action by the Government.

There will be a meeting here tomorrow night of representatives of the eighteen machinists' locals in the New York district to plan a campaign against the New York shops which have resisted the eight-hour demand. At the same time the Executive Board will meet in Washington to decide on what cities the campaign shall be carried to next.

The fight in New York really means a fight against the National Metal Trades Association, with the Garvin Machine Company's plant as the point of conflict. The Garvin plant has been idle two weeks because of a strike of the 200 machinists whose action forced out of work 500 other employes. An effort of the Garvin firm to get the men back on Thursday failed. The Metal Trades Association is backing the Garvin Company in its fight to beat the strike. Although Henry C. Hunter, counsel for the association, says some of the strikers have returned, this is denied by the labor leaders.

Mediators' Efforts Futile.

Colonel Michael J. Reagan, Mediator of the State Labor Department, who has been trying to effect a settlement, said yesterday that he was able to report no results.

The machinists' officials said they had information that the Garvin Company would try to start up tomorrow morning with strikebreakers. Keppler was asked what he would do in such an event.

"We will try to prevent them from going to work," he said. "However, they may get a few bootblacks and waiters, but they can't get machinists. It is foolish for the Garvin people to say they can get 700 metal workers to work eight hours under the old scale of wages, when we can't fill the demand for men to work eight hours at higher wages. Mr. Garvin is beaten. That's all there is to it."

Keppler called a meeting of the strikers at strike headquarters, 181 Varick Street, for 9 o'clock tomorrow morning, when he will urge the strikers to stand firm and assure them of victory. The strikers will begin to get benefits after tomorrow.

The machinists' officials said they would extend the fight against the Metal Trades Association this week by calling a strike at the plant of the Standard Motor Company in Jersey City, the owners of which have refused to grant the eight-hour day. There are about 500 machinists in the plant.

Word reached union headquarters yesterday that the Dobler Die Casting Company, Smith and Ninth Streets, Brooklyn, had granted the eight-hour day, to go into effect next week.

FIRST COLT WAR BONUS.

Each of 1,200 Workmen Gets $45 of Three Months' Profits.

Special to The New York Times.

HARTFORD, Conn., Aug. 14.—In their weekly pay envelopes received tonight the 1,200 employes of the Colt Patent Firearms Manufacturing Company found the first installment, covering May, June, and July, of the 12½ per cent. bonus on profits which the company offered in lieu of an eight-hour day and to stave off any unionization of the machinists or a possible strike. The men got about $45 each. The next bonus will be paid about Nov. 15. It will cover August, September, and October. The company is pledged to another bonus the first of the year.

The International Association of Machinists is against the bonus system as a substitute for the eight-hour day, because, they contend, it is transitory and will disappear with the end of the war contracts.

ADOPT THE 50-HOUR WEEK.

Bridgeport Manufacturers' Reply to Demand for Eight-Hour Day.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Aug. 14.—The adoption of the 50-hour week in all industrial plants in Bridgeport is recommended by the Bridgeport Manufacturers' Association in a statement issued today. This is understood to be a reply to the demand of the machinists' union for an eight-hour day.

The Warner Brothers Company, which employs 3,000 corset makers and other employes, announced that the 50-hour week would be in force hereafter in its factory.

I. W. W. Men Fomenting Trouble.

Special to The New York Times.

DUNELLEN, N. J., Aug. 14.—There is unrest tonight among 500 ironworkers of the Levgar Structural Steel Company. The men are not organized, but it is known that several I. W. W. men from New York have been here for several days. It is said the men want an eight-hour day, and failing to get it may strike.

Machinists at Roosevelt Strike.

Special to The New York Times.

ROOSEVELT, N. J., Aug. 14.—More than 200 machinists employed at the Wheeler Condenser and Engineering Company have struck. The machinists demand a 15 per cent. increase in wages, a working week of fifty hours and double pay for Sunday and holidays. They also want a half holiday on Saturdays.

Workman Stabbed in Strike.

The first trouble in connection with the strike at the plant of the Sloan & Chase Company, machinists, in Roseville, N. J., occurred yesterday. Frederick Reichardt of 49 Blum Street, who had refused to quit, was on his way to the plant when he was attacked by four men. He was stabbed four times in the arm.

Wilmington (Del.) Machinists Out.

WILMINGTON, Del., Aug. 14.—About 300 machinists, embracing most of the working forces of the leading machine shops of this city, went on strike today for an eight-hour working day, an increase in wages, and a closed shop.

CONVICTS TO WORK FOR ARMY

Federal Prisoners Will Make Tents and Uniforms for Troops.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—Attorney General Gregory practically has decided that the 3,000 prisoners in the three Federal penitentiaries shall be put to work making articles which can be bought by Government departments, including the army and navy. At present they are at work enlarging their living quarters, which will not be completed for a year.

Mr. Gregory is considering the problem now because he will have to send estimates to Congress this Fall in the event that it is decided to install machinery for manufacturing purposes. He saw President Wilson today, but said there still were some details to be worked out. Army tents and uniforms were mentioned as articles which might be manufactured by prisoners for direct sale to the War Department.

GRAIN EXPORTS HERE TO SET NEW RECORD

L. B. Sanderson, Steamship Agent, Predicts Unprecedented Rush in September.

CANADA TO SWELL TOTAL

Part of Her 250,000,000 Bushels to Go Out Via New York—Big Demand Abroad.

Lloyd B. Sanderson, general agent of the Pacific Steam, Royal Mail, and Wilson lines, of 26 Broadway, predicts that New York in September will ship the largest cargoes of grain in the history of the port. This is due to the fact that the Winter wheat crop will be two months late and the oats crop will be a month and a half late on account of the unprecedented fall of rain in the West.

"The Winter wheat, which is planted in the Fall and should be ready for shipment at the beginning of July, will not be here until Sept. 15," Mr. Sanderson said yesterday. "The Spring wheat will be ready at the same time, and the oats crop, due early in August, has been promised for the middle of September. All three crops are reported to be very heavy this year. The Canadian crops, which will total 250,000,000 bushels, a record mark, will be shipped partly from New York.

"The steamers which were moored in the harbor in July waiting for charter were the vessels engaged to come over for the Winter wheat, which was sent away last year at the end of June.

"The brokers had to find other freights for the steamers, which took considerable time, but they have mostly all gone away now. When the big movement starts about Sept. 15, after the harvesting, I expect the rate will be 25 cents a bushel.

"New York is now the largest port in America for package cargo, and after the Erie barge canal is opened it will be the biggest for bulk cargoes, also because the barges will be able to come right through from the big lakes. This will enable shippers to send freight from the lake ports at the same rate by way of New York as they can now by Montreal and Baltimore. The harbor here will be lined with freighters waiting for cargoes in the grain season.

"The heavy shipments in September will cause congestion on the railroads, I expect, but I do not think there will be much difficulty in getting tonnage. Ship owners prefer Atlantic charters in the grain season because they get the same rates to New York as they would to Bombay, the voyage is much shorter, and they do not have the Suez Canal charges to pay. The Indian crops are very poor this year, I hear, and Europe will have to depend chiefly on the United States and Canada for her supply of wheat and oats."

Mr. Sanderson added that all the Atlantic steamship lines had done well in freight the last twelve months, and next year promised to be equally remunerative.

FALLS FROM ELEVATED R. R.

Workman, Found with Fractured Skull, Says He Was Pushed.

Charging that he had been thrown from the elevated railroad at Ninth Avenue and Fiftieth Street yesterday afternoon, Thomas J. Taylor, an ironworker, caused the arrest of the foreman of the construction gang and two other men, alleging that they were his assailants. They deny the charge.

Taylor was found under the structure and was taken to the Polyclinic Hospital, where it was found he had a fractured skull and a broken great toe. He told Policeman Frogel that he had been assaulted and upon his charge William R. Coppage of 24 Ditmars Street, Brooklyn, Superintendent of the Terry & Tench Construction Company, and John R. Morton of 131 Fifth Street, Union Hill, N. J., and Glen Carr, 18 West 125th Street, were locked up in the West Forty-seventh Street station charged with felonious assault.

He said he had protested when a friend of his was discharged, which led to a quarrel, and he was pushed headlong from the structure.

The prisoners say Taylor became so angry over the discharge of his friend that he quit out of sympathy. When he demanded his wages, they said, he was told he would not be paid until Monday, and as he danced about in anger he fell to the street.

Macy's Autumn Display Is a Triumph for Cash

Quietly, steadily, with the tremendous, insistent pressure of its millions in cash resources, this store has gradually broken down the barrier of exclusiveness—the prohibitive price of style, of art and authenticity.

There has been no sudden revolution or change. But slowly, year by year, those who came to Macy's found more and more things within their means that had been out of reach before—the fine, the real, the artistic in dress, in ornament and things for the home.

This year the work stands almost complete. The last prejudice is yielding to the force of common-sense—the last stronghold of high prices to the influence of: CASH.

And within the walls of Macy's is the proof of this achievement—all the originality, all the beauty and all the newness this Autumn brings, at prices that show what this store is doing for the people of New York.

New Fur Coats at Savings of One-Third

Our Fur Department is now featuring two exceptional fur coat specials. (Illustrated below.) One—of Hudson Seal (Dyed Muskrat)—is made from fine, carefully selected skins. The other—of Persian Lamb—from high-lustred skins dyed in Europe. They are cut on correct flaring lines and embody all the new style features of the coming season.

We purchased the skins for these coats in the early Spring, before prices advanced, and had them made up during the dull season, when labor costs are low. That's why they come to you now at prices that we could not possibly duplicate later on for coats of similar quality.

Hudson Seal Coat
$94.75

Persian Lamb Coat
$139.00

Other models in stock at equally good savings—some plain, some with collars, cuffs and borders of contrasting fur. Lengths from 40 to 52 inches.

Correct Untrimmed Hats

Copied from the New French Shapes

OUR Millinery Department has put off the Old Season and put on the New. It is alive with the atmosphere of Autumn. The section devoted to untrimmed hats (the most comprehensive in the city) is given over almost entirely to a display of Early Fall models that are correct counterparts of the smartest Paris originations.

Among the new shapes may be noted the broad, flat canotiers sponsored by Georgette, postillon and Louis Philippe shapes, modified sailors, military tricornes, pokes and turbans. The favored colors are black, purple, navy, dark green and tete de negre.

Hats of Highest Grade Hatters' Plush—copied from the French—pressed by hand and finished equal to the best French shapes—are priced at $7.89, $9.89, $11.89.

French Velvet Shapes—beautifully made—pressed by hand—French edges—are $3.96, $5.94, $6.89.

Two Early Autumn Specials

Satin Hats, Velvet Faced $1.98

Verified price elsewhere, $3.00.

Beautiful models—finely finished. Poke, and Sailor shapes; in black, white and purple. One style illustrated.

Velvet Shapes $2.79

Rich French velvet—perfectly blocked—French edges. Tricornes, Sailors, Turbans, Pokes in purple, navy, dark green, brown and black.

Suggestions for Trimming—Our trimming department is showing: Beaded birds, tassels, and cabochons; coq feathers, Bersaglieri pompons, quills, Marquise tips, worsted flowers, and other novelties.

If all materials are purchased here we make no charge for trimming.

"The Lily"

A Shoe of Beauty

THE AIR of refinement and simplicity of this Early Autumn Shoe makes a direct appeal to every woman of taste. Grace, line and harmony of material fit it for dress occasions.

Uppers of imported kid in ivory or cadet blue—buttoned with black gaiter buttons—are twice stitched to plain foxings of soft patent leather. The Cuban heel is slightly indented in Louis style—carrying out the flowing lines of the model. Soles are welted and stitched.

For such an artistically planned and beautifully built shoe $5.94 is little.

EIGHT TENNIS BOWLS AND THEIR OWNERS

Only Two Champions Have Won More Than One of the United States Association Trophies.

With the unexpected defeat of Maurice E. McLoughlin of California and the splendid form of Karl H. Behr, the former internationalist, interest in the outcome of the National Championship which starts on the West Side Tennis Club, Forest Hills, Aug. 30, is increased, and the prospective holder of the championship bowl is more doubtful than ever.

When the National Championship was instituted by the United States National Lawn Tenis Association in 1881 a championship bowl was placed in competition, to be won three times, not necessarily in succession. This practice has been continued ever since. In the course of that time eight bowls have been competed for and seven of them have been won outright, the eighth, held by H. Norris Williams 2d of Philadelphia, being still in competition. McLoughlin has his name inscribed twice on the trophy and a victory this year will give him absolute possession.

The history of the contests for these bowls is interesting. Only two champions have succeeded in winning more than one bowl. They are Richard D. Sears, who became possessor of the first and second bowls and William A. Larned to whose skill fell the sixth and seventh bowls. The other winners of bowls were Oliver S. Campbell, Robert D. Wrenn and Malcolm D. Whitman.

As the reign of Richard D. Sears was continuous from 1881 to 1887, making him a seventime champion, no other name than his appears on the first two bowls. The men whom he beat for the championship were W. W. Glynn, (1881,) Clarence M. Clark, (1882,) James Dwight, (1883,) Howard A. Taylor, (1884,) G. M. Brinley, (1885,) R. L. Beekman, (1886,) and Henry W. Slocum, 1887.) Sears got the first victory for the third bowl in 1887, but he did not defend in 1888, having strained his shoulder, and Henry W. Slocum won the all-comers from Howard A. Taylor, and the challenge round from Sears by default. In 1889 Slocum stood out and defeated Quincy A. Shaw in the challenge round. In the following year Oliver Campbell won the all-comers, defeating W. P. Knapp in the final round. He then challenged Slocum and beat him.

The next year Campbell stood out and successfully defended against Clarence Hobart. Campbell's first win came in 1892, Fred Hovey being the challenger, he having beaten William A. Larned in the all-comers final. This victory gave Campbell final possession of the third bowl.

Robert D. Wrenn, present head of the United States National Lawn Tennis Association, then came to the fore. He won the all-comers in 1893 and took the challenge round by default from Campbell. In 1894 Wrenn defeated M. F. Goodbody in the challenge round, but slipped a cog in 1895, when Hovey came through to the challenge round by a four-set win from Larned and then beat Wrenn three straight sets. In 1896 Wrenn came back. He beat Larned in the final round of the all-comers and then tackled Hovey and won from him. This gave Wrenn possession of the fourth bowl.

When the fifth bowl was placed in competition in 1897 Wrenn won the first leg on it, following Sears's example in 1887. Wrenn's win was in the challenge round from Dr. W. V. Eaves of England, the all-comers winner. In 1898 M. D. Whitman began his series of victories. The Spanish-American War was on and Wrenn and Larned had both gone to the front with the Rough Riders, leaving the field clear for Whitman. He won the all-comers, beating Dwight F. Davis in the final round. Whitman defended successfully in 1899 and 1900, beating J. P. Paret in the former year and Larned in the latter. Larned had beaten Wrenn. This made the fifth bowl Whitman's property.

In 1901 Whitman did not defend, and Larned, after beating Beals Wright in the final round of the all-comers, became champion by default in the challenge round. This gave Larned the first leg on the fifth bowl. He defended successfully in 1902 against Reginald F. Doherty, the famous English champion, who was the challenger by virtue of a victory over Whitman. Larned missed making the sixth bowl his property in 1903, as H. L. Doherty came through the all-comers, beating W. J. Clothier in the final round. Doherty did not come from England to defend in 1904, and the winner of the all-comers, Holcomb Ward, became champion.

Another name went on the sixth bowl in 1905, when Beals Wright won the all-comers, beating Hobart in the final round and Ward in the challenge round. Larned was still striving to get his third leg on the cup, but he lost to Wright in the sixth round. In 1906 it was W. J. Clothier's turn to score. He won the all-comers, beating Karl Behr in the final round and Wright in the challenge round. Behr had beaten Larned in the second round.

Larned's opportunity came in 1907. Neither Ward, Wright, nor Frederick B. Alexander competed and Behr lost in the first round to R. H. Palmer, while Clothier was unable to defend, owing to a bad knee. Larned, therefore, came through the all-comers, beating Robert Le Roy in the final round. The sixth bowl thus became Larned's property. The seventh bowl was placed in competition in 1908, and, like the first and second bowls, bears only one name. It is that of W. A. Larned, who defended successfully in 1908, 1909, and 1910, the challengers being consecutively Wright, Clothier, and T. C. Bundy.

The present championship bowl is the eighth of these trophies. It was placed in competition in 1911 and was won that year by William A. Larned, who defeated the winner of the all-comers, Maurice E. McLoughlin. In 1912 and 1913 McLoughlin won the bowl by virtue of his victory in the all-comers. In 1913 McLoughlin and Williams were in different halves, and when they clashed the Californian won. Last year the Philadelphian was the victor in straight sets. This year the 1914 champion and challenger have played together but once when McLoughlin won three sets to one.

DODGERS HUMBLE GIANTS AGAIN — YANKEES BEAT THE ATHLETICS — ROWING — SWIMMING

PFEFFER DECIDES AGAINST GIANTS

Teuton Pitcher Refuses to Allow Many Hits, So the Dodgers Win, 5 to 1.

Although the Dodgers are within whispering distance of the National League crêpe de chine, the inhabitants of Brooklyn are not half as excited about it as you would imagine they would be. They have formed no Ebbets Marching Club or Daubert Royal Rooters. Perhaps it is so long since Brooklyn has won a pennant that they have forgotten how to get excited. Anyway, Brooklyn and excitement have never been synonymous terms.

With despised rivals like the Giants playing Brooklyn on a Saturday afternoon, there were rumors that the walls of Ebbets Field would be bulged out by the crowd. Not more than 14,000 people turned out to see the lively Dodgers again abuse the New Yorks by a score of 5 to 1. When the game began at 2:30 o'clock not more than half the seats were occupied, but before it ended the lower stand was filled.

Maybe the news has not spread around Brooklyn about the Dodgers being a game or two behind the Phillies. Something has been said about it in all the papers, and surely some of them must reach Brooklyn. 'Squire Ebbets has known for some time that the Dodgers were going to win a pennant. So it can't be because the 'Squire of Flatbush has been silent that the inhabitants have not heard about it. He'll talk any time.

The main reasons for the Brooklyn Club's success are these: The pitchers are going strong, the team has acquired a more aggressive spirit through its success, and the club is hitting the ball hard and often. A ball club doesn't need much else except a few horse shoes, and Brooklyn may get these before the season is over.

Big Jeff Pfeffer pitched the kind of ball that any club would find it hard to beat. Up to the ninth inning he gave them only three hits and in the ninth he snuffed out a rally when one run had been scored on a trio of hits. The Giants looked unusually sleepy against this kind of twirling, and there wasn't a time that they were able to take even an active part in the proceedings. They participated in a game, but could hardly be accused of playing in it. Brooklyn took care of that part of it.

Yesterday McGraw sent Charles Babbington of Brown University to right field instead of Snodgrass. Charley looks like a good ballplayer. He is a member of the Phi Beta Kappa fraternity, which gives sufficient assurance that Charley has brains, and McGraw hopes they are baseball brains. McGraw has tried members of other fraternities before, such as the Sun Dodgers and the Owls, but he never tried a Phi Beta Kappa before.

There is another thing which may have had something to do with the defeat of the Giants yesterday—the Flatbush mosquito. This insect resembles a bird, only is much stronger. It is very tame and eats off the hand, foot, ear or the handle of a door. The mosquitos infested the Giants' bench yesterday and the players had to burn sticks of Chinese punk to drive them away.

When Babbington stole second base in the game he felt the ball touch his leg and thought surely he was out. But he found out that he had been bitten by a mosquito and was safe. Perhaps the Brooklyn Club had nothing to do with it, but the mosquitos didn't seem to bother anybody on the Brooklyn bench. To the Giants, they looked like a flock of trained birds.

Stroud pitched for the Giants and in the first inning hit Hi Myers. O'Mara singled to right, and Myers ran to third. Babbington made a wild toss to third to head off the runner, so O'Mara went to second. Daubert hit a sacrifice foul fly to Burns in left field, and Myers scored. Wheat ripped a sizzling grounder, which Stroud was lucky to even knock down. O'Mara scored on this play, but when Ralph threw a mile past Brainerd at first base Wheat went to third. Cutshaw grounded to Brainerd and Wheat was exterminated between third and the plate. Cutshaw going to second in the excitement. Hummel singled to centre and Merkle made a great throw to the plate, Meyers retiring Cutshaw as he was diving home.

The Giants had a good opportunity to score in the second inning when Fletcher and Merkle, the first two men up, singled, but there was no artillery in reserve to drive them along.

The Dodgers collected two more in the seventh. Hummel singled and went along on Getz's sacrifice. McCarthy's rap was too strong for Lobert and he was safe. Pfeffer then took the whole thing in his own hands and jammed a triple past Burns in left, which sent Hummel and McCarthy home.

It was in the ninth that the Giants became a bit familiar with Pfeffer. With Doyle out of the way, Fletcher beat out a single to short and Merkle popped to Cutshaw, Fletcher going to second. Babbington singled to left and drove Fletcher home with the New Yorks' only run.

Uncle Wilbert Robinson warmed up Nap Rucker on Friday and yesterday, too, to have him ready for the Giants tomorrow.

Umpire Al Orth was taken ill during the second inning and Hank O'Day had to do the umpiring job alone. He survived. The score:

Reds Humble the Pirates.

PITTSBURGH, Penn., Aug. 14.—Cincinnati gave the Pittsburghs a setback today when they defeated them in both games of a double-header, 5 to 4 and 6 to 0. In the first contest the visitors played a great up-hill game and tied the score before reaching the ninth inning. They got the one run necessary to win in the eleventh. Toney was strong in the second game. McQuillan was relieved by Conzelman. The scores:

Cubs Fight on Bench.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 14.—St. Louis took kindly to the offerings of Pierce and Standridge, and, with the aid of five errors by the visitors, defeated Chicago, 12 to 2, today. Ames gave Chicago eight hits, but kept them well scattered. Pierce and Zimmerman started a fist fight on the bench in the sixth inning during a discussion over a fumble by Zimmerman, which let in two runs for the locals. Vaughn, who attempted the role of peacemaker, emerged with a bleeding lip, but he had stopped the fight. Score:

ATHLETICS LOSE AGAIN TO YANKEES

Donovanites Score Seven Runs in One Inning and Win, 9 to 5.

The ups and downs of Yankee baseball are wonderful to behold and impossible to understand. One day there is pennant-winning ball under Coogan's Bluff and the next the lid is torn off a bush league assortment which is offered to expectant fans. When the game was called yesterday the Donovan men showed that in twenty-four hours they had slipped from a baseball pinnacle to what should have been baseball oblivion. The only reason it didn't turn out literally to be oblivion was that the other team played worse than the Yanks. To look at the Athletics, once so great and now so lowly, would wring lamentations from any one but Connie Mack. Even as bad as the Yankees were yesterday, with all the sparkle of the day before lost to their play, they were yet able to win from the Quakers by a score that was 9 to 5.

The Donovan team was sleepy when it came on the field, and didn't wake up until the Athletics had scored enough runs in the first inning to win a game. Yankee errors burned their way into Quaker scores, and when the session was over there was a total of four runs against the Donovan men. Ray Fisher had proved himself somewhat unsteady, and even Fritz Maisel was infected with the contagion to do just the things that make for a wreck. His boisterous heave to the grand stand on Davies's hit let Kopf and Strunk amble to the plate with the first pair of scores for Connie's team. The next two came as a result of a sacrifice fly and an infield out. Fisher had allowed three hits and given a poss, so that there was every reason to believe that his exit would come speedily. The Yanks, however, came out of the trance and held their opponents quite safe during the remainder of the game. Still, if there had been any team but the bruised Athletics to oppose them, a victory would probably not have tarried with the Donovanites.

Mack tried another young pitcher, Nabors, a recent acquisition from the Newman Club of the Georgia-Alabama League. His experience with the Yanks ended in failure. The first game he pitched for Connie was against Chicago and he lost. Yesterday he was buried.

In the first inning he led off with a pass and followed it by hitting Peckinpaugh. There was a sacrifice by Maisel, and then a double was smashed to centre by Pipp that scored two runs. For the next three innings there was little to worry him, and then the Yankees began a bombardment that drove Nabors to the bench and clinched the game. Thirteen Yankees came to bat in the fifth inning, and every man on the team except Nunamaker and Fisher scored a run. Six hits were harvested, one of them a double by High, and two men were passed by Nabors and one by Fillingim, who came in after one man was out and all of the hits and runs had been made.

The detail of that inning is too woeful to be chronicled. The score:

Lots of Thrills in Boston Victory.

BOSTON, Aug. 14.—The Red Sox won a game of exciting plays and situations from Washington today, 4 runs to 3, "Babe" Ruth outpitching Walter Johnson. Boston players and the spectators were in an uproar in the third inning, when McBride, after scoring on Foster's hit, stood in the way of Catcher Thomas on a throw from Speaker to catch Moeller at the plate. The latter scored and Umpire Wallace refused to call him out. Five minutes of argument by the players and of noise from the spectators followed. Manager Carrigan was banished for protesting too vigorously. Boston went into the eighth inning one run behind, and after singles by Henriksen, a pinch hitter, Ruth, and Hooper and Hoblitzel's sacrifice fly, came out a run in the lead. Lewis made a startling catch in the seventh of a drive by Gandil, running 20 yards, and while leaping turned partly around and made a backhand catch almost on the foul line. The score:

WILLIAMS DEFEATS BEHR IN SEABRIGHT TENNIS—MISS DETROIT MOTOR BOAT RACE VICTOR

WILLIAMS BEATS BEHR FOR CUP

National Tennis Champion Retains Achelis Trophy—Four Sets Played.

SEABRIGHT, N. J., Aug. 14.—By a marvelous display of control in the rallies R. Norris Williams, 2nd, today saved his title to the famous Achelis Challenge Cup from the assault of Karl H. Behr. The defender and his challenger played even truer, more scientific tennis on the courts of the Seabright Lawn Tennis and Cricket Club—to the finale of a Williams victory at 7—5, 6—4, 3—6, 6—2,—than was seen yesterday during the sensational overthrow of Maurice E. McLoughlin.

The passing strokes of the young and energetic defender were perfectly timed. He gauged Behr's plunges for the net to a hair breadth, and except during the first few games and a brief period in the third set he was the master.

Behr played well, however, even though certainty of action was often lacking in his fiery attacks in the net position. His game was never keyed to the high pitch with which he had held the mighty McLoughlin. Yesterday's three terrific deuce sets had sapped Behr's abundant vitality, and there was no time, even when Behr made the bravest effort, that he was successful in equaling the speed, placement and pace of the buoyant youth on the opposite side of the net.

The respective point totals were 132 to 121. The thing that tells the story of the match most accurately in the stroke analysis is that Williams earned his victory despite a most unusual feature; his record shows an amazing predominance in the number of points lost by nets, outs, and service faults over those of his adversary. By these errors Williams contributed a total of 97 points to Behr's score. The challenger's total number of such errors was 80.

Once he settled into real action the passing shots from Williams's racquet sped through Behr's court like lightning. He favored the side lines whenever the challenger moved toward the net, and thus he turned the tide in his favor and overcame his other deficiencies by 21 placements and 20 passes, as compared with a paltry total of 22 from Behr's side of the net.

The thing that puzzled those unaccustomed to Williams's game was his apparently wild and erratic service. He held to his favorite theory of slashing the second ball through with all the power of the first. He ended with a total of 14 double faults. He also had his reward, however, in the form of 11 service aces, some of which saved important games for him.

Weather conditions for the match were perfect. The turf was firm, making fast bounds possible, and a grand stand of 2,500 was continually keyed to high enthusiasm. Among the spectators was Secretary Garrison, of the War Department.

Williams served first and seemed to have no control whatever when he led off. He failed to score a point, and presented the first game to Behr with two double faults. Behr was at his old tactics. He charged for the net at the beginning of every volley. The cup defender tried to send smashing shots past him, but they were aimed so badly that Behr reeled off the first four games in a row. It was in this set that Williams showed up his cuts, and most of them were in the opening games.

The defender finally found his range and proceeded to rip holes through Behr's back-hand defense. He also tricked the challenger out of position in a way that aroused the peppery temper and brought out a few snarling expletives from Behr as he found his back-hand drives failing to cross the net. Williams scored five games in a row, with Behr chasing balls all over the court.

So fiercely did Behr fling himself at the net and to meet the ball for a "kill" that in bringing off a smash in the ninth game he broke his racquet. A moment later he broke another, and he had to continue for several games with a strange racquet, until his pet racquet had been patched up.

As they neared the end of the set, Williams was continually forcing for openings. Behr's recklessness in trying to come to close range gave the champion lots chances, so that, despite a desperate rally by which Behr drove the games to deuce at 5 all, Williams easily finished a winner on his passes.

The second set found Behr grunting and pumping as he vainly tried to bring off the drives that served him so well against the Californian. Williams mixed up pace so cleverly that Behr was even in greater difficulties than he had been in the opening set. As Behr netted and drove out at the critical times his pent-up feelings found way at times, and he lifted his voice and arms against the perversity of the ball.

Williams fought to a lead of 3—2 in games in the third set only seemingly to slacken his pace as though to ascertain what his rival might accomplish. Behr did not leave him in doubt. Flashing to the net for splendidly placed volleys, he proceeded to display all the fireworks of his racquet wielding for the admiration of the crowd and the cup defender. It was four straight games with which Behr won this set. During that period he performed with swift and daring footing, made vicious overhead smashes, while Mrs. Vogel was steady and consistent. Nothing appeared to disturb Mrs. Pouch, and no shot appeared too difficult for her to get. The combination work of the winning pair was their strongest asset. They took the measure of their opponents in the first four games and played with confidence that brooked no denial. They frequently enticed Miss Well and Mrs. Vogel out of position and then sent telling shots to the undefended parts of the court. The point score and summary:

Tennis at Thousand Islands.

ALEXANDRIA BAY, N. Y., Aug. 14.—Play in the tennis tournament of the Thousand Islands Yacht Club was completed this week. In the men's singles event, which had the largest number of entrants, E. B. Rubsamen, Jr., came through a winner, defeating W. G. Willis in the final round, which was closely contested, 6—1, 8—6, 6—4, 7—5. In the men's doubles E. B. Rubsamen, Jr., paired with L. H. Vilas, defeated W. G. Willis and W. Langdon Hayden, 6—0, 6—2, 8—10, 6—1. Miss Margaret Taylor and Mrs. Rubsamen won the women's doubles, and Miss Taylor was also the victor in the women's singles, defeating Mrs. Clarence Hobart. In the mixed doubles Miss Taylor and R. McLean defeated Miss Margaret Nichols and R. L. Wilbur.

Wins Title After Twenty Years.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Aug. 14.—Russell N. Dana of Pawtucket won the Rhode Island tennis championship at the Agawam Hunt Club today, defeating B. C. Law of Princeton in a four-set match at 6—0, 1—6, 6—4, 6—2. The match was a one-sided affair, Law helping Dana to victory by his errors. The exhibition was hardly up to the form of the usual championship play. An interesting feature of the match was that Dana, the new champion, won the title in 1895, and again in 1910, and now, twenty years after his first success, he is again State champion.

Miss Stephens Michigan Champion.

DETROIT, Mich., Aug. 14.—A. H. Green, Jr., and Jerry Weber, Chicago, won the final round of men's doubles for the Michigan State tennis championship here today, defeating D. Ketcham and James Weber, also of Chicago, 6—3, 2—6, 7—5, 6—4, 8—4. Miss Juda Stephens of Toledo, defeated Miss Elizabeth Metcalf of Detroit, in the final round of the women's singles championship, 6—1, 4—6 6—0.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 14.—The sloop Westward, of the Corinthian Yacht Club of San Francisco, today won the first race in the competition for the gold trophy cup offered by King George V., of Great Britain, for 28-foot sloops in the Panama-Pacific Exposition regatta. The course was fourteen miles around the bay and the time 1:58:05. The cup goes to the sloop winning two races. There were five starters today, all from San Francisco Bay.

3 WESTERN TENNIS CHAMPIONS BEATEN

Griffin and Johnston Win in Doubles—Church Lands Title in Singles.

CHICAGO, Aug. 14.—Clarence Griffin and William M. Johnston of San Francisco today won the right to challenge Thomas C. Bundy and Maurice McLoughlin of the same city for the national doubles tennis championship. They easily defeated Walter T. Hayes and Ralph H. Burdick of Chicago, the Western champions, in straight sets, 6—2, 6—3, 6—2. The matches were played on the courts of the Onwentsia Club at Lake Forest. George M. Church of Princeton University won the Western singles championship from Alex. Squair of Chicago on adjoining courts by the scores of 7—5, 6—3, 3—6, 6—2.

The Chicagoans were extremely wild at the opening of the doubles match and did not score a placed point until three games had been played. The Californians resorted to a driving game, playing at Hayes for the most part, and the older of the Chicago partners could not handle their terrific shots.

Burdick played brilliantly at the net, but the inability of his partner to handle the visitors' strokes forced him back and on defense.

In the second set the Californians continued their driving tactics, and although Hayes and Burdick gained the lead at the start, Johnston and Griffin easily overcame this. The Chicago team, especially Hayes, was badly off form and was no match for the speed of the Pacific Coast men.

Burdick took the Chicagoans' only games on his own serve in the third set, and the Californians had no trouble winning their own and Hayes's serves.

Church jumped into an early lead in the first set and had the games, 5—3, before the title holder began to exhibit his usual placing skill. Squair kept up a good pace in the second set, taking the first game at love and winning a deuce score in the second. Then Church got going and took three straight. Squair began missing on his line play and grew wilder as the set progressed, while Church's net work improved to such an extent that it was almost a certain point for the Easterner any time he reached the barrier.

The third set was practically a reversal of the second. Squair seemed as strong as at the start, while Church was visibly tired. The title holder again recovered his ability to find the lines and he kept the challenger running until at the end Church was groping with each stroke, and seemed glad when the customary set was called. Church came back much refreshed by the ten minutes interval, though, and won the fourth set and match. Squair made a determined stand toward the end, but the Princeton man's careful placing early foreshadowed the result. This match was postponed from Tuesday. It ended the tournament.

NEW YORK DOGS THE BEST.

Take Many Ribbons at Newport Show—Mrs. Cary's Terrier Gets 3.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 14.—New York dog owners did remarkably well in the Newport Dog Show held here this afternoon on the lawn of the Griswold estate. Mrs. Hamilton Wilks Cary of New York exhibited for the first time and made a wonderful showing with her recently acquired Boston terrier Newport Nipper. This handsome young terrier came into the possession of Mrs. Cary only last month, when he was bought from Mr. and Mrs. George L. Rives for a large sum.

Newport Nipper, competing against more than twenty other dogs, took the blue ribbons in the novice, limit and open classes, which is quite a record for a dog making its first appearance at a show of this importance. Mrs. Cary's treble victory was a popular one, and she was congratulated on all sides by her many friends.

Mrs. Tyler Morse of Long Island was one of the big winners with her Old Sheep dogs. Her entries captured six firsts, with a first and second dog and in each class, and she won the championship with her old favorite champion, Slumber. The Red Brook Kennels of Great Neck, L. I., took many blues with poodles, while O. Carrie Harriman, of New York, was fortunate with Great Danes. The Kennels of Mrs. Gibson Fahnestock, of Newport, owned by Hamilton Fish Webster, carried off the honors in the cocker spaniel divisions. Mrs. M. C. Laden, another New York exhibitor, took three firsts with her fine collection of Airedales. There was an unusually strong showing of bulldogs, the majority of the prize winners coming from the Belray Kennels of Long Island.

Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Perry Belmont, Mr. and Mrs. Lars Anderson, Mrs. J. De Forest Danielson, Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Lawson, Mrs. Ogden Mills, Mrs. Henry Clews, Miss Anna Lehr, Mrs. and Mrs. Frederick Gillespie, the Misses Gabrielle Warren, Mildred Rives and Rhoda Fuliam, Richard Gambrill, Raymond Belmont, Mr. and Mrs. Tyler Morse, Mrs. James J. Brown, Miss Helen Tobin, Mrs. William Watts Sherman, Mrs. Gibson Fahnestock, George D. Widener, Jr., Mrs. French Vanderbilt, Mrs. William Grosvenor and Miss Anita Grosvenor.

INVADER AGAIN VICTORIOUS.

Gilbert Douglas's Boat Takes Prize in Great South Bay Regatta.

Special to The New York Times.

PATCHOGUE, L. I., Aug. 14.—What the Corinthians declared was the best cruise in the history of the Yacht Racing Association of Great South Bay, ended today with the season's final championship regatta under the auspices of the Bay and Bay Yacht Club. The cruising sailors have been favored with good breezes this year and today was no exception. Although the wind was light in the morning, it freshened considerably as the starting hour approached and when the course signs were set it was whipping over the bay from the southwest with enough strength to cause many of the skippers to tie in reefs. Midway during the regatta the wind lightened, only to grow stronger again as the yachts came down on the finish line.

Chairman Frank Guttridge of the Regatta Committee, assisted by Commodore George E. Rice, President of the Association, and J. W. Lawrence, who was not sailing today, picked a course for the craft that gave them a weather leg at the start, a broad reach and a close reach home. The larger yachts were sent around the triangle three times, the little fellows going around either once or twice, according to their sizes. The triangle was five nautical miles.

J. W. Overton's Alva led the fleet and won on both actual and corrected time in the P class. In the Q division, the winner was the new Invader, sailed by Gilbert Douglas, her youthful owner. The boat won in her division on both actual and corrected time. Several of the Moriches yacht were recalled at the start. That allowed Sylph to get a comfortable lead for her victory. It was the second race Sylph won today. This morning, she sailed off a tie for the 1914 championship pennant, beating Moonray for the title.

Lady Madge was the winner among the Bellport Bay one design yachts, and Adelaide III. won among the cast from the same club. Adelaide III. duplicated Sylph's feat by distancing Pawnee this morning for the 1914 championship pennant. The other winners were, Gleam, Margaret, Taffy, Kidder and Carmen B. At colors tonight, the cruising squadron was officially disbanded by Dr. Rice.

MISS DETROIT LEADS CRACK SPEED BOATS

Hydroplane Makes 48½ Miles an Hour in First Gold Cup Race.

Miss Detroit, the hydroplane designed by C. C. Smith of Algonac, Mich., and owned by the Detroit Power Boat Association, won the first leg of the series of three races for the Gold Challenge Cup over the thirty-mile Manhasset Bay course off Fort Washington yesterday afternoon. Badly away at the start she covered the course in 42 minutes 41 3-5 seconds, or at the rate of 48.49 statute miles per hour, or 42.17 knots or nautical miles. It was very evident to the several thousand observers of the race that this speed was by no means the measure of the actual possibilities of the boat. She was driven easily at all stages of the race, and nearly all of the time her prow glided through rather than over the water, thus showing evidences of latent power not developed because there happened to be no necessity for it in order to win.

After the race Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, who drove his own boat, Baby Reliance, admitted that Miss Detroit was much the best boat he had ever driven his own boat against, and one that in still water of the lakes would be most likely to snatch the speed record of 51.66 miles now held by his wife's boat, Baby Speed Demon. He did not think this was probable in the present series of races, as it is more difficult to attain extreme speed in salt water than in fresh water, where there are no tides or waves to impede the racing powers of craft of this sort. Miss Detroit's designer, C. C. Smith, said that the winning boat had done all he had expected of her in her first trial. "It was hardly a test for her, however," he said, "as she was not pushed at all, and her driver, Miliot, only did what was necessary to win.

A fleet of about five hundred power and sailing craft was anchored in the bay about the five-mile triangle which the high-speed boats were to cover six times, in order to make their first run for the cup now held by Mrs. Blackton's Baby Speed Demon. Seven of the fifteen boats entered for the races were scurrying about the waters when the committee gave the preparatory signal at 3:45 P. M. When the gun was fired Commodore Blackton, who was at the wheel of the Baby Reliance, was able to shoot across the line before the echoes of the starting gun had died away. Little Joker followed a couple of seconds later, and then "Bob" Edgren came whissing by in the Baby Speed Demon, with Miss Detroit a couple of seconds behind, and showing no startling speed as she settled down to the business of the day. Tech Jr. was next, with Presto, belching a lot of smoke and kicking up quite a formidable wake, just astern of her. Wee Peter Pan, the only other starter, trailed along far in the rear, all the other boats having made the first turn before she got across the line. Down the bay she went out of sight they sped with only the rataplan of their engines to give evidence to the watchers that the boats were on their way.

Seven minutes after the start Reliance again showed up at the line with her bow high in air and her blades churning the water into spume. Commodore Blackton made the turn very wide, which gave both Speed Demon and Miss Detroit a chance to cut down his lead very materially. Reliance was leading by fifteen seconds, with Miss Detroit, whose driver had "cut the corners" very cleverly, in second place, and three seconds ahead of Speed Demon. On this lap Little Joker came in sight with fire pouring from her half-dozen tiny funnels. She was back-firing badly and had to slowed down just after crossing the line until the fire could be controlled.

Reliance was still leading as the boats passed the timers on the second lap, only two seconds ahead of Miss Detroit, which led Speed Demon by 11 seconds. Just after the turn Baby Speed Demon was made Miss Detroit went to the front and made the third trip past the judges' boat 16 seconds ahead of Reliance, which led Speed Demon but 7 seconds.

Once Miss Detroit got the lead she held it handily in the finish. She was so well in hand that it was plain she would win, bar accidents. The accidents did not happen to her. But others were not so fortunate. After Little Joker had begun to make speed after her troubles on the first lap, she turned turtle off Great Neck on the third round and sank. Her driver and mechanician were picked up uninjured by a couple of oystermen. Tech Jr. broke her steering gear on the third round and retired for the time being. She made the necessary slight repair after the gear had been fixed in order to get her point in the race, to be added to those she expects to win in the races tomorrow and Tuesday. Wee Peter Pan had to retire as a break in her oil pump developed on the third lap, and her bearings were so badly burned that she will probably have no part in future races.

Engine troubles kept Ankle Deep Too, Hawkeye, and Peter Pan. VII. from starting yesterday, but they will be in the race tomorrow and Tuesday, with Tiddledywink also a possible starter. The times by laps made by the boats which finished:

42:41 3-5	42:59	43:36	50:09

Award of the cup will be made on the "point system." Under this the boat making the highest score in the three races will be declared the winner. By winning yesterday and defeating six boats Miss Detroit gets seven points toward the cup. Speed Demon, which was second, gets six points, Reliance five, Presto four, and Tech Jr., three, the two which did not finish getting no points and beginning on even terms with other starters which may appear in tomorrow's race.

CHAPPLE IN CLOSE RACE.

Brooklyn Motor Cyclist Wins Brighton Beach Event by Small Margin.

Arthur Chapple of Brooklyn retained his title as speed king of the motor cycle world when he defeated Freddie Luther of Fort Worth, Texas, in two special match races, one of four miles, the other of three miles, at the Brighton Beach Motordrome last night. Chapple defeated the invader by a half lap in the four-mile race. His time was 2:57. In the second race of three miles Chapple was just back of the Texan until the last quarter lap. Then he flashed to the front and won by inches. His time was 2:09.

Franz Krebs won the six-mile Brighton special with 11 points, taking first and two seconds in the three heats of the race. Krebs won the first race easily in 4:41, but in the other two heats he was never able to get into first place. George Sperl was second with 10 points, a first and second and third. Sam Henderson of Detroit, Mich., won the third heat in 4:40, but in the other two heats was unable to get better than third place, and finished third in the race with 7 points.

George Mercier of Brooklyn took two of the three two-mile heats from George Hamilton of Montclair. Hamilton won the first heat in 1:30, but the next two went to Mercier in 1:29 and 1:30. There were close finishes in all three heats.

Engine troubles deprived Arthur Chapple of a victory in the fifteen-mile handicap race. The champion gave the field of five starters a two-lap handicap and gained one of the laps in the eighth mile. After Chapple had covered twelve miles and two laps at top speed his engine started to miss fire and he was compelled to withdraw from the race. At that time he had gained two laps on all the riders with the exception of Mercier, and he was within a few yards of Mercier. It was a pretty fight that Mercier, Hamilton and Quaccinelli had for first place. After Chapple had dropped out of the race these three riders tore around the track with little distance between them. Mercier spurted in the last two laps and won the race by a quarter of a lap over Hamilton, who finished several yards ahead of Quaccinelli, the Italian rider. Mercier's time for the fifteen miles was 11:17. During the race the riders' speed averaged about eighty-two miles an hour.

HOW TO LEARN TO PLAY GOLF—DETROIT LINKS, WHERE AMATEUR GOLF WILL BE PLAYED

GOLF ANALYZED AND SIMPLIFIED

By JOHN ALBERT SCOTT.

The following articles on golf are part of a series the object of which is to explain in simple, easily understood form, advice by such experts as Vardon, Travers, Braid, Taylor, Ouimet, Ray, and others, the points which every golfer, young or old, should know.

Articles 1 and 2 dealt with the grip as exemplified by Harry Vardon, 3, 4, 5 and 6 with the stance.

The other accompanying articles have to do with the drive.

No. 6—The Stance, Continued.

IN the previous articles on the stance, it has been said that the manner in which Vardon and Braid stand (that is, the position of the feet in relation to the ball and the line of play) induces the body twist, which it is necessary to get, in order to have the power of the body come into the stroke, without any conscious effort of the player.

If these articles are read carefully and the reasoning followed, it will be seen that their text is "naturalness," that the body is allowed to do certain natural and instinctive things, after having taken a stance and grip that permits free natural action.

It is the placing of the body in a constrained and unnatural position and then trying to make the different parts work in an arbitrary manner that results in stiffness, an inability to hit freely, and powerfully, a general feeling of discomfort, and consequent failure. The essence of the play of the great golfer is ease.

J. H. Taylor Addressing the Ball.

Now as to the body twist, how it is induced and started by the stance, as described. After having taken the stance and addressed the ball, stand up straight and face as you would ordinarily, with the feet in the position shown. You find yourself facing slightly toward the left and that your body turned to assume this position.

To again address the ball, bending at the waist, you must twist the body at the hips. Thus it will be seen that with the feet in the position assumed by Vardon and Braid—the others do the same thing—the body must be twisted to the right, and it is only a matter of letting it continue to do so as the club is swung back, to get it fully and in the proper way.

Furthermore, as the address was resumed from the erect position, the knees moved into perfect adjustment, without effort on your part.

So it follows, that by standing in the position illustrated by the photographs of Vardon and Braid, you will do with the feet what is done with the hands (when they are placed as described in the grip, as will be seen more fully later): start a turning movement, and will have done so automatically.

With grip and stance taken as shown and described, and the reasons for them being understood, the back swing will proceed easily and smoothly, if the line to be indicated is followed.

No. 7—Variations in Stance and Grip, with Some Advice.

ALTHOUGH the fundamental positions of hands and feet have been minutely described in preceding articles, it does not follow that slight variations are not permissible. This is so as regards the overlapping of the little finger, but it is most strongly recommended that this form of gripping the club be perservered in until it is easy and natural to hold the club in this manner, for in this feature of Vardon's grip is its chief virtue. By gripping the club with the little finger overlapping, the strength of the grip of the right hand will be in the first two fingers and the thumb, where it should be, which will allow the right hand to be used to its full power, as adjusted, and will remove any necessity of endeavoring to restrain its dominance over the left hand, which is one of the inherent weaknesses of the ordinary grip. It is this reduction of the power of the right, accomplished by the overlapping grip, that automatically makes a unit of the two hands.

Many who think they cannot use the overlapping grip—saying that their hands are too small or their fingers too short, &c.—could use it comfortably if they would have the grips on their clubs made to fit their hands. A woman or a girl who wears a No. 6 glove cannot be expected to use the same size grip as that on the club of a man who wears a No. 8½ glove, yet this is practically the condition of affairs, as will be found, if you will take the trouble to investigate it. The great golfers, Vardon, Braid, Taylor, &c., are very careful to have the grips of their clubs fit their hands—very careful indeed. And right here let me make a suggestion. Have the old-fashioned calfskin grips on your clubs, the kind that is rather coarse, not the smooth, oil-finished grips now so generally used. Notice that most of the professional golfers use the unfinished kind of grips, and the reason for this is, that it permits their holding the club with sufficient grip, without holding too tight, which is the case with the smooth finished grips.

In the Summer time, in very hot weather, the hands perspire, and unless the club is gripped tightly, the result is that it slips. With the calfskin grip, a little shoemaker's wax will give sufficient grip, and there will be no tendency to grip too tightly. It is tight gripping that causes sore and calloused hands. With the calf-skin grip made slightly sticky with shoemaker's wax and proper tension of the grip there will not be the slightest danger of slipping, nor of making the hands sore.

To go back to the size of the grips on your clubs: Don't try to make your hands fit the clubs, have the clubs made to fit your hands—it is easier and more sensible. If you will do this you will find that the club can be gripped in the manner described as the Vardon, or overlapping grip, and will be able to enjoy all its benefits. But if, after a thorough trial, or through long use and ability to use the club efficiently with some other form of grip, the overlapping grip is not used, then at least adjust the hands in the position indicated, for any variation here will defeat the purpose I indicated this positioning of the hands served—that of placing the wrists in position to respond with correct action, without conscious effort, as the back swing is made.

No. 8—The Back Swing.

THE first two fundamentals of the golf swing have been described, that is, the grip and the stance; these are positions in which the player can place himself, there is no continuous movement of the body required to assume them, hence there is very little chance for misunderstanding between the writer and the reader. The difficulty now presents itself of picturing to you, clearly, the movements of the back swing.

Both reader and writer will be assisted by the photographs of the famous golfers used to illustrate this series, especially as the photographs are of actually played strokes, thus can be depended on to convey correctly the right idea.

To facilitate the description of the back swing, I have divided it into three parts, according to the combinations and order in which the parts of the body work. These three divisions are the work of the hands and wrists, the arms and shoulders, and the body, legs and feet. Each is distinct in itself, but in actual play the three are naturally blended into one smooth, harmonious, unbroken movement, without the slightest hitch or stiffness. Remember, however, that there is a decided difference between stiffness and tension.

Of these three divisions, the work of the hands and wrists is by far the most important; for as they lead, the others must follow. It is with the hands and wrists the stroke is made, the other parts applying their power through them. In other words, the hands and wrists are the "executive" connection between the player and the club. Hence it follows, that if the hands and wrists are allowed to get out of control, there is no means by which the rest of the body can do its work effectively. This should be obvious, although it does not seem to be so well recognized as it might be. Most of the bad strokes in golf can be traced to the hands as the primary cause of failure. If then the action of the hands is so important, it is necessary to determine carefully the limits within which they work in going to the top of the swing, for their action must be within very exact limits. They cannot be permitted to wobble.

For the purpose of illustrating the action of the hands and the limit of their departure from the straight backward swing, photographs of Vardon, Braid, Duncan and others will be used. These men all differ in physique, and are generally said to use different types of swings. Yet I think I can conclusively show that, within certain limits, which will be defined, they all follow the same track in the back swing, when allowance is made for their physical aptitudes and limitations.

AMATEURS TO PLAY OVER TRICKY COURSE

Detroit Links, Scene of Championship Play, Full of Traps and Hazards.

"A tricky course" is what the expert golfers call the links of the Country Club of Detroit, where play for the amateur championship of the United States Golf Association is to begin Aug. 28.

The scenic setting for the amateur championship match is all a sportsman could desire. Situated in a rolling country, sloping up from Lake St. Clair, the Detroit course has many natural advantages for the studious golfer. It has virgin turf, along many approaches, equalling the best of Scotland. The rolling character of the land has combined natural hazard with artificial device to make the course difficult for the unwary player.

Several holes have two tees, used alternately. The unused tee is fenced off. This practice of changing tees varies the lengths of proposed drives.

In the course at Grosse Pointe spectators and contestants may expect a delightful environment, enough hazard for excitement, and a broad view of the scene of play so that all may see the need of what generalship must be used in the strategical campaign against Colonel Bogey.

As a result of the "observation playing" of "Chick" Evans, W. C. Fownes, Jr.; Joe Bole, Ernie Armstrong, Eben Byers, and Jack Neville, the course has been changed in several places, not radically, but noticeably Several new traps were built, necessitating a "pulling-in" of the fairways.

A difficulty is encountered at the first hole. There the tee is on a rise, and the player must drive 150 yards to reach the open. The distance is 420 yards. Traps to right and left of the fairways' centre will punish a slice or pull. Bunkers are at the right and left corners of the green and around its rear.

Hole 2 is a good one for the distance, 447 yards. The green is to a rise, halting a long second drive. It is banked, with traps to right and left of the fairway.

The green of 458 yards on Hole 3 is easier than No. 2. It is on a level, but a diagonal bunker bothers hook shots. There is a high bank behind the green, and a trap at the right corner to catch the slicers.

At Hole 4 the first radical change suggested by the championship contestants has been made. A trap has been added to the 341-yard hole about 180 yards from the tee on the right of the fairway. Traps at both sides and at the rear will catch misses. A ditch will bother those who hook a second time. There is a chance at this hole for a fine drive

Hole 5 has been stretched from 145 yards to 164 yards by the addition of a new tee. The same ditch as in the previous hole will bother hooks. Excepting the front, the green is surrounded by traps.

A diagonal hitch across Hole 6 catches slice shots. The hole is 424 yards in length, and has a banked green about three feet high.

At Hole 7, 144 yards, a change will be made before the championship play begins. The green is already well trapped right and rear, but another will be built across the front of the green.

Hole 8, of 515 yards, has a large bunker to bother a second shot if it is topped. Traps also punish slice and hook shots from the tee. The green is raised a bit, and is trapped at sides and rear.

Many believe Hole 9, of 401 yards, to be the best two-shot hole on the course. A long drive down the left of the fairway is required to get a clear shot to the hole, a large trap at the right corner of the green proving an aggravation to a drive at the right. It is an ideal finishing spot for the first half of a round.

Hole 10, of 307 yards, with a par of 4, has a diagonal bunker requiring a long drive, best to the right. There is a mashie pitch to a sloping green about 22 yards from the green. The main green is trapped on both sides.

Hole 11, 525 yards, is the longest of the course, and is improved greatly by placing the tee about 45 yards back, making possible the crossing of a big ditch on the second shot without laying back with an easy iron. There are traps here for slices and hooks from the tee. The green is banked at the rear and trapped at the sides.

Hole 12, 365 yards, has been improved. A ditch can be crossed with a 150-yard drive leaving a long second shot. A little better than a 200-yard drive enables the player to get a mashie pitch to a green, well-guarded with traps.

The thirteenth hole, 380 yards, has several cross-traps to bother the first and second shots. The first is about 100 yards from the tee, the second about forty yards from the green. The undulating green, guarded by mounds, makes play difficult.

A pond at the right corner of Hole 14, 216 yards, catches a sliced tee shot. No. 14 has mounds at the four corners of the green.

A ridge runs around the rear of the green at Hole 15, of 384 yards. A long drive over a bunker makes a pitch to the green possible.

Next to the longest hole of the course is 16, of 532 yards. The fairway has been pulled in near the green, and traps have been built along the side of the fairway.

The player finds many traps on Hole 17, of 415 yards. The hole is banked at the rear, and has a cross-bunker to catch topped second shots.

The green is raised at the eighteenth hole, 185 yards, and a big trap protects its front, providing a chance for a good iron shot. All around the green are traps.

ON NEAR-BY GOLF LINKS.

Wykagyl Championship Between Maltby and Birmingham.

The championship of the Wykagyl Country Club will be decided by George K. Maltby and T. V. Bermingham this week, for they each won their semi-final matches yesterday. Maltby defeated C. B. Pallen by 5 up and 4 to play, while Bermingham was successful over Elmer E. Sturges by 3 and 2 margin. There also was a handicap against par, F. H. Cunningham and Sturges tieing, each finishing 2 down. The results follow:

Club Championship.—Semi-Final Round—George K. Maltby beat C. B. Pallen, 5 up and 4 to play; T. V. Bermingham beat Elmer E. Sturges, 3 up and 2 to play.

Second Sixteen—Semi-Final Round—F. F. Taylor beat T. J. McKeon, 4 up and 3 to play; J. S. Marvin beat D. T. Drake, 3 up and 2 to play.

Third Sixteen.—Semi-Final Round—H. W. Boettger beat C. M. Hanley, 3 up and 1 to play; George B. Lugman beat J. M. Stoddard, 3 up and 1 to play.

Handicap vs. Par.—F. H. Cunningham, 2 down; Elmer E. Sturges, 2 down; T. V. Bermingham, 3 down; A. B. Campbell, 4 down; Arthur Stiles, 5 down; George K. Maltby, 5 down.

Members of the Deal Golf and Country Club had plenty to do in a competitive way yesterday. There was a medal handicap in two classes to begin with, a tie resulting in the first set between Thomas Morrison, 88, 9—79, and R. S. Porter, 93, 14—79. Frederick H. Eaton won in Class B, with 94, 20—74. There also was a qualifying round in two classes for the William Ottmann Trophy. R. S. Porter led the first division, with 93, 14—79, and Eaton showed the way in the second, with 94, 20—74. The scores follow:

Medal Play Handicap, Class A.—Thomas Morrison, 88, 9—79; R. S. Porter, 93, 14—79; James T. Smith, 89, 9—80; H. H. Parker, 91, 11—80; E. W. Cone, 97, 14—83; Alfred Nathan, 93, 8—85; W. R. Delehanty, 97, 12—85; E. V. Hartford, 100, 14—86; Paul E. Heller, 98, 12—86; W. Rice Hochster, 100, 13—87.

Class B.—Frederick H. Eaton, 94, 20—74; J. G. Newcombe, 95, 19—76; E. A. Whalen, 105, 26—79; W. H. Duvall, 108, 27—81; T. A. Ennis, 107, 25—82; S. M. Widmer, Jr., 98, 16—82; R. H. Higgins, 103, 21—82; F. J. Arend, 102, 20—82; G. J. Mager, 106, 24—82. William Ottmann Trophy, Class A.—R. S. Porter, 93, 14—79; James T. Smith, 89, 9—80; H. H. Parke 91, 11—80; A. B. Rode, 96, 14—82; E. W. Cone, 98, 17—83; C. C. Martin, 96, 12—84.

Besides the regular Red Card competition at the Dunwoodie Country Club yesterday the second round of the August tournament also was completed. F. H. Sisson won Class A of the Red Card with a card of 87, 14—73, while in Class B the leader was J. M. de Mallie with 89, 18—71. The summary of the August tournament follows:

Class A.—Second Round—A. M. Morris beat William Chilvers, 8 up and 6 to play; Fulton Colville beat F. H. Sisson by default; J. C. Scharps drew a bye.

Class B.—Second Round—Wesley Sisson beat W. A. Milligan, 3 up and 2 to play; T. S. Keogh beat J. McNair, 7 up and 6 to play; W. Bader beat A. Patterson, 1 up; W. S. Evans drew a bye.

Best ball foursomes furnished the attraction at the Ardsley Club yesterday, and as a result T. M. Taylor and F. C. Wechmer were returned the winners with a card of 79, 11—68. The scores were as follows:

T. M. Taylor and F. C. Wechmer, 79, 11—68; T. S. Fuller and F. L. Madden, 78, 7—71; W. F. Baylis and N. J. Booker, 77, 5—72; H. J. Bartholomae and D. S. Horton, 81, 9—72; A. D. Lawrence and C. Smith, Jr., 79, 6—73; J. P. Clark and F. P. Warfield, 83, 10—73; D. Dallam and R. S. Thomas, 82, 8—74; C. L. Downs and Frederick Forsythe, 86, 12—74; Floyd Smith and C. E. Force, 91, 14—77.

With a card of 94—32—72, C. G. Bartlett won the weekly sweepstakes at the Country Club of Glen Ridge yesterday. The following returned scores:

C. G. Bartlett, 94—32—72; W. G. Thomas, 82—8—74; E. Doane, 95—18—77; C. M. Lindsey, 102—25—78; F. Conneli, 95—13—82; R. M. Byrnes, 94—11—83.

An eighteen-hole medal play handicap was on the cards at the Forest Hill Field Club yesterday, the field being divided into two classes. J. Dana won the first cup, with a score of 85—14—71, while the club rule counting all scores of 71 or less as 71 brought about a tie in the second division between J. E. Lott, 89—20—69, and J. B. Cummings, 88—18—70. The scores follows:

Class A.—J. Danap, 85—14—71; L. Kaiser, 88—15—73; W. I. Allsopp, 85—10—75; Celestine Olozaga, 90—15—75; C. L. Cameron, 90—14—76; H. F. Lepier, 87—11—76; L. Schoonmaker, 96—16—80; Richard Erler, 97—11—86.

Class B.—J. E. Lott, 89—20—69; J. B. Cummings, 88—18—70; L. Hutchinson, 99—25—74; J. H. Blue, 94—19—75; S. Dickson, 102—25—77; C. E. T. Scharps, 97—19—78.

B. T. Allen, erstwhile Staten Island champion, emerged from a medley of competitions at the Fox Hills Golf Club yesterday the winner of several prizes. Theodore K. McCarthy and W. W. Van Loan, with respective cards of 92, 18—74, and 81, 7—74, tied with Allen's 78, 4—74, and a play-off was necessary. On the play-off hinged the chief prize in a bogey competition, a medal play handicap, and the privilege of leading the field in the qualifying round for the Col. Hugh O'Donoghue Cup. Thus Allen, by winning, actually made a clean sweep.

E. L. Wyatt defeated Howell Woolley by 4 up and 2 to play in the final match for the W. J. Elias Trophy. The following qualified for the O'Donoghue Cup, match play for which will get under way next Saturday:

B. T. Allen, 78, 4—74; Theodore K. McCarthy, 92, 18—74; W. W. Van Loan, 81, 7—74; Benjamin Starkey, 100, 25—75; J. E. Bowden, 83, 8—75; L. S. Hubbard, 101, 25—76; M. J. Grammont, 105, 29—76; J. A. Keenan, 96, 20—76; F. H. Wood, 108, 30—78; P. W. Pennock, 91, 13—78; C. B. Parker, 108, 24—79; W. Roy Barnhill, 86, 6—80; F. V. Sullivan, 93, 12—80; J. G. Spindler, 90, 9—81; A. Anderson, 91, 10—81; R. R. Mamlok, 92, 10—82; Ralph Trier, 107, 25—82.

Englewood golfers ran off a handicap against bogey yesterday. Grantland Rice and George Van Keuren tied for first prize—in fact, they were the only ones who handed in cards. Rice went around in 77 and had a handicap of 6. Van Keuren's handicap was 14.

Snow First in Maplewood Golf.

Special to The New York Times.

MAPLEWOOD, N. H., Aug. 14.—Mrs. Henry Hoyns of Brooklyn, with a net score of 75, won the ladies' sweepstakes tournament played over the Maplewood links this morning. Miss Emma S. Walton of Philadelphia took a prize for the best nine holes out of eighteen with 46. In the men's weekly sweepstakes event C. R. Scott of Greenfield finished first with 71. Winslow Gray of Brockton second with 72 and T. O. Buckner third with 76. Galen Snow of Greenfield, in the second sixteens of the Maplewood August handicap tournament, won the finals with a medal score of 73, defeating H. A. Norton of Winchester by 3 and 2. He went out in 39, four over par, and bettered this on the homeward journey by five strokes. Snow secured his finalist position this morning with a victory over T. A. Buckner of St. Andrew's, 4 and 3, after playing twenty-four holes. G. W. Carroll, Jr., of Norwich disposed of William M. Rice of Houston in the final round of the first sixteen, 5 and 4, his advancement to the final bracket being due to a 3-and-1 victory over G. A. Wiseman of New Britain. Rice went twenty-seven holes this morning before eliminating R. E. Manley, Dunwoodie, 2 and 1.

Rumson County Club Golf.

Special to The New York Times.

RUMSON, N. J., Aug. 14.—In the thirty-six-hole match play for the golf championship title and cup of the Rumson Country Club Pierre A. Proal today defeated E. A. G. Wylie by 2 up. Proal won the club championship in 1910. In a stiff match this morning Proal beat out Wylie by 1 up in the first eighteen holes of the championship event. Wylie started out in the lead during the afternoon, but by consistent play Proal won out by the small margin of 1. Knox's defeat in the semi-finals by Wylie by 5 up and 3 to play was the first game he had ever lost here.

SARATOGA SPECIAL EASY FOR DOMINANT

Roamer's Defeat in the "Champlain" Surprise of the Day at Spa.

Special to The New York Times.

SARATOGA, N. Y., Aug. 14.—Turfmen hailed a new king of the 2-year-olds when Dominant, in the colors of L. S. Thompson, romped home a ridiculously easy winner of the Saratoga special this afternoon, running a field of seven rivals "dizzy" as he galloped through the stretch. Puss in Boots lasted longest of the seven beaten ones and finished second, and Friar Rock third; but almost from the instant the barrier was sprung "Dominant" was the word on every lip and the Thompson colors the object that filled every eye. He shot through to the front in the first half dozen strides and then the race was over. He was galloped under wraps the remainder of the journey.

That Dominant is not among the futurity eligibles is a matter of general regret among horsemen.

Roamer, although he had an impost of 132 pounds, was regarded as a foregone conclusion for the Champlain Handicap at a mile and a furlong, but he failed to make his customary display of even early speed, and finished unplaced. Stromboli was the pacemaker in the early part of the race and led to the head of the stretch, where he was caught by Gainer, but he, in turn, was beaten in the last sixteenth by Major McDowell's 6-year-old mare Star Jasmine, which, responding gamely to a sharp drive, won by a length, Gainer and Stromboli following as named. Roamer finished a bad fourth, and Saratoga and The Finn were beaten off.

The first race on the card, a high weight handicap at six furlongs, was won by Superintendent. The steeplechase furnished good sport, although it was a duel between Cherry Malotte, the winner, and Lysander, which ran second, the other four starters never being really in it after the winner and the second horse began racing in real earnest. Indian Arrow fell at the last jump, but fortunately both he and his rider escaped any injury worth mentioning.

The fifth race was won by Important and the sixth by Lahore.

During the afternoon Mr. Sanford's recently imported thoroughbred sire, The Curragh, was shown in the paddock and, later, on the grass course of the infield opposite the grand stand. Altogether, The Curragh is an imposing appearing horse of great size and substance enough for a "Vanner"; his bright bay with a small star and white hind pasterns, stands about sixteen and a half hands high and would probably weigh fully 1,300 pounds or more. Even the merest novice could not mistake him for being other than a thoroughbred, as his finish is exquisitely graceful, even artistic, although he has substance enough for a "Vanner," his head is clean and bloodlike, his neck beautifully arched and finely crested, springing from oblique shoulders which are so heavily muscled as to narrowly escape a suspicion of coarseness. He has a very large and shapely barrel with the weight carried well back into the flank. His loin, though broad, is possibly a trifle flat, but he is closely coupled and has splendid quarters. His pasterns are long and very oblique, and his knees, possibly, are not all that might be desired in a perfect horse of his weight. He is, in short, a big horse upon legs which might be regarded as just a trifle light below the knee. His feet are large and somewhat flat. While in most respects he is a highly finished horse, he is especially impressive in general outline. Summary:

Polly H, 105, 8 to 5, 1 to 2, and out, (J. McTaggart).....3

Marshon, Napier, and O'Sullivan also ran.

NEW GOLF COURSE AT ISLIP.

Proposed Suffolk County Club to Build Links on Great South Bay.

Invitations for membership in a proposed golf and country club, on the south side of Long Island, have been sent out by a committee composed of Henry W. Bull, Jay F. Carlisle, George A. Ellis, Jr., Bayard C. Hoppin, George A. Huhn, Jr., Louis Livingston, William R. Simons, and Langdon K. Thorne.

It has been whispered for months that many lovers of golf who have their homes on the south side of the island were contemplating the construction of a new course. The committee chose the property owned by Harry B. Hollins, Jr., and Gerald V. Hollins, at Islip, as the best location for a links. The properties chosen comprise 120 acres of upland and meadow land, fronting on Great South Bay. In choosing this tract the committee consulted with four golf course experts: Mr. Skinner, of the United States Drainage and Irrigation Company; Mr. Raynor, constructor of the National Golf Links of America; C. B. McDonald, designer of the National Golf Links, the Piping Rock, and Lido courses; Peter Lees, greenkeeper of the Mid-Surrey Golf Club, England, now in charge of the turfing at the Lido course, Long Beach.

The property chosen will have facilities for tennis, polo, shooting, fishing, boating, bathing, and horseback riding.

The golf course will have eighteen holes in a length of 6,300 yards. The distance of the holes is given in the prospectus: Out, No. 1, 420 yards; No. 2, 440 yards; No. 3, 460 yards; No. 4, 160 yards; No. 5, 363 yards; No. 6, 183 yards; No. 7, 496 yards; No. 8, 325 yards; No. 9, 395 yards; total, 3,242 yards. In, No. 10, 316 yards; No. 11, 178 yards; No. 12, 443 yards; No. 13, 525 yards; No. 14, 415 yards; No. 15, 366 yards; No. 16, 130 yards; No. 17, 550 yards; No. 18, 405 yards; total, 3,128 yards.

On the western side of the property a canal will be cut, and a yacht basin will be dug close to the clubhouse. This will enable members to reach the clubhouse by boat.

It is proposed to finance the club by an issue of 1,125 shares of stock of a par value of $200 a share. The maximum membership of the club is to be 400, but only 250 are to be enrolled at first.

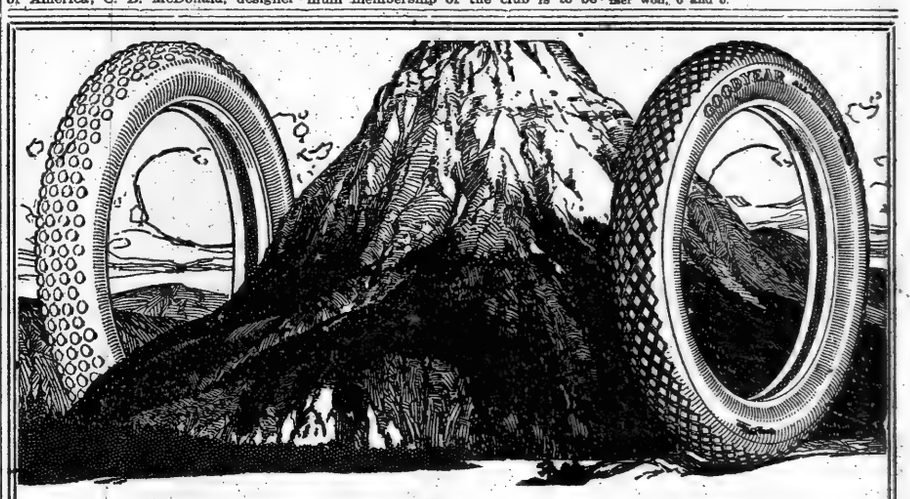
The grounds of the proposed club may be reached from the South Country Road by way of Bay View Avenue, East Islip. The drive from the main highway to the club leads through wooded roads to Great South Bay. The name of the club will be Suffolk County Country Club.

Women's Golf at Shenecossett.

The women's golf tournament at the Shenecossett Country Club was completed Friday and developed some interesting scores. Mrs. C. J. Ahern of Chicago won in the qualifying round with a score of 116. In the two rounds of eights on Wednesday morning the first resulted as follows: Mrs. B. C. Robbins of New York won from Miss Helen Bartholomew of Philadelphia, 1 up; Miss Gene Terry won from Mrs. Peter Boyd of Philadelphia, 2 up and 1 to go, and Mrs. Ahern beat Mrs. J. A. Philbrick of Montclair, 7 and 5. In the second eight Mrs. F. L. Smith of Chicago won from Mrs. William Knight of Albany, 7 up and 6 to go; Mrs. Harold Flammer of New York won from Mrs. F. DeC. Sullivan of New York, 1 up.

In the semi-finals of the first eight Miss Terry won from Miss Bartholomew, 7 and 6, and Mrs. Ahern won from Miss Miller, 4 and 2. In the second eight Mrs. Smith won from Mrs. Flammer, 7 and 6, and Miss Farmer drew a bye.

The finals of the first eight were won by Miss Terry, who defeated Mrs. Ahern, 1 up. In the finals of the second eight Miss Farmer won, 6 and 5.



Fairly Good Tires vs. Extra Good Tires

A Mountain Lies Between Them

These are the facts which we want to impress on you.

Any "fairly good" tire lacks at least five features found in Goodyears only. Either we control these features, or we alone are willing to pay their extra cost.

You can't see that they are lacking, but you ought to know it. For they combat, in the best ways known, these six major troubles:

Rim-Cutting Loose Treads Punctures Blowouts Insecurity Skidding

Cost $1,635,000

These features, plus other extras not commonly employed, cost us this year $1,635,000.

This year's improvements alone, in added rubber and added size, will cost us $500,000.

In addition to all these, it costs us $1,000,000 on this year's output to make our All-Weather tread double-thick. That is, over the cost of a regular tread made rough, like the usual anti-skid.

We pay that price over "fairly good" tires to make Goodyears extra good.

The Cost to You

The yearly difference in upkeep should average from $50 to $100 per car. It differs with tire sizes. And mishap and misuse will affect it. But the average saving mounts into millions of dollars to the users of Goodyear tires.

That's why we pay the price.

Yet note how Goodyear prices have come down and down. This year's reduction will save Goodyear users some $5,000,000. And our three reductions in two years total 45 per cent.

Those are the reasons why Goodyears rule Tiredom. They have outsold any other tire for years. They are gaining new users this year faster than ever before in our history.

They are going to win you. They deserve to. And they are bound to hold you as a Goodyear user so long as you run a car. Let them show you their supremacy.

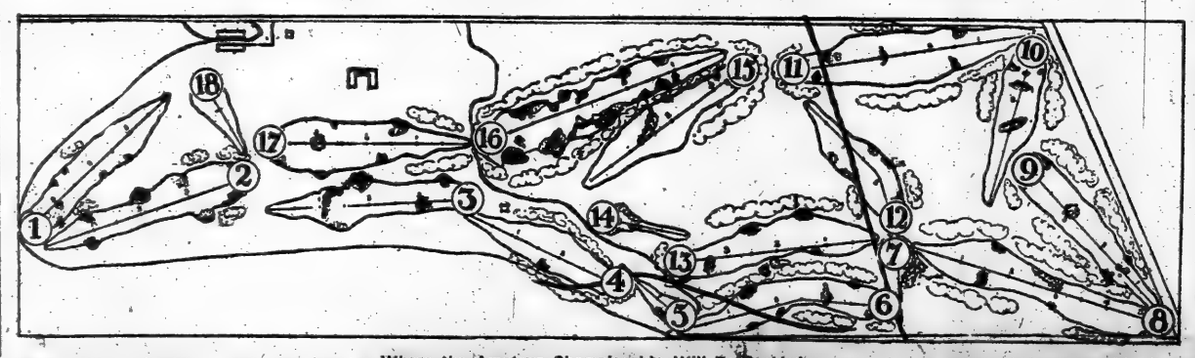
DETROIT COUNTRY CLUB'S GOLF COURSE



Where the Amateur Championship Will Be Decided.

THE WEATHER

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—It is somewhat warmer in New England and the upper Lake region and high temperatures continue over interior districts west of the Rocky Mountains.

Showers will continue Sunday and Monday in the South and Southwest, while over northern districts east of the Mississippi River the weather will be generally fair Sunday and Monday except in the south portion of middle Atlantic districts, where local thunder showers are probable Sunday.

Temperatures will not change materially.

The approaching tropical storm is apparently central in or near the Yucatan Channel, moving northwest, and hurricane warnings have been continued on the Southwestern Florida coast. Warning messages for shipping have also been sent to all Gulf ports. The highest wind reported during the day was sixty-four miles an hour from the east in the channel between Key West and Havana. At Havana a velocity of fifty miles an hour from the east occurred during Friday night.

Winds along the North Atlantic Coast Sunday and Monday will be gentle to moderate west, becoming variable; Middle Atlantic Coast, gentle to moderate, mostly southwest; South Atlantic Coast, moreaste variable, except east off Florida Coast, and fresh to strong off the Southern Florida Coast.

FORECASTS: TODAY and MONDAY.

Eastern New York, New Jersey, and New England—Generally fair Sunday and Monday.

Western New York and Eastern Pennsylvania—Partly cloudy Sunday and Monday.

	1914.	1913.		1914.	1915.
3 A. M.	67	71	4 P. M.	76	84
6 A. M.	65	70	6 P. M.	76	84
9 A. M.	74	76	9 P. M.	73	79
12 M.	79	80	11 P. M.	71	77

This thermometer is 414 feet above the street level. The average temperature yesterday was 77; for the corresponding date last year it was 72; average on the corresponding date for the last thirty-three years, 72.

The temperature at 5 A. M. yesterday was 75; at 8 P. M. it was 80. Maximum temperature, 84 degrees at 4 P. M.; minimum, 70 degrees at 6 A. M. Humidity, 67 per cent. at 8 A. M.; 62 per cent. at 8 P. M.

The barometer at 8 A. M. yesterday registered 30.01 inches; at 8 P. M. it stood at 30.02 inches.

VANDERBILT HORSES FOR NATIONAL SHOW

Mrs. Alfred G. Purchases Best and May Exhibit for Sentimental Reasons.

That Mrs. Alfred G. Vanderbilt will be an exhibitor in the horse shows of another year is thought to be indicated by the reservation for her of several of the noted ribbon winners and promising young harness horses that were a part of the stable owned by her late husband and recently dispersed by public auction. At the time of the sale this impression was general among horsemen when the auctioneer announced that Sir James, winner of the Nala Cup for gig horses at the last National Horse Show, had been retained, along with some other prize winners. A report from Newport says that several of the most promising among the younger hackneys and carriage horses at Oakland Farm have been purchased for Mrs. Vanderbilt and sent to Shadowbrook, her Summer home at Lenox.

There was a sentimental reason for her choice of Sir James. The last horse show Mr. Vanderbilt attended before losing his life on the Lusitania was a private exhibition held in the riding ring at Oakland Farm, Newport, R. I., on the occasion of a house party there early last Spring. Practically every show horse on the farm was judged for conformation and quality by Mrs. Vanderbilt and one of the guests. They gave the grand championship to Sir James as being the handsomest and best horse among them all.

Evidence of the widespread appreciation of Mr. Vanderbilt's services to horse interests was conveyed to Mrs. Vanderbilt a few days ago, when she received engraved memorial resolutions from the Directors of both the National Horse Show Association and the American Hackney Horse Society. Coming from these two organizations, of which Mr. Vanderbilt was President and Director, respectively, there was a profound sentiment expressed in each of the resolutions.

Islip to Have a Dog Show.

The third annual show of the Islip Kennel Club, which will be held Saturday, Sept. 4, on the Islip Polo Club grounds at Bayshore, L. I., promises to attract many entries. The show is making an appeal to exhibitors, and entries have been received up to date from the following: George A. Ellis, Jr., Harry T. Peters, Raymond Belmont, B. R. Huggins, William Ziegler, Jr., F. L. Button, Mrs. A. Hungerford, Mrs. A. H. Van Heusen, Mrs. E. H. Berendsohn, Morris Kinney, Mr. and Mrs. Tyler Morse, Alfred B. Mackay, John C. Rathbone, Alfred Pitterman, Mrs. Frank T. Clark, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin H. Throop, and Mrs. Roy Rainey. Premium lists can be obtained from Wilbur E. Purcell, manager, 25 Broadway, New York City, and entries close Saturday, Aug. 21. The officers of the club are: Harry A. Ellis, President; Harry T. Peters, First Vice President; Tyler Morse, Second Vice President; E. H. Berendsohn, Secretary and Treasurer, and E. J. Robbins, Veterinarian.

The Waumbek and Cottages

The property known as The Waumbek Hotel and Cottages, belonging to The Jefferson Hotel and Land Company, is located at Jefferson, New Hampshire, the most attractive region in the White Mountains.

The company's property consists of about 900 acres of land, the Waumbek Hotel with 149 guest rooms, three large annexes and five cottages, all fully equipped with all the furniture, crockery, china, etc., required to run same at full capacity, affording accommodations for 350 guests. The hotel and cottages are supplied with steam heat and electric lights throughout. The Waumbek is distant, in point of time, ten hours from New York, from Boston seven, and from Portland, Maine, five.

This attractive property, including all the personal property, is to be sold by the undersigned, who invites proposals for the same as a whole, to be filed with him in writing on or before August 27, 1915.

The Hotel and Cottages are now open under the management of Mr. Charles V. Murphy of Jefferson, N. H., who has leased the property for the present season, which lease expires September 23, 1915.

The golf links adjacent to the hotel rank among the best in the country.

For the past seven years the annual gross receipts from the Waumbek and Cottages have varied from $96,000 to $117,000.

A part of the real estate is covered by mortgage of $48,500, and all bids must be made over and above said mortgage debt, besides interest thereon from March 1, 1915, and current year's taxes, amounting to $1,623.80.

Bids must be substantial and of sufficient amount to warrant their submission to the Court for approval.

Terms, 20 per cent. on acceptance of the bid, balance in 30 days, if sale is approved by the Court.

ATLANTIC Y. C. RACE WEEK.

Many Corinthians Offer Prizes for the Different Divisions.

According to the announcement of John R. Brophy, Chairman of the Regatta Committee of the Atlantic Yacht Club, many well-known Corinthians have offered series prizes for the annual race week starting on Monday, Aug. 23. Trophies have been received from Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, Vice Commodore Peterson, former Commodore Leonard Richards, former Vice Commodore Peter W. Rouse, Captain Addison G. Hanan, and Captain Gherardi Davis. The committee has not as yet decided the classes for the various cups. All the divisions, however, will sail for prizes offered.

Indications point to the race week being the most important in years. The thirty-foot division of the New York Yacht Club promises to be one of the feature classes. The latest entry for the division is Alerion II., the property of J. W. and E. P. Alker. I. E. Raymond's Hope and Silhouette also have been mentioned as probable starters. The Larchmont interclub class and the star divisions also have filled.

Practically all of the Corinthians on the lower bay have arranged their plans so as to start in the various races. In former years many of the lower bay yachtsmen were not been able to race each day. Conditions will be different this year, judging by the entries already received by the Regatta Committee. Although no yachts are expected from Great South Bay, the Jamaica Bay organizations will be well represented in the regatta.

The Atlantic Yacht Club scheduled a club run today. The race has been postponed, as the Regatta Committee has been too busy with race week plans to bother about smaller fixtures. Later in the season there will be a club after-dinner run for the Sea Gate tars.

Accident at Parkway Matinee.

William Lees was driving M. T. Lewis's Parkway Driving Club at the Parkway race in the weekly light harness matinee of the Parkway Driving Club at the Parkway race track, Brooklyn, yesterday afternoon, when his horse stumbled while traveling at top speed, throwing Lees from the sulky. Ruth Patchen, in second place, was trying to overtake Biretta when the accident occurred. About twenty lengths from the wire the mare stumbled and fell. Her fall lifted the gig into the air, and Lees, who had already lost the reins, was thrown to the track. G. Dalrymple, who was driving behind Ruth Patchen, narrowly missed colliding with the horse and gig.

The Class A pace, the feature event, provided two exciting finishes and a new season record for the track. Buster Brown, a bay gelding owned by W. C. Urban, beat all his times in winning. In all heats Who Knows, a black gelding belonging to J. Leopold, gave the champion close races. Buster Brown by a great burn of speed in the last furlong closed in on Who Knows and won by a length in the splendid time of 2:15—a quarter of a second better than the old mark. In the next brush Who Knows made Buster Brown travel faster, losing the race only by a nose. The victor's time was 2:13¼.

WIND FAILS YACHTS.

Mostly Small Boats in Horseshoe Harbor Y. C. Regatta.

Fifty-three yachts started in the annual regatta of the Horseshoe Harbor club, sailed off Horseshoe Harbor, Larchmont, yesterday. Six of them were sailing canoes, but when it comes to racing on Long Island Sound a sailing canoe is as much a yacht as a schooner is. The largest of the fleet were three of the New York Yacht Club thirty-foot, one-design class. The members of the Regatta Committee were not very well content with the size of the fleet, but with many of the racing yachts on their way home from the New York Yacht Club cruises, and with a considerable number of racing yachtsmen attracted to Manhasset Bay by the motor boat races, the committee did very well to muster fifty-three yachts. Unfortunately, the wind, which was a fair sailing breeze from the west-northwest at the start, fell flat later in the afternoon, and a number of yachts were unable to finish.

This course was from the starting line, off Horseshoe Harbor, to the channel buoy northeast of Huckleberry Island, thence to the obstruction buoy to the northeast of Execution Reef and thence home. Most of the fleet sailed this course twice around, ten miles in all. The smaller boats sailed it once around, five miles. The three thirty-foot yachts made one of the prettiest starts of the season. They were close together, almost abreast, with Hope in windward berth, Alerion II. to leeward and Oku in the middle and leading slightly. They were close together all the way during the first round. Oku was a length or two ahead as they started on the second round and held her advantage until the yachts entered on the last leg. Then here was a luffing match which Oku and Alerion II. continued rather too long, and as a result Hope finished first, 25 seconds ahead of Oku. For these three boats it was a race quickly sailed, as the winner covered the ten miles in slightly more than an hour and a half.

Seven of the Larchmont Interclub boats also made a snappy start. They were all close to the gun and crossed the line in close order. By the time they had sailed once around the course the wind had softened considerably, and their finish was rather tame. Whiff, the winner, was more than four minutes ahead of Skid, the second boat.

Because of the late arrival of two yachts of the handicap class, nine yachts of this class and two of Class R were started on one signal, and there was some very clever work on the part of the skippers in keeping clear. At the end of the first round, half a dozen of this group cut the stern of the committee boats within a few feet, overlapping each other, and there was another exhibition of good seamanship. Clifford Mallory got the best of it by quick handling of his Class R boat Margaret, and got away on the second round well ahead of the rest.

Besides the yachts already mentioned, there were in the fleet two yachts of the Glen Cove Jewel class, six Stars, three dories, three catboats—one of them Fairy, thirty years old, a famous racer in her time—four of the Orienta one-design class, two of the old Class R, so called, and three in a mixed race. The winners were: Class R, Joyetta; handicap class, second division, Sally IX., by one second over Red Wing; handicap class, third division, Jolly Roger; handicap class, fourth division, White Cap; Glen Cove Jewel class, Catseye; New Rochelle one-design class, La Rochelle; dory class, Yan; catboat class, Fairy; Orienta one-design class, Thane; old Class R, Ogeemah; mixed class, Petrel.

Atlantic Yacht Club Winners.

Lower Bay yachtsmen sailed the ninth championship race of the season under the auspices of the Atlantic Yacht Club. The start and finish were off the Sea Gate home of the organization. The wind was west and light. The courses chosen by the Regatta Committee, made up of John R. Brophy, Chairman, and Samuel L. Finlay, gave the yachtsmen plenty of work. In the first class the winner was Virginia. The second division of the handicap class went to Careless on corrected time. In the third division none of the crafts crossed the finish line. The knockabouts had a good race, the winner being Skylark. The Star class was led home by Shadow.

Tie Golf Scores at Watch Hill.

Special to The New York Times.

WATCH HILL, R. I., Aug. 14.—A large number of contestants turned out for the weekly silver cup putting tourney at the Ocean House today, and the close playing resulted in several ties. F. F. Patridge of Holyoke won the men's tournament in 75. H. C. Butcher, Joseph Wayne, H. L. Childs, and Louis Dalzell all had cards of 77, which will mean a play-off for these contestants in a day or so. Mrs. William Green of New York was the winner of the ladies' cup with the score of 75, while Mrs. G. B. Watts of New York finished second in 78.

Peter Mac After New Record.

Special to The New York Times.

GOSHEN, N. Y., Aug. 14.—The management of the Orange County Driving Park Association has completed arrangements to have Peter Mac go against the world's trotting record of 2:07¾ for a stallion over a half-mile track on the opening day of the three days' meeting next Tuesday afternoon. Peter Mac is the holder of this record, and will be driven by his owner, Captain David Shaw of Cleveland, who is 82 years old. Captain Shaw recently refused an offer of $35,000 for Peter Mac.

Three Ties in Greenwich Golf.

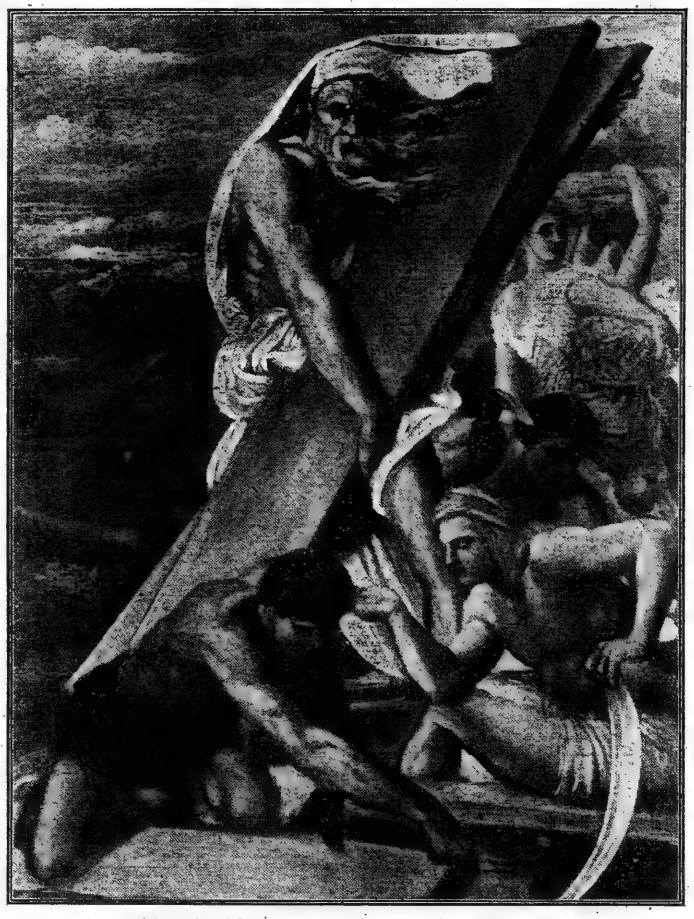
NOAH, NOT ADAM, ATE THE APPLE

Sumerian Bible, 1,000 Years Older Than the Old Testament, Startles Theologians



Noah Building the Ark. (From the Painting by George Frederick Watts.)

ADAM'S reputation has at last been cleared. And so has that of Eve. The forbidden fruit was eaten not by these parents of mankind, but by Noah.

Such, at any rate, is the version of the Fall of Man inscribed in Sumerian characters on a stone tablet found among the ruins of ancient Nippur. And this tablet, bearing on its worn surface a revolutionary variation of the Biblical account of humanity's descent from sinlessness, now rests, carefully guarded, in a glass case in the Museum of the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia.

For several years a triangular fragment of this tablet has been in the museum's possession, and in 1912 Dr. Stephen Langdon of Oxford University copied it. It caused considerable discussion among English and American archaeologists.

Now other portions of this remarkable tablet have been found. They have been pieced together, and Dr. Langdon has succeeded in deciphering them. To the amazement of the scholars of the world, the tablet has been found to contain the Sumerian story of the Flood and the Fall of Man. And this story antedates the Hebrew version, the version given in the Old Testament, by at least one thousand years!

The Sumerians were a race distinguished for piety and culture. Their religious traditions became universal traditions, being adopted by the Semitic peoples who subsequently came upon the scene. And Dr. Langdon advances the startling theory that the Hebrew account of the Fall of Man and the Flood is merely a corrupt version of this Sumerian story, modified by the Eridu tradition.

In his "Sumerian Epic of Paradise, the Flood, and the Fall of Man," just published by the Museum of the University of Pennsylvania, Dr. Langdon advances this novel opinion, and supports it by arguments which archaeologists and students of Biblical history respect. The narrative which he has found graven upon this broken tablet is termed, in the colophon, "A Hymn of Praise." It begins with a description of Paradise, which this epic places in Dilmun. And Dilmun is identified by Dr. Langdon with a strip of land from about the twenty-ninth degree of latitude southward along the eastern coast of the Persian Gulf, including the islands off the coast perhaps as far as the Strait of Ormuz and the Arabian Sea.

In this Paradise, or Eden, mankind dwelt happily, never growing old, never knowing disease. The flocks were not disturbed by beasts of prey, and there were no storms. Enki, the Water God, (who was also the God of Wisdom,) with his consort, Ninella, or Damkina, ruled over mankind. There is a long address in praise of Dilmun's bliss, addressed to Enki by Ninella.

At length, for some reason which is not clearly defined in the epic, Enki grew angry at humanity, and decided to overwhelm it with water. He revealed his purpose to Nintud, the Earth Goddess, who, with the help of Enlil, the Earth God, had created man. Nintud, under the title Ninharsag, helped, according to the tablet, to destroy mankind.

The Flood endured for nine months, and humanity dissolved in the waters "like tallow or fat." But Nintud desired to save the king and some other virtuous people, so she summoned them to the river's bank before the waters rose, and caused them to embark in a boat.

The tablet gives an account of a conversation after the Flood between Nintud and Tagtug, the hero who apparently headed the company that escaped drowning. Tagtug is dignified by the title of a god.

Nintud, we learn, interceded for Tagtug, and explained to Enki how it was that this man escaped a watery death. Enki became reconciled to Tagtug, called him to his temple and revealed secrets to him.

Tagtug (like Adam) became a gardener. He was told that he might eat the fruit of every tree but one. This one, which was the cassia, Nintud expressly forbade him to taste.

But Tagtug (again like Adam) disobeyed the supernatural injunction, and ate of the forbidden fruit. As a result, he was afflicted with bodily weakness. For the first time mankind knew disease. The longevity of the prediluvian age was no longer humanity's portion.

But the gods took pity on their fallen children. They sent to them patrons of healing, of plants, and of the various arts, to aid them in their laborious lives.

This story, it will be noted, makes no specific mention of a fall from primeval innocence. But it may be inferred that mankind had disobeyed Enki in some way when that god sent the waters to cover the earth. Therefore, Dr. Langdon believes, the tablet contains accounts of the fall from purity and of the fall from longevity. The fall from longevity, if that phrase may be used, seems to be considered the greater disaster of the two.

This Sumerian narrative resembles and differs from the Biblical story in numerous interesting ways. According to the Hebrew tradition, (which is, it must be remembered, younger than this tablet by 1,000 years,) Adam and Eve forfeited the blessings of Paradise almost immediately after the Creation. But this tablet, as Dr Langdon interprets it, states that mankind enjoyed Paradise until the Flood came.

Dr. Langdon does not base his identification of Tagtug with Noah upon the obvious resemblance of their adventures during the Flood. By an elaborate and closely wrought argument, which can be clearly followed only by an advanced philologist who has specialized in Semitic and Sumerian dialects, he shows that since the Sumerian word "tug" is regularly rendered in Semitic by "nahu," which means "to repose," therefore "tag-tug" may be rendered by "nu-uh." The permansive singular of this would be "nu-uh," which means "he is appeased," and possibly "God is appeased." From this it is easy to derive the Hebrew word "Noah." Dr. Langdon does not, however, regard this interesting theory as proved.

In Dr. Langdon's literal translation, the Earth-goddess is variously styled Nintud, Ninharsag, and Ninkurra. Damgal-Nunna, who is mentioned in Obverse II., is thought to be identical with Ninella, (called also Damkina,) Enki's consort and daughter.

This is Dr. Langdon's literal rendering of this extraordinary graven legend. The numbers refer to the lines of hieroglyphics, to the texts, it may be said, of this Bible a thousand years older than the Old Testament. The breaks in the wording indicate that the inscriptions are undecipherable. For convenience, the sentences are here combined into paragraphs. Conjectural meanings are indicated by the use of italics, and parentheses or brackets inclose words that the translator has supplied.

OBVERSE I.

AN UNWISE QUESTION

THE cross-examining lawyer had adopted a rather unpleasant tone in questioning the witness, who, however, kept his temper.

"Have you ever been arrested?" was among the questions put.

"No, Sir."

"Have you been in this court before?"

"No, Sir."

"Are you sure of that?"

"Yes, Sir."

"Your face looks very familiar—very familiar. Where have I seen it before?"

"I am the bartender in the saloon across the street."

Paradoxical.

Hokus—I'm in low spirits this morning. Too much roof garden last night.

Pokus—I had a high old time in a rathskeller.

TO PROLONG LIFE, AVOID POISONS

Most Well-to-do Men Are Committing Suicide by What They Eat, Declares a London Expert

By Dr. C. W. Saleeby.

(All rights reserved. Copyrighted by The New York Times.)

LIKE most real revolutions, this one is proceeding gradually, by evolution. It is going on now. The Australian native at 45 shows the same age-changes as we show at 65; he is the lowest type of man, and we are representatives of the highest.

We inherit from our ancestors a greater longevity than he does, though he is far longer lived than the ape ancestors of all mankind. And observe that the Australian native is not a drunkard, does not have a large supper after the theatre as well as a large dinner before it, takes plenty of exercise, and is, in fact, a thoroughgoing exponent of the simple life in most essential respects.

All this goes to show, by an extreme contrast of races, that heredity plays in this matter the post of first importance which I, as a eugenist, claim for it in respect of practically all our characteristics, good, bad, and indifferent.

It is the same within such a race as ourselves. In general, the long-lived people are the descendants of the long-lived. The actuaries and the statisticians have proved that beyond all dispute, and it is the outstanding fact which the famous man of science, Professor Metchnikoff, has forgotten in his well-known book on the "Prolongation of Life."

Of course, people do not recognize the importance of heredity here any more than elsewhere, and so every old gentleman has his explanation of his long life—that he is a vegetarian or a flesh eater, a regular moderate drinker or an abstainer, a smoker or non-smoker, and so forth. You can prove anything from the records of such cases, if you cannot be bothered to be scientific and look up the pedigrees of these people.

But then we find the explanation. Many inherit their longevity, as the whole of the higher races do compared with the native Australians, and probably this means that they have an inherited power of resisting poisons and the results of bad habits, to which other people succumb sooner or later.

Longevity usually goes with much energy and power of work, which are qualities usually displayed by and necessary for famous men. So we find that a large proportion of famous people live to be old, and can usually do good work in their later years. Recent examples like Spencer and Meredith, Kelvin and Galton, Lister and Booth could be multiplied to any extent.

Thus the surest way of lengthening life would be to have those people marry and become parents who have longevity in their blood, and on the whole no doubt this would mean a much more active, energetic, competent, and happy race of men and women.

But that kind of eugenics is out of the question, and we had better consider the possibilities. Life is being greatly lengthened, on the average, simply because so many infants and children are being saved. That increases the average length of life, but it is not exactly what we mean by the lengthening of life here.

Life is also being lengthened by the reduction of consumption and other diseases in early and middle adult life. It was recently estimated by the National Conservation Commission in the United States that a reduction by three-fourths of such diseases as consumption and typhoid, which are entirely preventable, would increase the average length of life more than fifteen years. In England that reduction is going on, and far more people, consequently, live on to later life, instead of being cut down in maturity.

But then the real problem of the lengthening of life arises. In our fifties the strain of modern existence begins to tell, as a report of Dr. Newsholme has told us. The arteries and the heart show those "age-changes," which in happier people do not appear until the seventies are approached, and which even the wisely living native Australian shows before his fifties.

The truth is that when the importance of heredity has been stated we have to admit that few of us are wise enough to reach the age limit to which our heredity entitles us. The real way of prolonging life, as a famous German student said, is to avoid shortening it.

That is the real revolution which is upon us. People are slowly beginning to listen to the voice of hygiene, and though nothing can exceed the span to which their heredity entitles them, at any rate they can reach it if they will. And, in a word, the advice of hygiene to the man or woman who wants a long life and a merry one is to avoid poisons. It is poisoning, not wearing out, that finishes most of us.

Dr. C. W. Saleeby.

Life will keep on making good the wear and tear of our days if only we do not poison the forces of rejuvenation within us. But we kill ourselves with the poisons which are made in our own bodies and with those which we swallow ready made.

Most of the well-to-do men of today, anywhere over 50, are committing a slow suicide. Any doctor who examined their arteries and asked what they ate and drank every day could tell them as much. They "dig their graves with their teeth," for they eat far too much and their food contains small quantities of many poisons which gradually spoil their arteries, and then the man will soon be old.

As for alcohol, which doctors used to prescribe so generously, they are changing their tune nowadays. Dr. George Keith, who wrote "A Plea for a Simpler Life"; Sir Hermann Weber, and Sir Thomas Clouston have begun to convert the profession in England, and the life insurance companies are completing the task.

The man who avoids alcohol lives several years longer, on the average, than the moderate drinker, and has less illness meanwhile. He gets a long life, and a merry one to boot.

The net result of all these changes in the national habit and in the control of the death rate during maturity is that the community grows older year by year, in the sense that the average age of those who compose it steadily rises. The birth rate keeps on falling, there are fewer babies, children, and young people, while there are more and more elderly men and women, who would have been in their graves at any former period of human history.

And this process is steadily maintained, with the result that the community of the future will be older than ever, with far fewer births and deaths going on in proportion to its numbers. Is this a good prospect or a bad one?

It would be a poor lookout if it meant that the world was going to become conservative, without enthusiasm, enjoying life very little, and given to sober reflection on the mutability of human hopes. Life without joy is not worth living, and joy is the especial privilege of youth. But I do not anticipate the disappearance of joy and the establishment of a gray, sound, safe scheme of existence by the elderly population of tomorrow.

For youth is a state of the soul, and the beauty of the lengthening of life, as we are now achieving it, is that it really means the lengthening of youth. If your arteries are soft, if you still believe in life and love and friendship and the future, it does not matter a straw how old your body may be; you are still young, for your soul is young, and youth is a state of the soul.

Man is not like a tree, which puts on a circle of wood every year and can have its age reckoned accordingly. What this revolution will achieve is really the marriage of two precious things which have hitherto been displayed, except by the rare few, at different times of life. By themselves they are valuable, but in conjunction they are beyond all price. Their names are enthusiasm and experience.

As a rule, hitherto, when we have the first the second is still lacking, and when we have acquired the second the first has fled. My great master, Sir Francis Galton, whom I knew in his eighties, was the perfect illustration of the union to which I refer; he was incredibly wise and experienced, but he had the heart of a boy, and was always the youngest man in the room. And the eugenics which he founded will change the world accordingly.

No doubt youth will have to wait longer for its prizes. We shall not have many more Prime Ministers in their early twenties, like Pitt. On the other hand, we shall not have our heroes dying of drink and gout in their forties, like the statesmen of the past. "Youth will be served," as it always will, so long as life itself is young; but it will be youth much longer than it used to be, and so can wait.

The beauty of a girl among the lower races and types of mankind is all gone at 22 or 24; at 35 the woman is an old hag. Things are very different among ourselves, and what is true of the beauty of woman is true of the deepest characteristics of both sexes. It is a great and a beneficent change, none the less great because we are so largely unconscious of it.

FROM HERE AND THERE

Fists Have Won the V. C.

SKILL in fisticuffs has several times won the Victoria Cross. At Inkerman, for instance, Captain Hugh Rowlands saved his commanding officer, Colonel Hay, by a straight left-hander. Hay was wounded and lying on the ground, with a gigantic Russian standing over him and about to plunge a bayonet to his heart, when Rowlands, who had lost his sword, smashed the Russian with his left hand, knocking the man unconscious. Rowlands got the V. C.

At Jeerum, in India, during the Indian Mutiny, General James Blair, whose sword had been broken off at the hilt and who had no other weapon, dashed into a crowd of armed mutineers and knocked five of them down with his fists in a few seconds. The Victoria Cross also went to him.

Another officer whose sword broke at the handle while in action was Admiral "Tug" Wilson, who, at El Teb, bowled over six Arabs with his fists. He not only won the V. C., but also his nickname, being called "Tug" Wilson after an English boxer who about that time had gained brief notoriety by fighting John L. Sullivan, the heavyweight champion boxer of the world.

The Comprador of China.

AMERICANS and Europeans going to China to establish import and export business naturally find at the outset a barrier to intercourse with the natives in the language and customs of the country. The foreigner may know how to transact business with other whites, but is ignorant of how to do business with the Chinese.

To overcome this difficulty the comprador came into existence. He is a Chinaman, speaking "pidgin" English (corruption of "business" English), a strange mixture of English with Chinese accent, Portuguese, and Chinese, and the principal means of communication between foreigners and the commercial Chinese. The comprador is usually a man of good financial standing who handles business with other Chinamen, and he is to some extent in partnership with the foreign import and export merchant.

All sales to Chinese are referred to him. He passes upon their credit, makes the sales, collects the money, and simply accounts to the foreign partner, who knows little or nothing of the Chinese end of the business, just as the comprador knows nothing of the American or European end of the business. In fact, each keeps a separate set of books and the comprador often employs his own clerks and salesmen.

New Names for Old Initials.

BRITISH soldiers at the front are applying new significations to old initials. For instance, the R. F. A.—Royal Field Artillery—is being called the Ready For Anything. The men of King Edward's Horse say that K. E. H. means Kill Every Hun.

The unkindest interpretation is that put upon the letters R. A. M. C.—Royal Army Medical Corps. Some wounded soldiers have complained of missing belongings after their things have passed into the keeping of the R. A. M. C., so they declare the initials really now stand for Rob All My Comrades.

SOUTH WILL INSPIRE OUR MUSIC

Composers Here Must Follow the Example of Dvorak and Puccini, Says Professor Mildenberg

Albert Mildenberg.

The interesting article on the future of American music printed below is by Professor Albert Mildenberg, Dean of the Department of Music at Meredith College, Raleigh, N. C. It consists in part of a lecture delivered recently by him before the Folk Lore Society of the North Carolina Historical Association.

By Professor Albert Mildenberg.

THE South will provide the basis upon which the national music of America will rest. The South, with its romance, sentiment, and those qualities of aristocratic family connections, an aristocracy that still lives, a romance that still lives, a sentiment still alive in the hearts of the people here, will give to musical expression written and composed here its warmer tints. We do not find in the North that men and women have retained so much of the kindlier sentiments of human nature as we find in the South.

For some years a group of men, American by birth and of Puritanical ideas and sentiments in the extreme, have devoted their lives to composition in music. These men have lived for the most part in the North of our country, and have been educated there. And it is true that they produced works that, from a technical standpoint, may not be criticised as to their mastery of form. These graduates of the Northern schools have written sonatas and symphonies in perfect form, but their attention has been directed toward their mastery of form, rather than toward the cultivation of a vivid imagination.

The result has been that these works stand out as splendid examples of form but have failed utterly in their poetic appeal to the musical public. Some of the men in the North have also written grand operas, and those whose works have been produced have failed utterly by reason of the fact that none of them have shown an appreciation for the theatre and the theatrical qualities necessary to make an opera a success.

A very important reason for these failures has been the character of the stories selected. Their librettos have lacked every quality of dramatic incident or human interest. They have been well written pieces of literature in some cases. The good points, however, have been spoiled rather than helped by their musical setting.

The songs written by Stephen Foster have lived longer and will continue to live and be sung for many more years than all the symphonic or operatic music so far produced by Northern composers.

These same men have attempted to advance the theory that the fabric of American music will be constructed from the tunes, songs, and dances that they have been able to collect in their research among the American Indians. I fear they are beginning at the wrong end, for certainly no sane musician can conscientiously believe that the wild war yells and screeching guttural noises with which we are familiar, in Indian so-called music, can find its place in the fabric of American music as a basis.

The year 1914 will prove a year to be remembered for some things greater and better than this horrible war. It will be the year that America has declared her artistic independence of the Old World. Not that we have lost our reverence for the great monuments to art that Europe has reared up—we can never repay them with all the money and gifts that we have sent over to them for what we have been able to absorb from our association with and study of their great arts.

But we have reached that point in our development when we can stand on our own feet. We do not need the prop of a European education longer to be able to take that natural talent to be found in the numberless students of American birth and parentage and develop it to the very highest perfection.

We are on the eve of a great art as well as commercial renaissance, and at no time in our history shall we come face to face with a greater opportunity to develop our own arts than now.

This renaissance, in so far as it affects our art culture, can be entirely overshadowed by the great commercial awakening that is now upon us, and it remains for you and me and the entire art and student world in America to compel a recognition, not only by Europe but by our own land, of these qualities possessed by Americans that go to make up an artistic nation.

We have traditions that must be respected. We have ideas in art that Europe must learn to respect and look upon with less of a patronizing air than they have been willing to accord us up to the present.

Up to a short time ago those men to whom we looked for musical criticism of high order were unwilling to accord to the South that place which rightfully belongs to her in the creation of a distinct type of music, that is as individual as any Russian, Polish, Scandinavian or Slavic folk song. Those very men today are compiling books of American Southern song—and why? It is because two of the greatest musicians of this age have come to the South of our country to find material upon which to construct two of the greatest musical compositions produced in the last twenty-five years.

One of these men has come all the way from Bohemia to find in the South a theme suitable to express what the New World meant to him. He did not find it in the great metropolis of New York. He could not. Nor in Pittsburgh or Chicago. Was it not most natural for a great man such as Dvorak to travel to our large cities first to gain any impression of us as a people? Well, he did travel to our great cities, but he did not find any inspiration in them. He came to the South, and he did find in the South his inspiration for one of the loveliest, sweetest, and most sympathetic melodies that exists in modern classical literature in symphonic form.

We now come to a different phase in the development of music in this country—that of the entrée into its life of the great Italian opera composer, Puccini.

I can refer back to the opening remarks I made, when I accounted for the failure of the American opera composers of their selections as to plot-story or libretto. It is true that the works of Horatio Parker, winner of the opera prize, have utterly failed because of his choice of subjects to write on. The quality of the literature of his libretto was of the best, but that did not save it from failure.

It was the absence of the human element, the heart interest episode, the sympathetic touch, that caused its failure to reach the great mass of the music-loving public.

When Puccini selected Belasco's "Girl of the Golden West" as the subject of his operatic enterprise he recognized immediately in its story a succession of episodes that bespoke a human interest, a romance, a picturesque surrounding, and then, when he wanted to intensify its heart and sympathetic interest, what did he do? He came to the South. He was misled into thinking at first that the rubbish, the unspeakable slang of music called ragtime, represented the basis of our musical expression. I may be pardoned for claiming a part of the responsibility for changing his impressions, because I played for him in his little mountain home in Tuscany, where I stayed ten days, as many of the old plantation melodies as I could remember. I am happy to have arrived in time to prevent so great a man from getting a wrong impression of our American folk song.

For some reason men of the North are unwilling to accord the South the place she rightfully deserves for providing these great men with this material they have used so richly, for providing them with an inspiration that has brought forth into the world two great compositions that will live as long as good music lives. It matters little whether Harvard or Yale professors will allow that the Southern plantation songs are sufficiently dignified to represent the American people in the art of music as it develops in this country. Antonin Dvorak, to whom music was a language, was able to discern the characteristics of this new idiom and to recognize its availability and value. He also recognized that music is entitled to be called characteristic of a people which gives the greatest pleasure to the largest fraction of a people.

To my mind these melodies are not negro melodies in the essence. As a matter of fact, that which is most characteristic in our folk songs has come from the negro slaves' singing of them. It may be these slaves lived in a period of emotional environment which produced folk song. By reason of the fact that the negro is musical by nature, and lived a life that had in it romantic elements of pleasure, as well as suffering, a leaning toward superstition, some imagination, as well as the power of mimicry, he has imitated what he remembered of the songs and tunes heard at some time, and in the course of the evolution of these tunes, with their own variations and changes, he has really evolved a repertoire of songs and melodies that might be called his own. Music and dancing are the negro's passion—he loves them. Those songs and tunes that he sings are hardly his own originally, but as he produces them now he can defy the white man to imitate them.

After all, it matters not whether the music produced by American-born composers has anything about it that you may characterize as being a recognizable American quality—the whole question is: Is it good music? If it is good music it will have a recognizable melody—and melody appeals to the great public, the masses.

Among modern workers, who would attempt to question the compelling genius of Rodin in his rough-hewn masterpieces. We do not demand qualities that show a nationalism in the painting or sculpture of Italy, Germany, or France, or the literature or drama of these countries. We simply demand good art.

If the matter of deciding what progress has been made in our national music is to rest on the decisions made in the recent opera contests, the whole scheme of the study of music in America must be changed, for the following reasons:

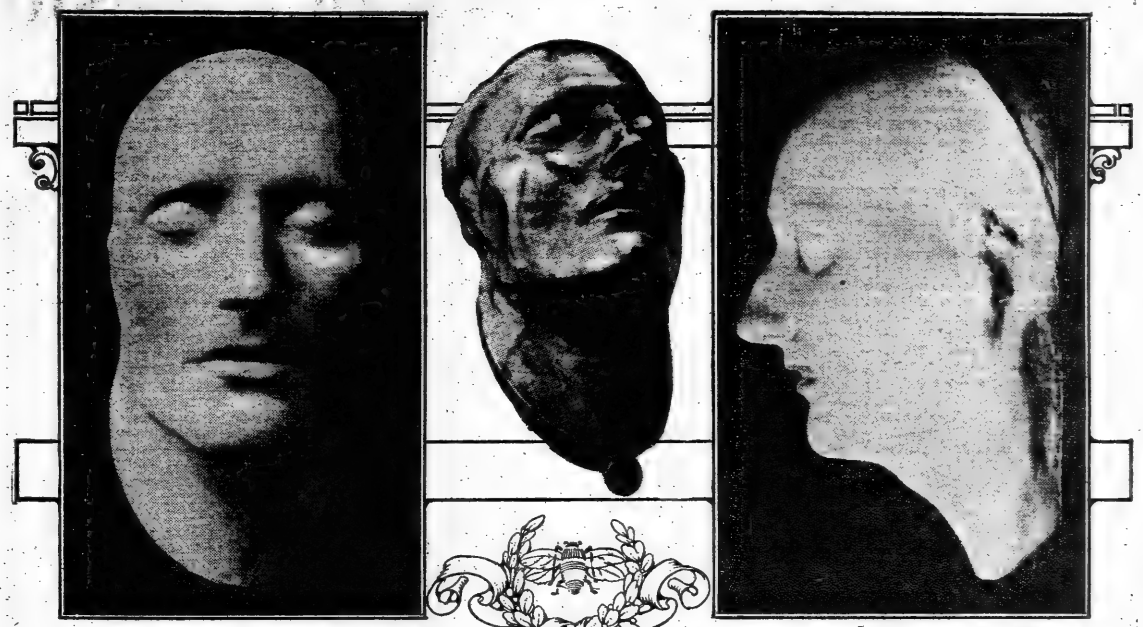
Opera has no musical form. It is a dramatic, living thing; its musical element is only one part of it. It stands to reason that we as a nation must first master the classic forms and then, having this as a basis, let the composer acquire theatrical experience and proceed to write opera. Verdi, Wagner, Puccini were first of all master stage craftsmen and then musicians—the result is that their operatic work smacks in every phrase of the stage, the theatre, and its peculiar dramatic demands.

The American musician has until quite recently been unable to acquaint himself sufficiently with the theatrical side of musical writing in this country—one reason being the limited amount of opera produced here.

To judge what will be the most compelling moving force in the formation of the music produced in this country by native composers will not mean merely the examination by a jury of men of indifferent equipment of a manuscript and the passing up of forty or fifty works without a hearing. European art centres have not built up their bulwark of native art in this way. No jury is able to decide whether a work is good or not until it is put on the stage and produced. This is the way France, Italy, Germany, and, in fact, all other art centres have found the works they have produced.

Of course I do not mean that a work that is obviously unfit cannot be recognized at sight. But no musician is able offhand to read over an orchestrated score and grasp the dramatic values of the libretto, story plot, and even the pantomime necessary to the production of a lyric composition. It is impossible. It takes the united talents of a stage manager, conductor, and the acting artists themselves to draw the values out and place them before the reader of the score—to say nothing of the effects of the scenery, costumes and lights, &c.

This is an expensive undertaking, but it is the only legitimate, just, and fair way to find the right works. Successes are only picked from failures. It is so in the field of the playwright; it must be so in that much more intangible field of musical dramatic writing. The American dramatist is far in the lead today. The American musician will quickly catch up if he will look to the South for his inspiration. Poland, in the direst hour of her misery, was never more riven than the South after the civil war, yet Poland smiled again. So has the South. Coin her joy and suffering into music and wrap it about with Southern picturesqueness and you will have a rich picture to look upon, a wholesome, melodious, and heart-stirring music to soothe the ear.



The Sankey Cast, Full Face. "Souscription Antommarchi" 1833-4 First State. The Sankey Cast, Side Face.

MYSTERY OF NAPOLEON DEATH MASK

New Light on Controversy That Has Raged for Years Over Antommarchi and Sankey Casts

THAT the so-called Antommarchi death mask of Napoleon was not the work of Dr. Antommarchi at all, but of the English physician, Dr. Francis Burton, that the mysterious "Sankey" cast was secretly taken by the painter Rubidge from the original as it stood drying in a room off the death chamber, and that it was Mme. Bertrand who stole the Burton mask, are the conclusions which G. L. de St. M. Watson, one of the best known of the Napoleonic iconographers, presents to the public in a volume entitled "The Story of Napoleon's Death Mask," (New York, John Lane Company, $2.)

The story of Napoleon's death mask has always been shrouded in mystery. Controversy has raged over it for a hundred years. After the great conqueror died Europe swarmed with masks and busts of him, each purporting to be the original one molded on his face. Eventually the spurious creations were disposed of and the genuine mask was located.

Then arose a veritable tempest. Who made the mask? For the honor was claimed both by the English Dr. Burton and the Italian Dr. Antommarchi. In spite of the fact that there were many witnesses at Longwood at the time of Napoleon's death, in spite of the fact that more than a dozen were present when the mask was taken, none seemed to know just who deserved the credit for it.

Then there appeared another cast to complicate the problem. This was the puzzling "Sankey" cast. In appearance it was somewhat different from the Antommarchi-Burton cast. Yet when the measurements were taken they exactly coincided with those of the Burton-Antommarchi mask. Moreover, the "Sankey" cast had the following guarantee:

"Loose, 20th Oct., 1862.

"This cast was taken from the face of Napoleon Bonaparte as he lay dead at Longwood, St. Helena, by Mr. Rubidge, 7 May, 1821; which I do hereby certify. R. BOYS, M. A.,

"Incumbent of Loose and Senr. Chaplain, St. Helena."

Before this testimony the controversialists have paused. The Rev. Richard Boys was a gentleman of "unswerving rectitude and intrepidity of utterance." It is difficult to doubt his word. But how does it happen that the painter Rubidge obtained a mask of Napoleon, a task that would have required at the least a full hour, unobserved by any of the numerous Longwood household?

These are the obstinate contradictions which only now, after the passage of nearly a century, are coming into some sort of agreement. Mr. Watson has patiently subjected all the original documents in the case, as well as the great mass of subsequent testimony, to a microscopic examination. Piecing this information with some new facts which he has uncovered, he has managed to pierce the mystery of the Napoleon death mask.

This is the story as Mr. Watson has unraveled it:

On the day of Napoleon's death there was talk among both the French and the English members of the Longwood household of taking a cast. No one knows very much about the decidedly delicate operation of molding from the features after death. Besides, a special sort of plaster must be used. A hunt for plaster on the island was begun.

By the next morning an indifferent lot of plaster had been scraped up. But when it came to the actual business of molding the cast, Napoleon's Italian physician, Antommarchi, backed out. He flatly refused to make the attempt.

Dr. Burton assumed the task. Napoleon's head was shaved; the plaster applied. When it had set, the two parts, front and back, were removed and set away.

On the next morning, Monday, while Napoleon was lying in state in the little sitting room of Longwood, fresh and better plaster arrived. With this Dr. Burton took the cast, the "fons et origo," says Mr. Watson, "of all the death masks of Napoleon that ever were or ever will be."

It was left to dry the whole day and the night of the 7th. But when the doctor went back in the morning to examine it the thief in the night had come and gone, and the face was missing; only the "back part" of the cast—one-third of the total skull—remained.

The thief was Mme. Bertrand, the high-spirited, unsensitive, scheming, and ambitious Fanny Dillon, wife of Grand Marshal Bertrand, who had been at Napoleon's right hand ever since his Captaincy in Egypt. Mme. Bertrand was the one person of his household at St. Helena whom Napoleon could not control absolutely. She refused to live at Longwood, she complained continuously and made her complaints widely known, she refused the ordeal of dining at Longwood, she would not accompany the Napoleonic party on its tedious walks. She had an abounding curiosity and a minimum of sentiment; she it was who at the post-mortem insisted on inserting her finger in the hole made by the cancerous growth in Napoleon's stomach. She demanded that she be given his heart to carry back to France with her; in fact, in those last days she made the best of her opportunities, and capped the climax by sailing off in the Camel with Dr. Burton's precious mask.

Dr. Burton wrote most vigorously, demanding the restitution of what he was entitled to consider his property. Then there were evasions, cajoling, half promises. But Mme. Bertrand kept the mask, you may be sure of that.

The next Summer Antommarchi was the guest of the Bertrands. And here Mr. Watson makes a guess. The Bertrands produced the treasured cast and the Italian took a second impression and from it made a second cast. But he said nothing about it for nearly eight years. Then Doctor Burton suddenly died. Immediately Antommarchi came forward with the 1833-4 editions of plaster and bronze masks, taken, according to his claim, from the original cast. Immediately he put forward his right as the author of the original death mask of Napoleon. Doctor Burton was dead.

Europe was so excited over the "editions" of the Napoleonic mask that began to circulate that no one bothered over much with investigating Antommarchi's claim. The mask was evidently the original one. But the public was considerably shocked by it. For the public had been trained, in the fifteen years that had elapsed since Napoleon left the shores of France forever, to take as truth the various idealizations of the Emperor's face which the artists and writers had concocted.

The Antommarchi cast came as a surprise. It exhibited no massive skull, no huge frontal development. The forehead was narrow, the curves were delicate. "Whatever this man's station in life, he will play his part in a suitable way, but he will never accomplish anything great or extraordinary," concluded the expert phrenologists to whom the cast was given for "reading." "Very beautiful artistically but very common phrenologically," was the estimate placed on the head of Napoleon as revealed by the cast.

This shifting of the centre of the controversy from the authorship to the genuineness of the mask was, in Mr. Watson's opinion, largely responsible for the growth of the Antommarchi fiction:

"The chief thing for us to notice is that, while many people questioned the authenticity or the genuineness of the mask, none cast the shadow of a doubt upon its authorship; it might or might not be the head of Napoleon, it might or might not have been made at St. Helena, but it was certainly something molded by Antommarchi—and thus the legend stood unaffected."

Thus Antommarchi gained courage. In 1834 he exhibited casts from the original molds in London. But this was coming too near home. Several members of Dr. Burton's family were still living in Ireland. Finally Dr. Robert Graves of Dublin, a cousin of Dr. Burton, came forward with a lecture in which he declared that Antommarchi did not make the mask of Napoleon. He gave the facts, for the most part accurately. But they were little heeded. No one took the trouble to match up Antommarchi's lumbering statements, his discrepancies in dates, his amazing use of technical terms with the facts as Dr. Graves gave them and as they were to be found in the scattered testimony of other witnesses at Longwood during the last days.

So the legend went on. It was further increased by a sub-legend which circulated abroad the amazing information that a cast was taken from Napoleon's face at the time of exhumation in 1840. This preposterous statement was actually believed, although it was officially made clear that the coffin was open for one minute and a half only, and the taking of a mold requires at least an hour.

Moreover, another cast made its appearance, this time in wax, and woodcuts of it for a time flooded European journals. Mr. Watson wastes few words over it, branding it as a ridiculous fiction. This is his description of it:

"Let it be bluntly said that nothing, not avowedly in caricature, more grotesque and more preposterous exists in the whole range of Napoleonic iconography. The mouth and eyes are out of all proportion with the remainder of the face, and the expression is about as human as that of a mask of Melpomene. * * *

"But outré as the main features are they are capped—and very literally so—by a mountainous forehead, rising sheer from the root of the nose to a height equal to the distance from the closed lids to the chin."

The only thing to which this cast bears the slightest resemblance is a thumbnail of Napoleon's profile made by Dr. Arnott at Napoleon's bedside. This probably inspired the cast, guesses Mr. Watson. In Miss Tarbell's "Life of Napoleon" this wax cast is reproduced, "for the second, and let us hope the last, time," says Mr. Watson, and she attributes the cast to Dr. Arnott himself, although there is absolutely no authority for this.

Thus the confusion multiplied. In 1909, however, M. Frederic Masson picked up a few clues from the Graves lecture of 1835, put two and two together, and came out with a refutation of Antommarchi's claim to the authorship of Napoleon's death mask. But M. Masson's compilation of fact was not in every sense accurate, though Mr. Watson has grudgingly to admit that his conclusion was correct enough. But his further inference that Antommarchi himself stole the original mold which Dr. Burton made Mr. Watson promptly punctures.

As if Antommarchi's imposture was not sufficiently egregious, M. Masson proceeds to paint him blacker than he already was and to saddle him with the additional theft of Burton's original mold; and he devotes two pages of his article to various idle speculations as to what eventually became of that mold.

Now Burton's original mold, fashioned on the face of Napoleon, was destroyed; perforce destroyed, as all "waste molds" must be.

How M. Masson could sit down to indite a thirty-page article on the death mask of Napoleon without taking the trouble of making himself acquainted with the rudiments of the process of molding and casting, is a thing that really baffles understanding.

For in fashioning death masks the mold is removed from the face in two or three pieces when set and then bound together again. Plaster is then poured into the hollow head formed, through the neck opening, and when it is dry the outside shell, which is the original mold, must be carefully chipped away. Thus it would be absolutely impossible to preserve the so-called waste mold.

M. Masson's paper, however, by no means demolished the Antommarchi legend, Mr. Watson shows, probably because of the palpable inaccuracies which weakened his whole argument. But Mr. Watson, by his painstaking readjustment of facts, has succeeded in establishing that the cast descended from the Bertrands to their daughter, Mme. Thayer, and from her to Prince Victor Napoleon, who owns it today, is the genuine death mask of Napoleon, and that it was made by Dr. Francis Burton.

But how about the mysterious Sankey cast?

This is now in the possession of Dr. J. O. Sankey of Oxford. It, too, portrays a face very different from that usually associated with Napoleon.

There is nothing in the cast of that expansive brow of the Olympian Jove, nothing of Trajan's massiveness, nothing, too, of that columnar Neronian neck which the portraits and medals have stereotyped and transmitted for so many years. * * *

In the cast, just as in the earliest Bonaparte portraits, the jaws do not close after the manner of the accepted cliché of the Imperial days. Contrary to what one finds in the highest and handsomest type of Tuscan face, Napoleon's jaws did not wholly and squarely meet, being slightly overhung in front. * * * When the teeth were clenched tight the edges of the lower incisors must have been a little above and in retreat of the upper.

In other words, Napoleon's mouth and chin was not nearly so "strong" as the artists and biographers have made us believe. They did not mention the fact, either, which is silently shown in the cast, that Napoleon's chin was crooked, the right hand point being a full quarter of an inch lower than the left.

Moreover, the brow was not massive, nor was the skull unusually large. The circumference was but 22½ inches, "the average record amongst the educated middle classes in our country."

The Sankey cast is much more beautiful than the Burton cast.

Time, which imparts its patina to the most garish stone, has turned the crude chalky white to a soft, shadowy gray that simulates the "ashes of death" more nearly than any alabaster or marble could do. It has given this mask, with the chiseled nose and the rounded brow, though not the tint, at least the tone of an old carving in ivory.

The pallid, clear-cut face of the dead Consul is doubly evoked, in configuration and in grain.

This is the cast which the Rev. Richard Boys, the grandfather of Dr. Sankey, testified was "taken from the face of Napoleon Bonaparte as he lay dead at Longwood, St. Helena, by Mr. Rubidge."

Joseph William Rubidge was a young portrait painter who had gone out to St. Helena a short time before Napoleon's death. He attained considerable note by the portrait which he executed at Napoleon's bedside. The picture, which is familiar to many, shows the Emperor laid out on the camp-bed, dressed in uniform and hat, his head propped with pillows, and the crucifix on his breast.

Dr. Boys testified that Rubidge gave him the cast before he left St. Helena. Even the most widely-doubting of the controversialists were not able to deny the statement of this honest and plain-spoken old chaplain.

But it is the very agreement of the Sankey cast with the Burton cast which Mr. Watson advances as proof that Rubidge could not have taken a mold of Napoleon's features. The two casts, although differing, at first glance, in superficial appearance, present exactly the same measurements. Mr. Watson, by consultation with Dr. Arthur Keith, President of the Anthropological Society and the leading craniologist of Europe, has come to the conclusion that the Sankey cast was derived from the same original matrix as the "Antommarchi mask," that is, from the original waste mold made by Dr. Burton. For "it is absolutely impossible," says Mr. Watson, "for two molds to be fashioned on the face of the dead, whether by the same person or by two different ones, with or without an interval of time, and have them alike in the minutest details. The plaster cannot be laid twice in exactly the same manner; the soft, yielding parts of the face do not respond again in precisely the same way; and even if the main features are strictly similar, there is a marked difference in the set of the lips, the protrusion of the eyeballs, &c."

How did Rubidge manage to duplicate the Burton mask so exactly? This is Mr. Watson's theory:

"Some time in the afternoon of the 7th of May, while Burton's cast, as yet unabstracted, lay hard and dry in the chamber, of which 'the portrait painter' was needs free, Rubidge, au fait as an artist with plastic processes, must have taken a clay 'squeeze,' or a wax impression, or some other non-plaster negative of the 'front part' of the said cast; this unknown to Burton, but quite conceivably with the privity of some member of the household. This 'secondary' mold, whatever its nature, Rubidge cut into five pieces, the largest comprising just the bare oval of the face, from the roots of the hair to the turn of the chin, (i. e., the 'mask' in its narrowest sense,) and from it, some time before he sailed, executed the Sankey cast, with the excellent gypsum which, pace Burton and Antommarchi, was to be found, and at leisure properly worked up, within an easy ride of his dwelling.

"The difference between the Sankey and Burton casts is accounted for by the fact that Rubidge sandpapered his cast, giving the smooth finish which is lacking in the impressions taken from the Burton mask. It was, in its way, a concession to the sham classicism of the day, a very humble tribute to the sculpture and the glyptics of the Davidian school, an attenuated echo of Greek impassiveness as against the life of a Michael Angelo * * * or a Rodin. For, with an untouched expert's death mask, even at the stage of the earliest secondary cast, such as the one of Napoleon III. shown me by Messrs. Brussiani or the half dozen at the National Portrait Gallery, there is nothing whatever of that marmoreal smoothness of effect. The grain of the skin, the wrinkles and other rugosities, the pore texture almost, are exactly reproduced; there is something uncanny in the fidelity to nature. With an "original" cast chipped out of the waste mold, the translation becomes really repellent; one such, taken from the face of an aged lady recently deceased, showed a minute reticulation, like the skin crinklings of a shriveled apple."

This clears up the mystery. Mr. Watson has put his discoveries in the following schematic form:

WOMEN in England are wearing "Proud-of-Him" badges. These badges are made of metal, enameled in colors, with the design of the Union Jack. They are inscribed either "Husband with the Colours," "Son with the Colours," "Brother with the Colours," or "Father with the Colours."

Java is the only one of the Dutch East Indies that has been fully opened and developed. Sumatra is being gradually exploited, and the unfriendly tribes brought under control, but Borneo and New Guinea—part of each of which is owned by the Dutch—and minor islands are as yet but little developed. The total area of the Dutch possessions in the Malay Archipelago is 779,000 square miles, while the population is 37,400,000.

Canada's population now exceeds 8,000,000, according to a recent estimate from Ottawa.

About five-sevenths of the Bulgarians are engaged in agriculture, most of them being small proprietors, holding from one to six acres.

Attacks by aeroplanes upon German cities near the battle fronts, especially on the west, have created a demand for insurance against injuries from bombs thrown from them. One of the insurance companies has in consequence established a department of aerial insurance, the company issuing policies covering damage to all property, real or movable, caused by explosive bodies or other objects thrown or falling from flying machines or caused by airships or aeroplanes themselves in making a voluntary or involuntary landing, or by parts thereof falling from them. The policies make no provisions for injury to or loss of life.

There are 20,000 French priests in the fighting line of France, including four Bishops. Many priests have won the Legion of Honor or the Military Medal, and many others have been cited in the orders of the day of the Army for marked gallantry.

The Municipal Building, New York, is the largest structure under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Public Buildings and Offices. It contains about 1,000 offices and has about 10,000 visitors daily. It is the world's largest building of its kind.

Ireland's splendid police system, the Royal Irish Constabulary, numbering over 11,000, does not utilize a single typewriting machine as far as is known. All communications from the constabulary offices throughout Ireland, whether addressed to other police offices or to outside correspondents, are written by hand. In other respects the organization is thoroughly modern and excellently equipped.

Since the acquisition of Alaska by the United States the waters in and contiguous to the Territory have yielded fishery products having a first value of more than a quarter of a billion dollars. Far exceeding all the other products in importance are the salmon, after which come the fur seal, the sea otter, the halibut, and the cod.

The total amount of property in New York City not subjected to taxation is valued at $1,873,895,000.

The commerce reports state that greatly exaggerated ideas prevail concerning the total number of textbooks sold in the United States each year and the annual profits resulting from such sales. Data obtained by the United States Bureau of Education from forty-three textbook publishers in the United States show that their aggregate total sales of textbooks for use in public and private schools in 1913 amounted to $17,274,030. The aggregate for public schools, elementary and high, amounted to $14,261,768. The total enrollment in public elementary and high schools for the year was approximately 18,-600,040. Excluding the elementary school enrollment of California, since California prints its own elementary books, the number becomes 18,213,786. For each child enrolled in the public schools in the United States, therefore, the total annual sale of textbooks is 78.3 cents.

The number of birds imported into the United States annually amounts to about 500,000, and as many as 17,000 have become dwellers in America within one day. The half million feathered strangers represent 1,500 different species, but the greater number of the importations are of canaries, parrots, and game birds.

The completion of the Celilo Canal on the Oregon side of the Columbia River adds Idaho to the list of States having a seaport. It is now possible for stern-wheel river vessels to pass from the Pacific Ocean to Lewiston, at the head of navigation on the Snake River, a distance of 480 miles.

In consequence of the decrease of drunkenness in Russia due to the prohibition of the sale of vodka, fires have largely decreased.

OUR HUMOR IS NOT ANGLO-SAXON

T. A. Daly Says It Is 60 Per Cent. Celtic--Says Poe Copied Mangan--Praises "Mr. Dooley"

By Joyce Kilmer.

"MARK TWAIN," said T. A. Daly, "was not a humorist."

The poet who discovered the literary value of the Italian immigrant was sitting on the porch of his Germantown home, not far from the pleasant shadows of Wister Wood. We were discussing American humor—what it is and what it is not.

"Our humor," said Mr. Daly, "is considered by some critics to be a thing based on surprise and horrible exaggeration. That is an idea for which Mark Twain and other writers of his sort are responsible.

"I object very much to having this coarse, violent sort of fun called characteristic American humor. Mark Twain, Josh Billings, the Danbury News Man, Philander K. Doesticks—these people formed a school of slapstick and seltzer-bottle humor before seltzer bottles were invented. They were the Charlie Chaplains of their time."

"Would you class Artemus Ward with these people" I asked.

"Not at all," said Mr. Daly. "Artemus Ward's work does not depend on vulgarity and violence for its effect. Artemus Ward was a much greater humorist than Mark Twain. In fact, Mark Twain really was not a humorist at all.

"I cannot separate Mark Twain's humor from that story of his about the corpse and the Limburger cheese—that 'at any rate, you must be quite sure he is dead' story. And I don't like to have a man who could write such a story as that called a representative American humorist."

"What great humorists, beside Artemus Ward, has America produced?" I asked.

"Well," said Mr. Daly, "I believe that Finley Peter Dunne is the greatest of all American humorists. E. S. Martin is a great humorist, his essays are full of keen observation and shrewd wit. And I admire greatly the work of the late James Jeffery Roche.

"James Jeffery Roche and Finley Peter Dunne," I said. "Then the best American humor is of Irish descent?"

Mr. Daly laughed. "American humor," he said, "is a mixture, a blending of the humor of the many races that have populated this continent. And it changes, as the country develops and the people change; it is not stationary through the centuries, like English humor. And of the mixture that makes up American humor, sixty per cent. is Celtic.

"What, for example, have the Germans contributed to American humor? People may say 'Hans Breitmann'—but the Hans Breitmann ballads have not contributed to American humor in the slightest degree. Charles Godfrey Leland wrote many things more worthy of preservation than the Hans Breitmann ballads—'El Capitan General,' for instance.

"Now, I don't want to give the impression that I think American humor is purely Irish. There are a good many dull Irishmen—I know a lot of them. But here is one absolute fact—American humor is not Anglo-Saxon.

"I hate the term Anglo-Saxon, anyway. And certainly it is ridiculous to apply it to American humor. Think of all the nations that have made their contributions to our civilization! How could our humor be Anglo-Saxon?

"There is the wit of the French, for instance; that certainly has played its part in the development of our sense of humor. The French wit pierces, it is like a rapier.

"But the Irish wit is like the flash of sunlight on the rapier's blade. It menaces, but it seldom harms.

"And this is true of the highest form of modern American humor. It is true of the chronicles of the immortal Mr. Dooley. Finley Peter Dunne does not need to club a foible, he merely makes his blade flash over it. So he has the reputation of being a kindly humorist, when as a matter of fact his delicate satire is a most effective weapon."

"How," I asked, "would you define American humor?"

"I cannot define it," said Mr. Daly, "but it might be typified as the observant idler on the street corner, who laughs, but with kindly eyes, at the blunders of the newly arrived immigrant, but is quick to direct him to the place where he can take out his first papers."

The sun had set now, and Germantown was as quiet as only a venerable Philadelphia suburb can be on a Summer evening. We went into the study, and Mr. Daly looked speculatively at the well-laden shelves as he talked of the origins of American humor.

"I don't suppose," he said, placing his hand on a fat brown volume, "that you'd call Charles Brockton Browne a humorist. And certainly there is no humor in Cooper. But Washington Irving was a humorist. He was typically American, too, a shrewd and kindly observer of the way in which our early citizens had adapted themselves to new conditions of life. And he did not confine his observation to his New York neighbors, he became also the friendly and witty critic of English life.

"His humor is American, too, in that it is a mixture, a blending of English and Dutch. Washington Irving was not only our first humorist, he was our first short-story writer. And we have never had a greater short-story writer."

"A successful short-story writer," I said, "recently told me that Washington Irving couldn't write short stories."

"I don't know any modern short-story writer who could write another 'Rip Van Winkle,'" said Mr. Daly. "We have no one today who is Washington Irving's equal.

"The trouble with most of the modern writers of short stories is that they work with their eyes bulging out at the public. Many of our authors who really have genuine talent are deliberately prostituting their art. They are using up all their energies in describing to the public what the public believe to be the 'smart set.' The chief aim of many of them is to appeal to humanity's lower sensual instincts.

"Imagine Washington Irving describing, through installment after installment in a popular magazine, the effect of the wind on the sheer chiffon skirt of the heroine, parading before the ardent eyes of the hero! Imagine Washington Irving calling up all his resources of vocabulary to describe the teeth, hair, lips, and eyes of the young thing of eighteen sipping cocktails from a teacup!

"Washington Irving wrote about real men and women; he put red blood in his work. I can't imagine a man who is living a real life and raising a family picking up some of the modern magazines and reading the short stories in them. But 'Bracebridge Hall' and 'Rip Van Winkle' never grow stale.

"If Washington Irving was our first and greatest short-story writer," I said, "what place in American literature would you assign to Poe?"

"I think that Poe's prose is tremendously overrated," Mr. Daly replied. "And so is his poetry. I believe that Poe took his poem 'The Bells' from James Clarence Mangan's translation of Schiller's 'Bells.' I think that Poe was secretly for years an admirer and imitator of Mangan. I am, and always have been, suspicious of Poe and of the Poe cult.

"Do you know why it is that Poe has so enthusiastic a following in America today? It is because lecturers from England come over here and tell the ladies' clubs that Poe and Whitman are the only American authors worth reading. And we think that we really should admire Poe and Whitman, since the English lecturers speak so kindly about them.

"Whitman, especially, is liked in Europe, because he seems to the Europeans to be the sort of writer that America should produce. He is loud and rough, and America, according to the Europeans, is loud and rough."

"What do you think is the reason that Whitman used his peculiar form of verse," I asked.

"It is because he couldn't handle rhyme, that is the reason," said Mr. Daly. "If you want a proof of this, just read any of his attempts to write rhymed poetry."

He opened the "Oxford Book of English Verse."

"Here," he said, "see what happened when Whitman tried to rhyme words. In 'Captain, My Captain!' there are in the first stanza only two rhymes. Next comes a false rhyme—'bells' and 'trills.' Then he manages to get a perfect rhyme—'head' and 'dead.' In the last stanza he is somewhat more successful, he has three rhymes. But you see he couldn't write rhymed poetry, so for the most part he did not try to do so.

On a small table in Mr. Daly's study there is (unless the little Daly to whom it belongs has removed it recently) a small naked doll of pink celluloid. One side of its head has been broken in—bitten, I suppose. Mr. Daly regarded this doll earnestly, and in some way it suggested to him the poetic cult called Imagisme.

"These Imagistes," he said, "these free-verse people—they are the greatest jokes in the world! They are of two sorts. There are, in the first place, the people who are too lazy to write regular verse, who end a line with 'mountain' because it would pain them to take the trouble to find a rhyme for cat. Then there are the people who find that the journey to fame will be too long if they are to follow the regular course up the side of Parnassus. So they try to attract attention by jumping off into the sage-brush and assuming ridiculous attitudes as they pull the burrs off their hides.

"These free-verse people, the vers-librists as they call themselves, lack technical skill, imagination, fancy—they have no part of the poet's equipment. All they desire to do is to startle their readers, and they can't always do that. Their idea of making a poem is to say that the trees look like jade elephants.

"Critics are queer people. In the old days, they were afraid of novelty; they praised only work that was thoroughly conventional. Now, they have gone to the opposite extreme; they want nothing but novelty.

"Recently I was reading Cleveland's book of criticism. There was a man who was a typical critic of the old school. He filled page after page with praise of Robert Muir, Pollok, Joanna Baillie, and a great company of poets now forgotten, and he made no mention of either Keats or Shelley! Yet his book was published thirty years after Keats and Shelley died.

"Cleveland mentioned Leigh Hunt, and he gave some selections from Lord Byron, but with apologies. 'I would not defile my pages,' he wrote, 'with the work of an author who lived so wretched a life, were I not sensible that if some of his verse were not here quoted, the reader would have resource to his complete works.'

"Take even so able a critic as Jeffrey—he was without appreciation of the value of Keats's work. He approvingly italicized 'She stood in tears among the alien corn,' and utterly failed to see the beauty of the following lines, the lines about the 'magic casements opening on the foam of perilous seas in faery lands forlorn.'

"Well, the critics have gone to the other extreme; they are crazy for novelty now, and these imagistes and vers-librists who are praised so loudly today will in a few years be more thoroughly forgotten than Pollok and Joanna Baillie."

FIRST NATIONAL TENNIS HERE

Forest Hills to be the Setting for the Event---McLoughlin Will Try to Win Back His Laurels

INTERNATIONAL tennis, in recent years, has tended to lower the prestige of the National Championship. When the leading American players were facing Brooks and Wilding and Parke, whether here or in foreign lands, people cared little, relatively, about the All Comers' at Newport. But the great war has put the quietus on international tennis—for a time, anyway—and so the championship has regained its former prestige as the big event of the tennis year. And it will be a more important event this year than ever before, for the reason that it has been moved from Newport to New York. The fight for the title now held by R. Norris Williams will take place on the turf courts of the West Side Club, at Forest Hills, L. I., just fifteen minutes by electric train from the heart of Manhattan. Play will begin Monday, Aug. 30, and will continue every weekday until only one contestant is left unbeaten.

Now that the shifting of the All Comers' from Newport to New York is an accomplished fact, it seems strange that it was kept at the inaccessible resort so long. Yet the question of the change was the occasion for the keenest sort of struggle at the convention of the Lawn Tennis Association last Winter. Impassioned advocates of New York and equally impassioned advocates of Newport gave vent to their eloquence for hours when the delegates from all parts of the country gathered at the Waldorf-Astoria. New Yorkers enlarged upon the iniquity of keep the championship out of reach of the thousands who wanted to witness it; and New Englanders made scornful allusions to the "baseball rooters" who made up the crowd when a tennis tournament was held in the metropolis. When the vote was taken, New York had a majority of only a dozen or so out of more than two hundred votes.

It is a pretty safe bet, however, that the All Comers' will never be moved back to Newport; certainly not if the interest in tennis continues as keen as it is now. The success with which the Davis Cup matches were managed at Forest Hills last Summer justifies the belief that the event at the end of this month will be run off smoothly, and the tennis fans who see the games may be counted upon to raise a loud howl if anybody tries to take their fun away in future years.

The suggestion has been made that in tennis, as in golf, the championship should be moved about from place to place—New York one year, Chicago the next, Philadelphia, Boston, and so on around. This idea has its appeal, and it may well be that the association will sanction such a program. A migratory championship would surely have the effect of stimulating and spreading enthusiasm for the game. That object is one that the powers that be in tennis profess to cherish.

The time and place of the tournament having been settled, the all-absorbing question among tennis followers now is: Who will win the title, Williams or McLoughlin? The odds—if there be any betting odds in tennis—are heavily on the Californian. His clean-cut victory over the Harvard youth at Longwood early this month has strengthened the opinion—already strong, despite his defeat at Newport last year—that he will recapture the title.

Of course there is always the possibility of that most fearsome of all animals, a dark horse. But the chances of his appearance are very small. If one had to name a man who might possibly nose in ahead of Williams or McLoughlin, the choice would probably fall upon William M. Johnston of California. He was not up to form last year, and his performance at the Longwood meet was disappointing, but he has capabilities of the highest order. In the finals of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition tournament he came very close to beating McLoughlin; the match went to five sets, and some of the experts who saw it said that Johnston really played the better tennis, but was robbed of the victory by two or three pieces of bad luck in the final set.

But that match was played on asphalt; the records of play on turf show McLoughlin well above his fellow Westerner.

It has not been suggested that any of the Eastern players except Williams has even a good fighting chance to win. Karl H. Behr, who ranked No. 3 last year, will be in the contest, but, despite his brilliant record, he has always been a shade below both Williams and McLoughlin. And most forecasters would perhaps expect to see him fall behind Johnston, whom he outranked last year, though opinions upon that would be divided.

The Philadelphia crack, Clothier, will be in the All Comers', too. He is always good, of course, and he was once national champion; but he has been ranking high so many years, without winning the highest place, that it has come to be taken for granted that he will never get there again. He ranked No. 2 in 1909, was not ranked in either 1910 or 1911, was No. 4 in 1912, No. 3 in 1913, and No. 5 in 1914. This Summer he was beaten at Glen Cove by Behr, and in the forthcoming tourney the New Yorker should be the better of the two.

Church, Washburn, Mathey, Pell, Niles, Gardner, Leroy, Hall—all of these Eastern experts are in the list of entries. And any of them is capable of affording the spectators good fun, no matter who his opponent may be. (Church beat champion Williams in the intercollegiate last season.) But nobody regards them as dangerous contenders for the title.

Besides McLoughlin and Johnston the Californians who have come East this year are Bundy, Griffin, and Dawson. Dawson is a newcomer of whose skill on the court much has been heard, but his record this season has not been as good as expected. Bundy's principal duty will be to help McLoughlin defend the doubles title; he may enter in the singles, but he is not looked upon as a possible winner of the championship. Of the three Griffin stands the best chance. He beat Williams on asphalt in the Panama-Pacific tournament in July, and has shown good form on other occasions. But the champion took his scalp at Longwood, and can probably do the same trick on grass nine times out of ten. To judge from this season's events Griffin should come closer to the final round than he came last year, but most observers would say he certainly has no better chance than Behr, Clothier, or Church.

Neither Murray, who was No. 4 in last year's list, nor Fottrell, who was No. 10, will enter the national championship. Both of these Californians won admiration for their brilliant play last year and their failure to reappear is a disappointment.

If one could take a straw vote among tennis followers as to wishes for the outcome of the All Comers', he would find McLoughlin a decided favorite. The Californian is popular on the court, but that is not the reason people are so anxious to see him win; for Williams is thoroughly sportsmanlike, too, and nobody has anything to say against him. The desire to see McLoughlin regain the title is due to the general conviction that his remarkable victories over Brookes and Wilding in the Davis Cup matches last August marked him as the world's greatest player—certainly America's greatest—and that one who had achieved such success, at the same time that Williams lost to both the Australasians, established a full right, claim and title to the national championship.

"Easy fruit for McLoughlin" was the confident forecast of the result of the All Comers', in the light of what had happened in the Davis Cup matches. And the prophecy was well justified, for the "California Comet" had played such brilliant and withal such steady tennis as had rarely ever been seen before. Williams might take a single set from him at Newport, the wise ones said, but more likely none at all. Instead, what happened? It was a case of one, two, three, out, with McLoughlin fanning the air. Before the match the odds were 3 to 1 on McLoughlin. Williams won in straight sets.

Incidentally, and for whatever it may be worth to those who try to form opinions of this year's prospects, it may be recalled that the only set Williams lost at Newport last season went to Johnston, and the only one McLoughlin lost, except in the final round with Williams, went to Griffin.

Williams's victory over McLoughlin was not a fluke. It was well deserved. The Californian was considered by close observers a little below par, but Williams was superbly brilliant. Against Wilding at Forest Hills he had been brilliant for half the first set, and against Brookes he had had a brilliant streak in the third set and part of the fourth. Against McLoughlin he was brilliant first, last, and all the time. His serving was as accurate and severe, as altogether effective, as had ever been seen at Newport; from the back court he passed the Californian again and again, or else gave him such hard chances that they might as well have been passes, and at the net, where usually McLoughlin can get the better of an argument with anybody, Williams was always the master.

It is a commonplace of tennis that a man always seems to be "off his game" when he is being beaten, and one must be wary of advancing the explanation that a loser was not playing as well as usual. It is a fact, however, that throughout the All Comers' McLoughlin's faulty play was noticeable, even in the matches that he won easily, while Williams was known to be playing extraordinarily well. And this is permissible as evidence in any discussion of their contest with each other. Whether Williams's game that day would have beaten McLoughlin at his best is a question nobody can answer. There are some who think that even had McLoughlin played as well as he played against Brookes and Wilding he would still have gone down before the Harvard lad's remarkable attack. There are others who do not think so.

But a natural query is: If Williams can play like that, if he can play so brilliantly as to leave the least doubt of McLoughlin's superiority, why are tennis followers so confident that McLoughlin will win? The answer is simply this: McLoughlin is vastly more dependable than Williams. He is just as brilliant as the champion, and far more steady. He is much more apt to play the best tennis there is in him.

For example, consider the matter of service. At Newport last August Williams's service was like a whirlwind in speed and a rifle in accuracy. As one of the leading experts remarked after the match, it was super-tennis. Even at that, it was probably not any better than the serving McLoughlin showed in his match against Brookes in the Davis Cup contests. However that may be, the big difference between the two is that Williams rises to these heights only now and then, while McLoughlin serves brilliantly almost always.

Not long ago the magazine, American Lawn Tennis, published a symposium of the opinions of the world's best players on services, each player being asked to tell what he thought of the delivery of the other cracks. Here is what Karl Behr wrote about Williams:

"In my opinion, when Williams is serving as he did in the last three matches at Newport last year, his service is the most severe and efficient in the world. But one cannot consider the highest flights of a man's serve as showing his general ability, and consequently Williams's serve cannot be considered, on average comparison, as fine as Murray's, McLoughlin's or perhaps Brookes's; but it is, nevertheless, a very strong and splendid serve. The low bound and great speed are the main features, with good placement in addition to render it hard for his opponent to take advantage of his half-court follow-up to the net."

Behr thinks that Brookes's service in the year 1907 was better than any ever seen before or since, but he puts McLoughlin's ahead of the Australasian's last year. And he adds that the Californian's superiority in following up his service with wonderful volleying and is an important point in his favor.

McLoughlin writes feelingly of Williams's remarkable service at Newport in 1914. But he adds:

"Unfortunately he is not so consistent as the Australasian."

Nobody who saw the Williams-Wilding and the Williams-Brookes matches at Forest Hills will fail to agree to that. In his match with Brookes Williams had the spectators gnashing their teeth over his double-faulting. Again and again, when it seemed that he had an even chance to pull the game out, he would serve two bad ones. Even with good serving he couldn't hope for better than an even chance with Brookes; with his double-faulting he had no chance at all.

As McLoughlin is more reliable in serving, so is he in the other departments of the game. Nobody who has ever heard of tennis needs to be told of the Californian's deadly overhead work—his slaughter of lobs is famous. His volleying is usually surer and just as severe as Williams's, and his forehand ground stroke is just as good as that of the champion. The only point in which he is regarded as inferior to his rival is on his backhand off the ground. That is serious, of course; but the Californian is at the net so large a part of the time, and is so agile in getting into position to take the ball on his forehand, that this defect does not cost him as many points as it might. One of the most cherished memories of his match with Wilding last Summer is that of the four forehand drives that he sent down the sidelines, in quick succession, in returning the Australasian's services toward the end of the final set. And for two of these drives McLoughlin ran around the ball in order to take it on his good side.

At this writing Longwood has been played, the tournament at Seabright is in progress, and the Southampton and Newport invitation meets are still to come, before the All-Comers' opens. Of course some upset may be provided at one of these tournaments. But even if Williams or McLoughlin should be defeated, it would be taken as an accident; and they would still enter the national championship as the leading contenders. Their form and skill are too well proved for their reputation to be much affected by one or two defeats in secondary tournaments. The crowds that go to Forest Hills will go chiefly to see these two youths perform.

Stands with a seating capacity of seven thousand have been erected, and all seats are reserved. Tickets may be obtained from Harry Parker, Forty-second Street Building, New York City. They will also be on sale at the grounds beginning Aug. 30.

THE EASIEST WAY

By Edmund Leamy.

GLITTER and gladness and grandeur,
bliss that is almost divine;
Hearts that are toyed with and tarnished,
souls that are squandered to swine;
Riches, aye, riches uncounted, things that the Follies call fair,
Leisure, sweet, long hours of leisure, freedom from nerve-racking care;
Never a thought of the morrow, never a dream of the end;
On with the dance and the laughter, Passion to spend and to spend!

Flying, the night is full fleeting, coming the dawn of the day;
Live while the lights are bright burning,
live while ye can and ye may;
Deep in the wine wildly wallow, deep of its falsity drink,
Surcease it brings and a blessing; in, it will not let ye think.
Many's the thought that comes rushing,
straight in the midst of the din;
Many's the prayer that is whispered; many's
the pain in the sin.

Laughter, low, lingering laughter, echoing down through the years,
Languorous lights and allurements, covering
all of the tears;
Money and music and madness, eyes that are blind with lust,
Dreams that are shattered and broken,
hopes that are cowered in the dust;
Smile, for there's wealth in the smiling;
sing, for there's peace in the song;
Block out the Spectre of Future—God in your Heaven, how long?

Heart-ache and sorrow and sadness, tears
that are dry and unshed,
Soon is the swift hour all over, soon is the wish to be dead.
Dead with the heart of a maiden, dead with the soul of a girl,
Pure, and untouched, and unshaken, clear of the sensuous whirl.
Die, all unloved and unhonored! Can ye recall how to pray?
Go to your Maker's Tribunal—Ye of the Easiest Way!

Food Prices and the War.

THE effect of the war upon the cost of living in foreign countries has just been made the subject of a report by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Agriculture at Washington. Prices are given for eighteen countries, and there are cards from over 100 cities, towns, and consular districts.

The report shows that the first effect of the war was the same practically throughout Europe. Its outbreak was followed by a sharp rise in prices, due mainly to panic and uncertainty. In some countries legislative measures were at once taken to check this rise. In others the Government strictly adhered to a hands-off policy and trusted to the natural course of events for readjustment. Within a fortnight the first panic was over, and, except in the actual war zone, prices began to fall. In most places, however, prices did not drop to the July level, and after an interval again took an upward turn, which has probably not yet reached its climax.

Administrative and legislative measures to check the rise in the cost of necessaries were very generally taken. Denmark, Egypt, Great Britain, Italy, Russia, Spain, and Turkey prohibited the export of practically all foodstuffs. France, Norway, and Sweden listed certain articles which must not be exported, and Holland placed an embargo on butter and cheese.

CURTISS BUILDS BIG WAR BIPLANE

Giant Air Fighter Will Be Capable of Dropping a Ton of High Explosives at One Spot

THE day of the big fighting aeroplane is at hand. With a ton of explosives it is to be hurled by the Allies at the strategic line of the Rhine, to be met by the aviators of Germany in similar giant craft, armed with light artillery and machine guns, and using a bursting projectile.

Practically all the great powers of Europe are at work on the construction of such big aeroplanes. In America, where aviation has long been neglected by the Government, Glenn H. Curtiss is leading the way for the rest of the world in the service of England and her allies.

It has taken a year of modern warfare to develop the fighting aeroplane from the experiences of light-armed scouts who flew in small craft under great limitations. Their small flying machines lifted little more than those seen in exhibitions in American cities. Though of the highest importance for observation, they may be rated as fighters with the smallest torpedo boats. They depend for success largely on the elements of surprise and swiftness, and are limited in operation by their low fuel capacity. The radius of action of the small military aeroplanes now in use in the European conflict is little more than 200 miles.

Four hours' gasoline supply was the usual military requirement before the war. It soon expanded to six hours, and before long may exceed twenty. The big Curtiss craft at Toronto might meet such a demand if need be. There are, however, other needs that are considered more important than endurance of flight, chiefly that of lifting a great load of high explosives and carrying it to the enemy's base or to other strategic points within easy striking distance.

The big Curtiss war machine, though assembled at Toronto, is largely a product of the Curtiss factories at Hammondsport, N. Y., where the motors were built, and at Buffalo. In weight it will reach nearly two tons without load. The two engines alone will weigh 1,200 pounds, and deliver a total of 320 horse power. This is nearly double the power of the America, built by Mr. Curtiss last year for the Rodman Wanamaker transatlantic expedition, though the power plant's weight is only 50 per cent. greater. With a ton and a half load aboard the total weight to be lifted will be about three and a half tons.

Mr. Curtiss and his advisers are confident that the big craft, which spans 100 feet from tip to tip of her wings, will do what is required of her, insuring orders for a large squadron of similar aeroplanes for the British Army's use, besides others for Russia. He is developing another class of equal power, but slightly smaller, a flying boat of high speed, for the Russian Navy, at his Buffalo works.

With her load of a ton and a half in men, fuel and explosives, the new Curtiss biplane will be able to start from the British base at Dunkirk and strike at any of the German military centres along the Rhine. She may drop almost a ton of dynamite in one spot; for instance, on the big bridge that spans the Rhine at Düsseldorf, or on that near Cologne by which the railway arteries that day and night pour men and munitions into the German trenches cross the stream. Consider the effect of an attack of a squadron of such aeroplanes on a base of supplies and ammunition! Each of the lines of communication will become a target for the aerial assailant at the vulnerable river crossings, which are few in number and congested with traffic. Scouts have reported trains passing at ten-minute intervals for the front across the Rhine bridges day and night.

To meet the threatened attack Germany's air fleet is receiving strong additions in the form of high-power biplanes and triplanes known as "Kolossals." Several of these already have been seen in the field, according to official reports. They are driven by double engines and carry light pieces of artillery.

In Italy a 250 horse power flying "destroyer" has been constructed in Government shops, with three engines. In Russia, Igor Sykorsky is endeavoring to give more speed and lift to his big Ilja Mourametz biplane of 400 horse power, which carried sixteen persons aloft at one time in a brief flight. Other constructors in England and France are reported at work on the problem of the big aeroplane.

With engine power known, and speed and lift approximately determined, it is easy to see the possibilities of the big Curtiss biplane. Mr. Curtiss recently said that the aeroplane he had designed would carry, if required, enough fuel to cross the Atlantic from Newfoundland to Ireland—about 1,900 miles. For military purposes, of course, this would not be required, as to carry fuel alone would deprive the craft of offensive power. But the estimate served to show the size of the big load to be carried.

At seventy-five miles an hour, the approximate speed of the biplane, the duration of a 1,900 miles' flight would be nearly twenty-five hours. Tests have shown that her motors consume less than half a pint of fuel an hour for each horse power, weighing thirty-eight one-hundredths of a pound. For twenty-five hours at this rate, 320 horse power would require 3,040 pounds of gasoline. In the distance estimate of 1,900 miles, allowance was made for the weight of at least two men with lubricant and instruments, amounting in all to about 700 pounds more. This would bring the total load up to 3,740 pounds. As an effort has been made to increase the speed of the big biplane, possibly at the expense of lift, it is conservative to place the load limit at 3,000 pounds, including men, fuel, oil, and explosives or guns. Probably it is considerably higher.

Raids in which British and French aeroplanes have dropped 300 to 400 pounds of explosives each on vital points in the German defense system have caused a great stir. There was a bitter outcry in Baden over such an attack on Karlsruhe recently. Destruction was wrought by an air fleet on the Zeppelin works at Friedrichshaven, the submarine base at Zeebrugge, and at Düsseldorf, Cologne and Cuxhaven. Every one of these places is open to attack from the big biplane, possessing five times the destructive power of the small aeroplanes, operating from the Allied bases at Dunkirk on the north and Belfort at the southern extremity of the fighting line in the West.

The Krupp works at Essen and Düsseldorf are about equally distant from the British base at Dunkirk—about 185 miles, or five hours there and back for the aviator, at seventy-five miles an hour. Expending about one and six-tenths pounds of fuel for each mile flown at the seventy-five-mile pace, he must take with him about 590 pounds of fuel and about sixty pounds of oil for the two 160 horse power motors. At least two men, weighing, say, 300 pounds, must make the journey, one to steer, the other to attend to the motors. Both must be ready to fight. In an emergency the control may be set to maintain a given course with the aid of the gyroscopic stabilizer invented by Elmer A. Sperry of this city, which is being installed. This instrument also automatically balances the aircraft at all times, leaving the pilot's hands comparatively free for a clash of arms. Deducting the weights above given leaves a lifting power of 2,050 pounds, or more than a ton, which can be used entirely for enormous bombs to destroy the enemy's works. The weight carried would be divided as follows:

	Pounds.
Gasoline	590
Oil	60
Two men	300
Explosives	2,050
Total	3,000

For encounters with other aircraft it would be possible to carry machine guns and ammunition, or light cannon, the weight of which would be deducted from the allowance for bombs.

By carrying more gasoline—752 pounds—the raiding craft could reach Coblentz, 235 miles from Dunkirk, where another of the big German trunk lines crosses the Rhine. She would have available lifting power on this incursion for 1,870 pounds of dynamite, and fuel enough to return to her base at Dunkirk.

Cologne is 200 miles from Dunkirk, the British base, and almost 2,000 pounds of explosives could be used against its railway buildings. Twenty miles south of the city another of the trunk rail lines from Berlin into Belgium and Luxemburg crosses the Rhine on a bridge, a fair mark for the airman.

The fortress and railway bridge at Mainz are 270 miles from the British base. This city can easily be reached by burning 864 pounds of gasoline. This permits carrying 1,750 pounds of high explosives.

Cuxhaven and the German fleet hiding there and guarding the Kiel Canal are 335 miles from Dunkirk—about four and a half hours of flying in calm weather. Fuel and oil for this raid would weigh 1,180 pounds, leaving 1,520 pounds for explosives. Bremen, the big seaport near the mouth of the Weser, lies about the same distance away.

Hamburg, the principal seaport of Germany, is 360 miles from Dunkirk. After taking aboard the necessary fuel, it would still be possible for the biplane to carry 1,330 pounds of explosives to wreck the shipping there.

From Belfort, the air base at the southern end of the allied line, Ulm, the big railway centre in Württemberg, is but 155 miles. Baden-Baden is 130 miles away, Karlsruhe and Friedrichshaven, the Zeppelin-building city, are each 120 miles away. Consequently, only a small load of fuel is needed, giving room for more than a ton of bombs, to work destruction at these places.

Darmstadt, residence of the Duke of Hesse, is little more than two hours' flight from Belfort. Munich, the Bavarian metropolis, is 220 miles away. About 1,900 pounds of dynamite could be taken there besides fuel and oil. Dresden, the Saxon capital, or Prague, in Bohemia, can be struck after flying 385 miles, little more than five hours, with 1,350 pounds of explosives.

Most interesting, perhaps, is the possibility of taking the war in the air to the two Kaisers at Berlin and Vienna. The Prussian capital is 455 miles from Belfort. One of the big new fliers could cover the distance in little more than six hours, in fair weather. About 1,600 pounds of fuel would be needed for the daring enterprise, but this would still leave room in the bomb compartment for eleven missiles, each weighing 100 pounds, enough to disturb the poise of Potsdam. Vienna is slightly nearer, and might be agitated a trifle more by the new aeroplane.

From the 27 horse power motor that the Wright brothers first used, to twin motors of 160 horse power each, is a long step. Most of it has been taken by Mr. Curtiss in the last eighteen months under the stimulus of the Rodman Wanamaker transatlantic flight effort. Indeed, America's lead in the development of the big aeroplane is directly due to the encouragement given by Mr. Wanamaker to the constructor and his staff at Hammondsport, N. Y., at a time when aviation was languishing. In one short season, on the order for a transatlantic flier, Mr. Curtiss produced what had previously been found impracticable—a double-engined aeroplane, and one of larger size than any other flying boat.

It proved capable of lifting heavy loads and of traveling through the air at a rate of more than sixty miles an hour. Trouble in rising from the water, which appeared in the first tests, was overcome, soon after the war began in August of last year, by a simple alteration of the tail from a cylindrical to a flat form. The America, as she was known, flew with one motor stopped, the other sustaining her.

In England, where she was sold to the Admiralty on the recommendation of Commander John C. Porte, the Curtiss craft seemed to point a way ahead in aeronautics, and orders were given for thirty-two of her type.

Though the America proved useful in North Sea raids, she is a flying boat, unable to alight on or rise from dry land. In addition, there appeared the need of aircraft with still greater capacity than hers, said to be about 1,800 pounds.

It was found that the ordinary biplanes used by the British and French armies, sent to raid the line of Rhine defenses, supply stations and communications, arrived at their destination with a comparatively small amount of explosives, even after the pilot discarded his companion, the observer, and flew alone to save lifting power. This proceeding, while successful in a measure at times, failed at others. The strain on the pilot was tremendous. He was trying to aim at the enemy, while keeping a hand on the control and an ear to the engine's beats. Often he missed fire and expended his few bombs in vain. The gyroscope stabilizer was added to the America class to relieve these overworked aviators.

Then came the demand for more speed, more lift and more power. It found the American builder already prepared with a big motor, developed for the next transatlantic effort, and another flying boat of larger size than the America, designed for the same purpose. The latter is the big biplane at Toronto, with modifications in the plans to give greater speed and load-lifting, and others to add to its offensive qualities, and to make it a landing machine instead of a seaplane.

Without exception this biplane is believed to be the largest ever constructed for military use. It is slightly exceeded by the Russian Sykorsky, built for passenger-carrying, with four motors of 100-horse power each. The Curtiss giant spreads its wings 100 feet, as against 72 feet, the stretch of the America's top plane. There is about one-third more sustaining surface in the new wings than in those of the Wanamaker boat. The stout main spars of these planes look more like a bridge span than a flying machine.

There is indeed the power of a miniature storm in the two engines and propellers of the big "pusher," as this type of aeroplane is termed in distinguishing it from the tractor type, which is drawn through the air by a screw at the bow. Each of the 160-horse power motors exerts a thrust on the air of 1,000 pounds through the grip of its nine-and-a-half-foot propeller.

The engines are of the water-cooled stationary pattern, each with eight cylinders, set V-shape, four on a side. The use of two of them gives the advantage that descent in a hostile country is not made necessary if one motor stops, the other being able to sustain the biplane in slow flight.

The engines are near a line midway between the upper and lower planes and on either side of a long torpedo-like body or fuselage, and are about ten feet apart. In the body are sheltered the pilot and engineer, control wheels in duplicate, fuel and explosives. The engineer finds the motors more conveniently placed than in the America, where he was obliged to stand on the after deck to reach them. They were placed almost as high as his head.

To gain speed, Mr. Curtiss has cut down head resistance wherever possible to do so without weakening the craft. In this work he has had the assistance of Dr. Albert F. Zahm of the Smithsonian Institution, a noted authority on aeronautics. The constructors' staff at Toronto also includes as manager J. A. D. MacCurdy, a noted aviator long resident in this city, and Anthony Jannus, constructor and pilot, recently of Baltimore. Charles M. Manly of this city, once Samuel P. Langley's aid, is watching the work for England.

Compared with the America, there is an increase of nearly a third in length, giving about forty-five feet over all. The expensive silk covering of the America's wings gives way to Irish linen over frames of spruce and ash. The fabric is coated with a waterproof and airproof preparation.

Balancing is obtained by flaps hanging from the rear edge of the upper planes, each about sixteen by four and a half. If the craft tilts to the right, the flap on that side is pulled down and the pressure of the air stream against it gives more lift to the falling side, correcting the tilt.

Elevating planes are placed on either side of the tail, which is terminated by the vertical rudder. This sheet of steel armor will shield the under side of the pilot's and engineer's places and the motors from bullets fired from the ground.

The propellers are an interesting feature. Each swings through a circle of nine and a half feet diameter, a foot and a half greater than those of the America. At 1,200 revolutions the tips of these members are moving through 35,810 feet, or nearly seven miles a minute. Because of the great centrifugal force, a severe strain is imposed on the tips. The propellers are built up of layers of wood, and the tips are sheathed with copper.

Those working on the new biplane are enthusiastic in the belief that she is only the first of a big fleet of aeroplanes of even greater size that will be built by American ingenuity, encouraged by Europe's appreciation and money. Already nearly $4,000,000 is being sent here this year from across the ocean for aeroplanes and aeroplane engines.

WAR NURSE TELLS HER EXPERIENCES

By Maud Hoffman.

THE most surprising thing which has happened to me for many years past was to find myself embarked for France from London, dressed in the uniform of a nurse, covered by a long military coat, the conventional veil floating from my hat, a Red Cross brassard shining on my left arm, and a hope shining in my heart that I was to bring comfort and solace to the suffering. I did not ask which suffering—whether it was to be German, French, or English suffering—just suffering. It turned out to be mostly French.

The contingent to which I was attached consisted of about seventy people, and I carried the only American passport in the party. We were composed of qualified and unqualified nurses, surgeons, doctors, medical students, and hospital dressers.

When we boarded the train at Calais, the compartments which had been reserved for our party were already occupied by comfortable people who had no intention of moving. This happens even in times of peace. Well, we were out to suffer, and so to sit on one's luggage in the corridor seemed the very opportunity we were looking for! Every woman in that party expected and longed to suffer.

The war is teaching thousands of people lessons of patience. We learned how to wait. Our party waited at docks. We waited for hours at wayside stations as we crawled through France. We waited for instructions, tickets, food. We waited for letters. We waited for a whole week in Paris, and when we got our hospital we waited for the wounded.

One day in Paris I was waiting on the curb in the Place de l'Opera for the traffic to pass, and my first little opportunity for war service came to me. Some military transport wagons, French, came thundering across the square. The driver of the first wagon waved his arm wildly at me; he held a packet in his hand. I dashed out and seized the packet from him, realizing at once that he was hailing my red cross. Without stopping, the wagons passed on, and I held in my hand the precious little packet of love messages to folks at home.

Simple military postcards, some with only a line written on them, such as "I am passing through Paris. Am well. Jean." But I felt a proud responsibility in having been intrusted with these simple messages, and, clutching them tightly for fear of losing a single one, I put them slowly, one by one, into a box, feeling that each one meant joy in some French home.

A week from the night we arrived found us pulling out of the Gare d'Austerlitz for Limoges, directly south of Paris, and, in ordinary times, about a three-hour run. The trip took us eighteen hours.

There were fifty main hospitals in Limoges, and we organized the fifty-first. Every private house, as well, was a small hospital. Limoges is a garrison town, and also a place where beautiful and expensive china is manufactured. But china occupies a small corner in the background of the picture which I carry with me of Limoges.

Well down in the foreground of the picture is the ever-present funeral procession with its pathetic little band of mourners, women mostly, draped in crepe, following on foot. Unending lines of soldiers marching in and out of Limoges; military, determined-looking men dashing about in motor cars. Scores of cripples and convalescents hobbling about to take the air. Every other woman in mourning. Rows and rows of beds, with pale faces in them and eyes which seemed to be always asking for something. Scores and scores of these faces to be washed, of these beds to be made, of food to be given, of dishes to be removed, of dishes to be washed. Miles and miles of floors to be swept.

And all these impressions recur with the regularity of the rising and the setting of the sun.

Wounded men lying in their beds, helpless, take on much of the docility and sweetness of children. It was a great joy to the "unqualified" to fetch and carry for them; to straighten the drawsheets dozens of times a day; to keep all clean and sweet for their comfort.

The picturesque Turco with his brown skin, the simple Senegalese with his ebony skin, the good French bourgeoise with ivory pale skin, and the few British with their white skins, each received equal attention and were equally grateful and courteous to us for what we did for them.

The first night of the arrival of the wounded at our hospital will always remain in my memory as a night of the Arabian Nights order, without the fun, and with all the tragedy. Seventy-five of them had arrived that morning at 11 o'clock. For four days we had been scrubbing, cleaning windows, putting up beds, sorting drugs, clothing, stores of all kinds. For twenty-four hours we had been expecting them.

Every bed was ready, a locker and a chair by each bed, a towel ready for each man. In fact, the building, which had been a school and museum of art, had been transformed into a fairly well-equipped, up-to-date English hospital. In the operating theatres, where formerly stood the easels, were now the surgeons' tables, and the palettes and brushes were replaced by the shining instruments of science. In the ward kitchens, hot water had been at boiling point for all those hours. At any moment they might arrive.

On the Sunday morning scrubbing aprons were taken off and clean caps and aprons brought out. The wounded were coming! We must hurry through dinner—they might arrive while we were away. No, they will not come now till five. At six, we were told to have some food and go to bed: "They will arrive at midnight." Fitful naps! There is a noise at midnight. We spring up alert. No. We must sleep again, until called. They have not come. All night, the trains pass through the town—every whistle causes us to start up. We listen. All is quiet.

And then four of our men enter slowly, bearing a stretcher—and another—and another. A procession which seems unending. Very gently, the stretcher cases are placed on the beds; next to them, the fever men are the most helpless, and the most desperate.

The officers sit in the chairs by their beds, and wait until all the men are attended to first. Seventy-five pairs of tired, dirty, blistered, swollen feet are gently washed, and as many hands and faces.

Presently the doctors and surgeons make the rounds. Wounds are dressed; drugs are given. I am told off for night duty, and am advised to sleep. I meekly lie down, but cannot follow the advice. At night, we dutifully report ourselves to the night sister. The ward has been left in beautiful order by the day nurses.

All is quiet for the moment. No—there is a groan! "Ah, that is the Turco! Go to him, nurse. He is very ill, and must not be left alone."

I go to this poor man. We look into each other's eyes. It is the only way we have of speaking to each other. He tells me through his eyes, as plainly as any words, that he is done for. He knows it, and only wants to be helped through a little to the end. He was a beautiful creature to look at. Aristocratic, delicate features, intelligent and sympathetic expression. He must have been a tall man. Two wounds, and septic poisoning. No position eased his pain—no sedative could make him sleep.

All through the night, one of us stayed by him—and so on into the next day. One of our "unqualified" ones it was who was with him at the last and took his last messages for "ma femme."

Is that a child crying in the dark? I go to him. It is the poor Senegalese. So very, very sick! The wounds were burning, the fevers rising, the drugs stirring through the systems. "Come, nurse, come here!" "Nurse, go there!" "Nurse, water for this man." "Nurse, that man's bandage is loose."

On the whole, the care and attention lavished upon the patients by the English nurses was appreciated by the men, but I must make one exception. The fresh air lavished upon them was not appreciated. I have seen a look of despair pass round the ward when I entered with the long pole to open the windows—but it soon changed to a smile and a joke; their gentleness and courtesy was delightful.

UNITED STATES SUBMARINE SCHOOL

New Institution to Teach Engineers and Seamen the Art of Modern Undersea Fighting

THE day of the big cruising submarine is at hand. By big I mean the submarine that can go anywhere under its own power, on board of which the crew will live all the time; in other words, a submarine craft can go anywhere the biggest dreadnought can go. This is a fact, and we have got to come to it, and that is all there is to it."

The words are those of Captain Albert W. Grant, U. S. N., the new commander of the submarine flotilla of the Atlantic Fleet. A few weeks ago this talented officer whose unique distinction it is to have been the Chief of Staff of four successive Commanders in Chief of the Atlantic Fleet—"Fighting Bob" Evans, Thomas, Sperry, and Schroeder—was commanding the giant new superdreadnought Texas when Secretary Daniels surprised the country with the announcement that Captain Grant had been selected as the officer to whom would be intrusted the task of bringing up to date the submarine arm of the American Navy.

A few days later Captain Grant turned over the command of the great superdreadnought to Captain John Hood, and hoisted his flag on the old auxiliary cruiser Prairie. He lost not a second in getting "on the job." He went to Washington and talked the big submarine problem over with Secretary Daniels and the heads of the various bureaus. He outlined what he thought should be done, and indicated the kind of subordinates he wanted. He got all that he asked for, and he went back to the Prairie. Subsequently he shifted his flag to the cruiser Columbia. He looked over the submarine personnel, and he found it "A-1," and, as he sincerely believes, the very best human material in any navy in the world today.

"The personnel of the submarine flotilla," said Captain Grant to the writer, "is far ahead of the material. And that's a statement that is not open to contradiction."

For a couple of weeks or more Grant kept his own counsel. He, better than any other man, realized what a gigantic job he had shouldered. He spent his days and nights thinking. He thought and thought and thought.

"How to make men who man the United States submarine the most efficient in all the world," was the question before him. Already there is a general feeling throughout the navy that he has found the answer. The answer may be divided into two parts; first, to train to the highest point of efficiency the officers and men who man the submarines; second, to get the kind of submarines that all navies must possess if they are to remain first-class navies, and to get plenty of them.

"The submarines that we now have," Captain Grant said on the Columbia, "are of the small type. They are not the kind that we need most as units of the mobile fleet, that is, submarines powerful enough and big enough to go anywhere the fleet can, and without the aid of any other type of vessel. Small submersibles of necessity must have bases, and are of greatest service close to shore. For the mobile fleet, we want, therefore, the big ones to which I have already referred.

"To what are the much discussed and much advertised failures of the American submarine arm due?" Captain Grant was asked.

"If we have had any such failures, they were due to material, not to personnel," was his emphatic reply.

Then it was that Captain Grant told of his plans for training the officers and men who are to handle the submarines of the Atlantic Fleet in the future. Perhaps twice as many submarine officers and men will be needed within a year as are now needed, for there are ten submarines of the "L" class and one of the "M" class nearing completion. Two of the "Ls" are now ready for delivery to the Government, and all the others are more than 90 per cent. completed. These ships are all improved types of the "K" class, but none of them is of that big type that the present European war has proved will be needed in all efficient navies of the future. As coast defenders, however, there are no better submarines in the world than those soon to be added to the submersible division of Admiral Fletcher's great command.

"I am going," said Captain Grant, as he told of the new school for submarine officers and enlisted men, "to tell them, and make them understand exactly what a submarine is. I want them to know what every part in every one of them is and why it has been placed there. There will be a most important course in engineering, in which special attention will be paid to gas and to Diesel engines. There will be a course in electricity with especial reference to storage battery engineering. There will also be instruction in torpedo engineering, and I expect that the young officers who will be sent to us will be those who have had experience in torpedo engineering.

"Much of the instruction will be of the practical sort. The men, officers as well as the enlisted personnel, will be sent at frequent intervals for tours of duty on the submarines attached to the fleet. When they are told about a lever, or a battery, a generator, or any other thing that is a part of a submarine, they will see that part, see with their own eyes what its function is, and be taught how to manipulate it, and, if necessary, repair it when it gets out of order or needs overhauling as a result of constant use.

"The men will be given a practical course in dismantling and the re-erecting of engines, the handling of steering gear; they will be made familiar with the design of all engines used in the vessels of the submarine types, every effort will be made to impart a thorough knowledge of the gas and the oil engines and their auxiliaries. The course will be theoretical as well as practical, and when in the future a submarine is commissioned we hope and expect to have a crew ready to man that submarine that will be as efficient in every possible respect as it is possible to make it."

"When will this school start?" was a question asked Captain Grant.

"It has already started," he answered, "and we are working now on the manuscripts of the books that we will use. You see we had to write all our textbooks, since the kind we wanted had never been written."

The officers who are writing these textbooks, which, it can be stated on high authority, will never find a place on the shelves of public libraries or the counters of book dealers, are, in addition to Captain Grant, Lieut. Commander Yates Stirling, (who is perhaps the best-known submarine expert in the navy and who is Captain Grant's chief of staff;) Lieutenant Seymour E. Holliday, Lieutenant Clyde S. McDowell, Lieutenant Holbrook Gibson, Lieutenant C. H. Morrison, and Naval Constructor Emory S. Land.

The home of the school will be the cruiser Columbia, the new flagship of the submarine flotilla. This four-funneled fighter of the old navy has been completely overhauled and fitted as a flagship, and is now at the navy yard in Philadelphia, undergoing certain repairs in her engine room. She will be ready in about two weeks.

The real work will be underway by the time the Columbia and the various submarine divisions put to sea for the extensive Fall manoeuvres that are being planned. It will be at sea that the greater part of the instruction, theoretical as well as practical, will be carried out.

The work of the submarine school will be divided into three months of theoretical and three months of practical instruction. And when an officer or an enlisted man is certified by Captain Grant as being fully qualified for duty with the submarines there will be no reason to doubt the efficiency of that man. He will know all about storage batteries, electrical generators and controllers and meters, submarine signaling, the working of the gyro-compass, electrical propulsion, the periscope, and, to a certain extent, wireless telegraphy and other intricate and highly technical things that are a part of the modern, up-to-date submarine.

"What we have now is just a bare beginning of what we need," said Captain Grant, "but I am very hopeful of the future. Building a submarine is something, but when we get the submarine we need the personnel that will be able efficiently to handle it. The more efficient the personnel the less apt we are to have accidents. As the personnel increases in efficiency the danger due to accident or other causes will correspondingly decrease."

The submarine flotilla now commanded by Captain Grant consists of eighteen submarines, seven tenders, two destroyers acting as tenders, the auxiliary cruiser Prairie, and the flagship Columbia. Among the tenders are the single-turreted monitors Tonopah, Ozark, and Tallahassee, the new tender Fulton, and the smaller tenders Potomac and Severn. The destroyers assigned to the flotilla are the Macdonough and Worden.

The First Division, comprising the five "C" boats, is commanded by Lieutenant Wilhelm L. Friedell. The Second Division, which is made up of three craft of the "D" and two of the "E" type, is commanded by Lieutenant Thomas Withers. The Third Division, of four boats of the "G" type, is commanded by Lieut. Commander Frank L. Pinney, and the Fourth Division, of four "K" vessels, is under the command of Lieutenant Joseph O. Fisher.

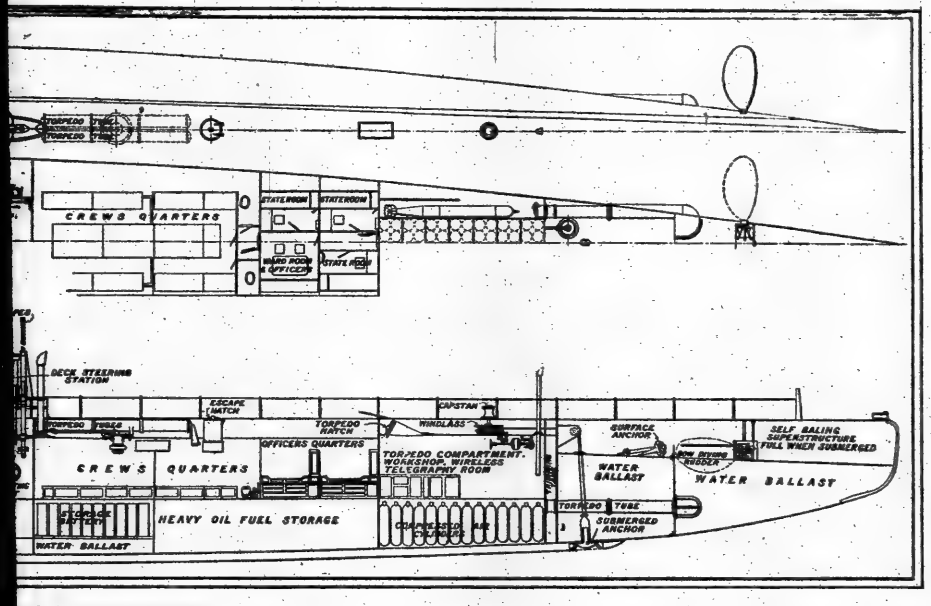
DEFENSE AGAINST SUBMARINES

Aeroplanes, According to Experts, Co-operating with Battleships, Can Successfully Combat Them



the Interior Arrangements.

THERE is no problem confronting the great naval powers today which is receiving greater attention than that which involves the development of an effective means to meet the attack of a hostile submarine. For months past officers of the United States Navy have been studying this perplexing problem—a problem which, as a result of the successes achieved by German submarines in the present war, is one which has assumed major importance in the scheme of national defense.

Off Pensacola, Fla., this past Winter a flotilla of submarines operated in co-operation with the Naval Aviation Corps at this problem. There the crack aviators of the navy were in the air by day, their eyes focused on the waters of the Gulf, below, in the effort to become expert in the discovery of submarines. That gratifying success was achieved is admitted in the navy, and during the visit of the fleet to New York, a few weeks ago, an officer of submarines, discussing the problem, stated that up to the present time the flying machine is the most effective of all agencies for the detection of submarines. Furthermore, if a reliable aeroplane range-finder can be developed it will also probably become the most effective means for the destruction of these under-water fighters.

That the General Board of the Navy, of which Admiral Dewey is the President, realizes the importance of the part that the aeroplane will play in the event of hostile submarine attacks is clearly stated in the last report of that board, which, reporting to Secretary Daniels on the need of an adequate naval flying arm, among othr things said:

In view of the advance that has been made in aeronautics during the past year, and the demonstration now being made of the vital importance of a proper air service to both land and sea warfare, our present situation can be described as nothing less than deplorable.

As now developed air craft are the eyes of both armies and navies, and it is difficult to place any limit to their offensive possibilities. In our present condition of unpreparedness, in contact with any foe possessing a proper air service, our scouting would be blind. We would be without the means of detecting the presence of submarines or mine fields or of attempting direct attack on the enemy from the air, while our own movements would be an open book to him.

The General Board cannot too strongly urge that the department's most serious thought be given to this matter, and that immediate steps be taken to remedy it, and recommends that Congress be asked for an appropriation of at least $5,000,000, to be made available immediately, for the purpose of establishing an efficient air service.

While the recommendation of the board was not met in its entirety by Congress, the matter did receive serious consideration and the most important appropriation for the air arm of the navy yet made was passed.

At Pensacola the experiments carried on by the submarine and aviation officers covered a great field. Submarines were sent far out and then proceeded to zigzag about or steam in straight courses, completely submerged, and at times at great depths. Over the waters in which the submarines were operating the naval aviators piloted their machines, the observers focusing their vision on the water below, sometimes using only the naked eyes and at other times searching with the aid of powerful glasses.

From the deck or even the fighting top of a warship of the larger surface types it is almost impossible to discover the approach of a submarine until the submerged craft has arrived within torpedo range, and then, as the present war has proved on more than a dozen occasions, it is too late, and the big ship goes down or else floats away a wreck.

An illustration of the practical impossibility of detecting submarines from the decks or lookouts of a battleship was illustrated not long ago in the Atlantic Fleet.

The story, as it is told in the fleet, is that several of the first line battleships were stationed some distance out at sea with instructions to be on the lookout for the approach of submarines. The officers and men on the ships knew the direction from which the submarines were coming and also knew the time set for their departure from the base.

As the time drew near for the submarines to reach the sides of the battleships every eye was focused on the water in the effort to discover the telltale ripples which would indicate that the submarines were nearing their goal, or perhaps to glimpse the tip of a periscope or even a bit of the upper part of a conning tower.

"There they are!" shouted a keen-eyed observer, and sure enough a short distance away appeared what looked to be the tops of the conning towers of the submarines.

A minute or two passed. Then those on the battleships were surprised to hear a hearty "Hello" from the other side of one of the ships. Up out of the water slowly appeared the submarines. The conning towers that had been discovered were "dummies" cut loose from the submarines at the proper moment to attract the attention and to deceive the lookouts on the ships. It worked to perfection, and the submarines were able to bob up out of the water right alongside the ships without any of them being discovered beforehand.

But the chances are that a different story would be told here had there been an efficiently manned aeroplane or two co-operating with the battleships. While the course of the submerged submarine is practically invisible from the battleship, it is a very different matter when there are one or two pairs of sharp eyes looking straight down from an aeroplane. Persons who have looked at fish in clear waters know that they are much easier to see when the view is straight down instead of at a cross angle. This is also true, and in a greater degree, of the submarine when that vessel is running under water. This likewise explains the emphasis that Admiral Dewey and his colleagues of the General Board placed on the need of a proper air service for the American fleets.

Just as it is easier to discover a submarine from the air than it is from the deck of a ship, so will it also be easier some day, in the opinion of many experts, to combat more successfully the submarine from above. All that is needed is a reliable range finder, and there is reason to believe that such a range finder will be one of the realizations of the near future.

Guarded reports made from the United States Army aviation station at San Diego, Cal., are to the effect that officers of the Signal Corps of the army have perfected a range finder, with which some remarkable results have already been obtained. Flying at high altitudes, army aviators have been able to drop bombs on objects, some of them very small, with an accuracy that has been described as almost unbelievable.

Therefore with the aid of such a range finder it would be possible for the naval aeroplane, once it has discovered the hidden enemy, to swoop down to a proper altitude, or up as the case may be, quickly obtain the range, and let go the bomb. There could be but one result if the bomb hit the mark and exploded at the proper moment, and that would be the destruction or putting out of action of the submarine.

But the aeroplane is not the only means at hand to combat the submarine. There is also the speedy destroyer, which carries guns of sufficient calibre to sink any submarine, and which can scout in submarine-infested waters with comparative safety so far as the submarine is concerned. The destroyer, proceeding at a speed of thirty knots or more, and offering a small target, is something that the underwater craft has not been able successfuly to combat. The greatest of the British successes against hostile submarines in the present war have been achieved by the British destroyers.

Then, of course, there are the "net traps" the British are said to be using, and in which one submarine at least is said to have become ensnared; there are mines, and the submarine sound-carrying systems by which, some experts claim, the approach of the submarine, its distance away, and its direction may be ascertained in time for the battleship or cruiser to escape. Up to the present time, however, there is no evidence at hand to prove that these sound-carrying devices have to any extent affected the efficiency of the submarines.

It should also be borne in mind that all parts of a submarine are "vital parts" and that one well-directed shot or well-placed bomb is sure to put it out of action. As the aeroplane is generally conceded to offer the best means of discovering submarines, it stands to reason that a missile from an aeroplane would be the easiest to deliver, and if, as seems probable, the aeroplane range finder is successfully developed, the most certain of all to hit the desired target.

RUSSIA'S EXPULSION OF JEWS

Horrors Wrought by a Decree That Forced 200,000 People at Short Notice to Leave War Zone

This article, signed "Mentor," appeared in The Jewish Chronicle of July 23, and will be read with wide interest.

ALMOST from the beginning of the war stories have come to hand of Russian cruelties toward the Jews. The Pope, in the course of a newspaper interview, recently rather more than hinted at them.

The source from which most of them that have reached this country were derived has, however, necessarily demanded extreme caution, if it has not imposed some suspicion. It has been difficult, as was explained, to disentangle the false from the true, to measure aright what was fact and what was exaggeration.

It was difficult, too, to determine how much was more than—and in Heaven's name it was enough!—the necessities of military operations, the dire demands of the war, and how much was cruelty practiced upon our people under the guise of military necessity.

For the most part, the inclination has naturally been to give to the Russian Government as an ally of this country the benefit of the doubt, and in view of the general situation not to say a word upon such material as came to hand that would be harassing to an ally fighting side by side with England.

But there are limits. And the limit is reached when silence involves traitorousness to truth. Facts which have been detailed to the present writer by friends in whose impartiality and veracity he could have nothing but perfect confidence are backed up and confirmed to a large extent by an official document, an Order of the Day, issued by the Russian Generalissimo.

This order seems to have been promulgated in March last. It decreed nothing less than the expulsion of all Jews from the military zones in Galicia, Bukowina, and Poland. The excuse for this terrible determination was an easy one to find ready to hand. It was the alleged disloyalty of the Jewish population. That allegation, needless to say, could have been based at most upon the treason of a few individuals. But the Russian Government, bettering Burke, indicted a whole nation. The decree, too, was directed not at any locality, or at any general section of the population. It was a decree against Jews as Jews.

And now we have the result. Some two hundred thousand Jews who had been living in the confines of Kovno, Courland, and Sulwalki were exiled by the Russian authorities, so that, in the technical language employed, those districts might be "evacuated of Jews."

Our unfortunate brethren upon whom this decree fell were compelled to obey it by a short notice, varying from eight hours to thirty at the most. In that time two hundred thousand people had to leave their homes, their possessions, their all, and face—they knew not what!

What followed requires the pen of Dante adequately to narrate. Not one Jewish soul of all this vast population was allowed to remain, so that towns which had contained a large proportion of Jewish inhabitants were deserted. Aged men, little children, women—even those hourly expecting to become mothers—some clutching to their breasts their new-born babes; people insane, cripples, the blind; those who were sick unto death—there was no exemption for any.

The decree, it must be admitted, had at least the merit of impartiality. For not only were the families of soldiers fighting at the front doomed by it, but soldiers who had received permission for furlough in their native towns, and soldiers whose bleeding wounds were still unhealed, the Jewish nurses who attended them in the local hospitals, and even the Jewish military doctors—all had to go into exile. Even the rage and fury of battle respects the Red Cross. Sheltered beneath that symbol are the wounded in war, and those who are attendant upon the soldiers who have fallen.

But this decree tore away Jews whose condition entitled them to safety as if shielded by the sacred sign from the terrors of belligerency, and it sent them with their brothers and sisters into exile. No wonder we read that the poor people were maddened unto despair; that they turned and destroyed their goods and chattels, their household goods of generations, preferring to leave behind them the ruin of their property rather than it should fall into the hands of the despoilers.

It were futile to attempt to describe with anything like completeness what this horrible decree meant to the two hundred thousand poor Jews upon whom it fell. But the order for their expulsion was not the end by any means of the horrors which awaited them.

For the conveyance of these people from their homes to some far distant eastern province, there were provided some twenty-six "extra trains," as they were called. Each of these "trains" consisted of from forty to seventy wagons into which was huddled pell-mell this population of misery. The poor people had been able to take with them only a few of the most necessary of their possessions, and there in these "trains" they were crowded together—men, women and children of all kinds, "well-to-do people and professional beggars," as my correspondent puts it, "sound persons and infectious patients, all of them thrown together in this living load." None of them knew whither they were going.

With exquisite regard for the sufferings of their exiled passengers, the slow moving "trains" were not allowed to stop at stations where food could be supplied to the poor wretches. The "trains" could stop only at a distance of at least one kilometer from any station. But the poor stricken people who were carted away in these "trains" were perhaps not much worse off than the thousands upon thousands for whom the "trains" had no accommodation, but who had to leave none the less.

In every sort of conveyance for which, of course, extortionate prices were demanded, these people rumbled away along the roads; or footsore and weary they tramped along outside the forbidden war zone. Like an avalanche of human misery they came into towns already filled with populations in which poverty ruled. Cellars, barns, outhouses—every nook and cranny was filled with this exiled population. Even the synagogues were turned into doss houses. These destitutes had to beg for sheer life; they could, however, appeal only to the charity of the pauperism into which they were driven.

But above all this they were forced to galling personal grief. For in the suddenness of the exile to which they were compelled families became separated. Wives lost their husbands, brothers their sisters, and little children were parted from their mothers. Some were sent here, others were sent there, with regard to nothing save the the capacity of the "extra trains," or the availability of other means for conveyance—all was subservient to the one idea that the war zone districts must be evacuated of Jews.

To such an extent did this misery of missed relatives occur that special inquiry offices had to be established at several points outside the war zones by Jews for the purpose of recovering lost persons. What life was like upon the "extra trains" can as little be imagined as described. In at least one case the "extra train" was not allowed by the local authorities to go into the station for which it was destined. The consequence was that the poor people, still huddled in these wagons, were compelled to return hundreds upon hundreds of miles. There they were not allowed to remain; they were sent back to their destination! Thus they were hunted backward and forward for five weeks.

Twenty-eight of the poor passengers became insane through their sufferings; typhus broke out in this "extra train"; and death—cruel, lingering death—was the only mercy that it seemed to the harassed victims would be shown them by a fate against which they were powerless.

Let me break off for a moment here to remind the reader that this is a mere bald recitation of human suffering in Europe—it is not an imagined picture of the doomed in hell. Nor was it suffering inflicted by an invading army upon enemies. The victims were not belligerents. They were civilian citizens of Russia herself—save those who were Russia's soldiers, some bearing the wounds and the hurts of Russia's combat.

Now, let us see what sort of disloyalty reigned in the breasts of these hunted and harassed Jews. The boldest and bravest of men could well have been cowed into submission, into yielding up well-nigh every principle that honor, loyalty and courage demanded, after having suffered as these people had suffered. But, notwithstanding everything, we find them possessed of a spirit which in the circumstances it would be difficult to discover among average men and women.

Listen to this! After the "evacuation" had taken place, several Jewish organizations made urgent representations to the Russian Ministers in behalf of the expelled Jews. Deputations of prominent Jews waited upon the Ministers, and at last, after some days had elapsed and the exile had been effected, a promise was given that the whole measure was to be annulled. To be annulled! As if the mischief could be undone! However, if it meant anything, it meant that the poor people could go back to their homes, back to the ruins of them that they would find, and there on their native soil begin again their hard, bitter lives. It thus meant release from exile for them.

But the Military General Governor into whose hands the decree of annulment seems to have been placed declared that the return of Jews to their homes could be sanctioned only on condition that they gave to the military authorities hostages from the ranks of their rabbis and the influential and better off among them. He added that the population was to understand that, in case there was the smallest treason discovered on the part of any Jews, the hostages would be hanged.

The deputation to whom this information was conveyed in turn communicated it to the Jewish exiles. These met together to discuss what they should do. They conferred for three days, and then these "traitorous Jews," these despised exiles, these men and women who had suffered every horror, who had faced every indignity, who had borne every insult and all the pains and penalties of this wicked, murderous evacuation—these men and women came to this decision: that "we reject the Government's proposal because of the condition under which alone they will grant it, for it is not consistent with the dignity of Judaism"!

These, then, were the sort of "traitors" that the Russian Government hunted and hounded in its "evacuation." This was the sort of spirit that filled these people. They were not soldiers on the battlefield in the conventional meaning of the term, but they were true soldiers on life's battlefield, fighting an unequal contest against overwhelming odds. And they refused their liberty, their freedom, their lives, their homes, because these could be gained only by a demeaning condition; they preferred exile to a dishonoring pact "inconsistent with the dignity of Judaism."

One almost feels something of gratitude to the Russian Government for having been the means of showing the sort of stuff of which the people whom they dare thus to persecute are made.

To the terrors of war we have become so inured that many will read the story of this "evacuation" of Jews from the war zone, it is difficult to believe, without a shudder, but it may be with but a passing shudder. They will relegate it to the grim and awful catalogue of the terrors of war time. But the information which comes from Russia shows that this wholesale baiting of Jews is likely to go on.

Already there are fears that the Jews in the other districts are likely to be deported, and meetings have been held both in Petrograd and the provinces in view of the threatened danger. There, again, the fine spirit of our people has become manifested. They have refused to purchase their liberty under any such degrading conditions as giving hostages for their good behavior.

It is said, too, that side by side with this threatened fresh exile—and this exile, recollect, means deportation for perhaps hundreds of miles—there are rumors, which seem at least to have some solid basis, that from high quarters there has issued an order for the collection of anti-Semitic material against Jewish soldiers. We know what that means, and we know, too, that every untoward incident in which any individual Jews may become involved will be employed to the full to the hurt of Jews in general.

The sole responsibility of Russia and the Russian Government for their conduct toward Jews and other subject nationalities has been more than once contested in this paper. The influence of German anti-Semites and German anti-Semitism has been an element which could not be overlooked. There is nothing that has occurred to shake the opinion that the root of the trouble of the Jew in Russia is to be found in Germany.

This awful narrative may be taken, therefore, as the full fruit of that country's influence in Russia. It will not tend to tire any who read it of the task which this country has undertaken because it is told of one of this country's allies. It will, it is hoped, make men see all the clearer the necessity for ridding Russia from German influence, in the hope that thereby the conditions of our people and others in Russia who are subjects of the Czar may be bettered.

Germany's responsibility, great or small, however, does not excuse or palliate the wickedness, the infernal, devilish wickedness of such doings as were involved in the "evacuation" of Jews in the war zones and which have here been set down. Is the story untrue? Then the Russian Government has the means of denying its truth and of giving proof of its incorrectness. If it be true, then loyalty to truth, which nothing ought to depose as the highest duty, demands that the facts shall be known even though Russia is an ally of this country. It is as necessary as if—forgive the bare suggestion—these horrors were the work of the Government of England itself. For if the alliance between Russia and England imposes upon English citizens an obligation toward Russia, surely that same alliance imposes upon Russia a like obligation to England. * * *

To persecute Jews as Jews have been persecuted by the decree of "evacuation" from the war zones, to expect that this foul deed can be effected and that Jews—in England—can be dumb and utter not a word because of Anglo-Russian relations, is an abuse of the principles underlying the alliance. * * *

Thus perhaps, after all, the gravest charge against her involved in this "evacuation" crime is that Russia by her acts against our people has herself been disloyal to the Triple Entente. Writing as I do in England as an English-born citizen of this blessed country, the aspect of the matter naturally appeals to me as it affects England only. Yet let us not forget that the third element in the Triple Entente is the fair country of France wedded to the high ideal of "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity." Her sons, like England's, are bleeding upon the battlefield in defense of these high ideals which England and France hold in common. While they are dying for the undying cause of those ideals Russia, by her treatment of her Jewish subjects, is trampling those ideals in the very dust.

IS ENGLAND APATHETIC? NO

Sir Gilbert Parker Tells What Nation Has Done Since the War Began and Makes a Challenge

The article printed below was sent from England by Sir Gilbert Parker in response to a series of questions cabled to him on the occasion of the first anniversary of the outbreak of the war in Europe. Readers of THE NEW YORK TIMES will find the article one of the most striking and illuminating contributions to the literature of the great conflict.

By Sir Gilbert Parker.

YOU ask me to look back over the first year of the great war and tell you what I think about it in relation to several vital factors of England's life.

In one sense, Americans can judge as well as I what has been done; but it is worth saying that, when the unpreparedness of Great Britain and her overseas dominions for a great land war is remembered, the accomplishment is immense.

The British Army was not more than 250,000, excluding the reserves. There are now in training or in the field 350,000 troops of the overseas dominions alone, while this country, on estimate, has at least 2,775,000 men in the field or in training.

We are producing probably 350 times as much ammunition per month as we produced in September last, and we have supplied our allies also with munitions of war.

The achievement of our armies and of the allies, as a whole, has been enormous.

Germany had prepared for forty years for a great European war, in which she would make herself the supreme power of the world, dispossessing Great Britain on land and sea and making it impossible for any other nation, however powerful, to challenge or to revolt against her supremacy.

She had laid up great stores of munitions, she had organized for a vast production when war should begin; she had, with mathematical precision, meticulously, and with devoted industry made her whole industrial, commercial, and educational life conform to a military organization for national and imperial purposes.

Her object was not the object of nations with civil, humanitarian, and social ideals. Power, not the amelioration of human life or the development of individual independence and character, was her object and her goal.

Therefore, when the war broke out, she had such a military machine as the world had never seen. And it must not be forgotten that Austria, which is so constantly left out of the calculations of the world in thinking about this war, had also made huge military preparations, as was shown by the great guns she brought into the field in the very early stages of the war.

To talk of Germany fighting the world is nonsense. Germany and Austria, two great central empires of Europe, with 117,000,000 of people, are fighting the Allies. In the field of war they were able at the start to put nearly twice as many equipped men into the field as the Allies.

That they did not defeat the Allies is a marvel.

It is also splendid evidence of the capacity of the Allies and of Great Britain's power; for, though Great Britain's sector of the field of battle has been small, her contributions in other directions have been prodigious, all things considered.

She has had troops fighting in France, Belgium, the Dardanelles, Egypt, British East Africa, Southwest Africa, the Cameroons, and the Persian Gulf.

Her navy has done what was expected of it. It has cleared the seas of German commerce and German ships of war. It has taken some of Germany's island possessions in the South Seas. It has bottled up the German fleet behind its mine fields, rendering it powerless, and it is now waiting patiently for that navy to come out and give battle.

In money and in munitions, and by her sea power enabling the Allies to trade freely, she has played a great part in this conflict, and presently the part will be gigantic, for she will have an army of 3,000,000 equipped, backed by a preponderating navy.

By next Winter her output of shells will give her superiority in that field, and she will be able to supply Russia with much that she needs. It has not been German bravery which has kept Russia back, which has dispossessed Russia of ground which she won by valor, but shells and guns, which the Germans had in abundance.

Great Britain asleep! The American nation may be assured, in spite of all carping and pessimistic statements, that Great Britain and her people are awake, and no democracy ever produced a voluntary army approximating three millions in the world's history, not even your United States.

You resorted to compulsory service for your great civil war. It may be that we shall not get through this war without compulsory service, but the response to the call of the Government for men has vastly exceeded what was thought possible.

In spite of her critics, whose object no doubt was so to alarm the nation that we should secure the utmost contribution of her strength, it is certain that there is not a street in the most secluded town or village of this kingdom which has not felt the call and contributed, if not to its utmost, then sufficient to show that the utmost will be forthcoming.

We are a slow people, but without boasting it may be said that we are sure; and that the citizens of this empire do not love their land and are concerned for its future less than the Germans are for Germany is a statement which time and fact are belying.

You ask me how, in this limited monarchy, the war has affected the democracy.

First let me say that the democracy governs itself; though it has a king as the permanent and stable element in the Constitution, representing the principles and traditions of that Constitution through their long course of development, by being also the head of his people; the chief of his clan, as it were.

Well, wealth and peace are potent factors in every country toward separating people into classes. Even the United States has not escaped that. Social distinctions quite as imperious as in this country exist there, though they are not so extensive, not so carefully graded.

A great war like this shakes people of all classes and sections together to do the work demanded by the vital emergency.

So it is that a labor leader like Will Crooks, whose opinions have been repeated by many of his colleagues, says that the officer-peer and the artisan-private have shown the same valor, the same sense of duty; that the man higher up, as he is called in America, has, with an unmatched gallantry, risked and lost his life, hand in hand with the man on the lower levels.

You ask me if I think that Kitchener's army is democratic in a wide sense.

Let me say this: that what is called "Kitchener's Army" is the most democratic, and it is probably the best, army that ever took the field since the armies of the civil war of the United States won their reputation.

In it are a very high proportion of elementary school teachers as non-commissioned officers, who are trained to organize and direct, who are typical of the bridging of the gulf between classes by the bond of education.

But not only Kitchener's new battalions are democratized. The professional army was always a mere handful, and to bring up the required battalions to war strength, to fill the gaps, a stream of reserve officers and men was called up—"city" men, lawyers, university lecturers, industrial workers, policemen, street car drivers, &c. These took their place in the framework at once.

Hence, the whole of the British armies in this conflict are like the American armies in the civil war.

They possess the intelligence, method, perseverance, the devoted courage of the Northerners, and the natural aptitude, adaptability, and improvising power of the Southerners.

In this war officers and men are brought into much closer association than in any previous wars, since it has been a trench war, and, figuratively speaking, they sleep under the same blanket and eat out of the same dish.

In the close and confined area of the trenches officer and man are shoulder to shoulder, with practically no distinction in dress, while all are practically doing the same thing. The companionship of danger and purpose and endurance was never better manifested.

How many hundreds of stories have we heard and letters have we read from privates, telling how splendid, self-sacrificing, tirelessly considerate for their comfort, and utterly regardless of danger, their officers were; and how many hundreds of letters and how many speeches of officers have we read in which they tell of the magnificent courage, selflessness, cheerfulness and friendship of the private.

Their acts of heroism for each other have produced a great camaraderie. What began in duty has ended in affection.

"He was terrible bad hurt," said a private of his officer in a letter which I saw a day or two ago—"he was hurt so bad he had to groan, and he kept apologizing to us, saying he wished he could help it.

"He was true blue he was, and the hurt he had would ha' made any man squeal.

"Well, we just held 'is hands and done what we could, and one of my pals what was hurt too, he crawled over and he kissed the officer on the cheek, and they was both dead in half an hour. They was both good pals."

Innumerable stories like that have come to me, and I have in my possession letters now, of men no longer living, telling always of the great deeds done by others, and as time has gone on one has learned from others what they themselves had done.

I am not cracking up the bravery of the British officer or soldier, I am only saying that there never was a war in which officer and man, duke and ditcher, Privy Councilor and miner have so preserved discipline, and yet their personal sympathy, together with the men-to-men attitude.

This is easily understood in a country like the United States, and in all the overseas dominions, for the armies of these new lands must have these characteristics; but it was not generally supposed that, in a nation with a hereditary aristocracy, and apparently dependent classes far below, there would be this democratic feeling and action.

I frankly say that I think this war has democratized the British Army enormously, for in the face of vast issues and prolonged fighting, which tests men to the utmost, the private has lifted himself far above his rank in life by the ennobling feeling of doing a great duty, which yet he calls: "his little bit."

I have seen this in my own household. A footman of mine, with not much apparent personality or sensibility—as how can a footman have much personality in the somewhat rigid work of a household, with its set and specific duties, with even its below-stairs class distinction?—left me to enlist.

He was gone several months in training. I saw him just before he started for the front. He was not the same man that had been in my service. There was modest self-possession; there was determination; there was the dignity of purpose in his bearing when he said to me:

"I'm keen to get out, Sir, I think I'm fit for it now, and I'll try and get one back at them Germans that aren't content to fight, but have to murder, too."

I had a feeling that he would give a good account of himself. I have had several letters from him; but one, received after he had had his baptism of fire, contains a few sentences which describe a revolution taking place, a development increasing with lightning rapidity in the men on the lower levels in this country; while the man on the higher levels of birth, position, and money has stepped down to the level road, where he and Tommy Atkins are one in temper and in character for the national welfare.

Here are the sentences from my footman-friend's letter:

We got as far as where the communication trench began when the Germans caught us, and the shrapnel they put into us was something terrible.

I'm not afraid to say that the first half hour of it I was nearly frightened to death. Still, I never lost my head, and my chums were getting knocked over all around me.

We rushed to a hedge and stayed under it for nearly three hours with the shells ripping up the earth and tearing down trees wholesale. It was not a bang, bang affair; it was one continuous roar of splinterinz.

Our next move was up the trench leading to the firing line. It took us just upon two hours, and the sight I saw there I shall never forget as long as I live. The trench was nearly filled with water, and the wounded men, or rather what had been men, now wrecks of flesh and bone, were crawling through this stuff.

Not till I saw them did I realize how much I wanted to get my bayonet into the body of a German. Perhaps that will come soon. Then I hope the good God will give me courage and strength enough to take a good revenge.

We left the trench soon after midnight. As we were coming along the road I stayed a few seconds with a few more of the Sixtieth at a house where the trees had been blown across the road, and just as we got to the house a German flare went up, and before we had time to take two more steps three Jack Johnsons were tearing the place down about our ears.

I forgot to say that the Germans shelled us with gas shells, so we had to fight with respirators and smoke helmets on. I think you will agree with me when I say that we had a good baptism.

Well, I think it will be agreed that this is the letter of a young man who has found himself.

The other day I watched a regiment of Kitchener's Army at work in Norfolk. The physique of the men was remarkable, they were stalwart, bronzed, healthy, hearty, happy. Willingness, esprit, were everywhere; but the thing that got deep into my mind was the quiet confidence and understanding between the officers and the men.

You would see an officer speaking to a lance corporal as though to a friend, confidentially, as he stood with his company; and the lance corporal replied with easy naturalness. There was no gap of formality between them. When their talk was finished—a talk upon work to be done or work done, something connected with the company—there was no lack of respect. Just as the soldier of old days would have done under the older system, the lance corporal touched his cap.

Discipline was there, but something which made discipline a thing to have joy in, for it was a happiness in common effort for the honor of the regiment. All were playing the game of the Eleven.

One of the most remarkable aspects of this war in the field and in training for the field, is the wonderful happiness of the men. They may be fatigued and worn, but they are never downcast. Nothing has been too good for them as to food and necessaries, and even luxuries.

The love of the nation has been spent on them, but it has not been squandered. In the rough earthquake of war we have been shaken together. Horrible as it all is—the bloodshed, the treasure poured out, the loss in life and material—still we can truthfully say that the nation has profited by its sacrifice, its effort, and its bereavement. National character has been made; inherent goodness has become magnificent merit.

In Parliament some one once said contemptuously of socialism, "When that time comes we shall all be feeding out of the same municipal trough." Well, we are not doing that, but we are all working in the same national field.

There are some slackers—that has always been the case. There are some cowards, but they will not be able to escape the passion of loyalty which is spreading and forever spreading; which is tenfold greater than it was on the 4th of August, 1914.

Yes, your question as to whether drink has prevented Great Britain from rising to the height of her necessity during the year of war should be answered at this point.

I have seen in some American papers most cruel libels upon the British workingman. I have seen London likened to Babylon or Byzantium. I have seen it stated in a Philadelphia paper that 90 per cent. of the people in this country are apathetic, and that this is all due to degeneracy, self-indulgence, and drink.

This is a charge of a ghastly nature; and if it were true, then the fate of Sodom and Gomorrah would be too good for Great Britain and this empire.

England has had great opportunities and vast responsibilities, and her people have done masterly and prodigious things, as her history shows.

She has peopled overseas dominions; she has preserved, with a handful of men, the loyalty of the vast Indian empire; she has a commerce throughout the world greater than that of any other nation; her shipping represents more than half of the world's shipping; and if her people were so degenerate as to fail the State in its hour of need and peril, then indeed should all the world turn their backs upon her.

I make this challenge, however: If half a dozen American journalists of repute and capacity will come to this country and will go into any city, town, or village in England, or come to this vast metropolis, and will take any street in any one of these villages, towns, or in any borough of London, I declare that he will find, not 90 per cent. apathetic, but 90 per cent. representing homes from which some person is gone to fight, to be trained to fight, is employed in the manufacture of munitions of war, or has relatives fighting, preparing to fight, or occupied in the manufacture of munitions of war, or some other work which is essentially war work.

I know of what I speak. It has been tried. An American journalist has gone from house to house in one of the worst quarters of London, and the truth of my statement has been sustained. I make this challenge; I hope it will be accepted; I have no doubt of the result.

Drink there is and has always been in this country, and too much drink. Congestion, with poverty and crowded homes, of great cities such as New York, Chicago, St. Louis, Philadelphia, Boston, or London, Paris, or Rome, and many others one knows, is the cause of excess.

There was a sudden, passionate outburst on the part of an English Minister to the effect that it was drink which prevented us from winning the war, through irregular work in the factories where munitions were made.

That was taken with great seriousness in this country; it was taken with infinitely greater seriousness in countries like the United States.

The same Minister who made that statement now declares that the lack of munitions was due to lack of organization months ago. Both things are in part true, but only in part.

Undoubtedly in the rush and excitement, in the demand for extra output, a percentage of the workmen who drink and who ordinarily drink too much plunged into greater self-indulgence, and to some extent helped to disorganize the mass.

But again, if any one who knows this country will come here now and go from town to town, village to village, and city to city, will make inquiry at public houses, will go to the usual saloon resorts, he will find that, though wages are higher, though there is more employment than there has been for many years, there is less drink, not more.

We have no right to expect the sympathy of the United States and of other neutral countries if England is more drunken now than she was; and we have a right to ask that, when these charges are made against her, investigation should also be made.

The responsibility of the people of this country is great, and American journalistic enterprise would only be doing its duty if it made the investigation which I suggest, since this great war is an international question, and the judgment of neutral nations must affect the end of it directly and indirectly.

The real result of the war has been, not to increase general depravity, but, through the greater inflow of money, to increase the depravity of those already depraved. There has been a great drain from industry into the army; certain industries have enormously increased their demand for labor; therefore the premium on the labor of the disreputable 10 per cent of the drinking laboring classes has been vastly increased.

The misdoings of the 10 per cent. set up a certain amount of sympathetic demoralization and interfere materially with sober workmen in jobs that require co-operation, as, for instance, the riveters in shipbuilding.

This unsatisfactory minority will now be dealt with under powers granted by the Government, to the great satisfaction of labor as a whole, which repudiates the acts of the inevitable minority of degraded workers.

You ask me, "How has the war affected the suffrage movement and the suffrage disorders which were so widespread in this country over a year ago?"

Well, in the first place, immediately after the declaration of war, the Women's Social and Political Union called a meeting and suspended the publication of their organ, The Suffragette, and mobilized all their members for national work: that is, nursing, production of clothing, relief work, &c.

The leaders of the suffragette movement soon saw that the individual devotion of its members was not enough, so they resolved to devote their vast organization, as an organization, to national purposes. Officially they organized recruiting meetings; they made a reissue of The Suffragette as a war paper, which is doing good work in combating the stupid criticism of a small minority with cosmopolitan sympathies, who are full of the love of God and all their fellow creatures, and who would throw bouquets to murderers, because human sympathy is such a divine thing!

It is notable that the leaders of the suffragette movement desire a thorough settlement, that they want, not alone peace with honor, but peace of such a nature as shall see the world secured against a barbarous and aggressive militarism.

Miss Annie Kenney was asked by me whether the Social and Political Union approved of The Hague Peace Conference of Women.

The reply was: "No. We think the evolution of the woman movement in the last generation has produced two types—the success and the failure.

"The personnel of the Peace Conference represented the failure. We sent to The Hague one of our members to protest, and we saw that the conference was merely playing into Germany's hands. Every woman who attended that conference will one day bitterly repent it."

Miss Kenney was asked whether suffragette activity in the national cause would ultimately affect the question of the vote.

The reply was that the vote question was not in their minds, that the vote will come of itself; that if they knew for certain that it would be denied for an indefinite period they should still work every bit as strenuously as they were working now; that the greater cause comes before the less for all Britishers—the cause of liberty and democracy.

She said that if the Allies win the woman's cause will be at most retarded, but that if Prussianism wins the whole cause of freedom would be immeasurably weakened and set back, that women's suffrage would not merely be retarded, but removed from the sphere of possibility altogether. And Miss Kenney added:

"No. Our union is too sensible of the danger to tolerate any compromise with Prussianism. We have never been believers in compromise with injustice."

She was finally asked how she would sum up the present attitude of the suffragettes. The answer was very fine; and I, who have been opposed to the granting of the vote to women, frankly say that it is an utterance deserving of perpetual remembrance. This is what she said:

"Duties come before rights. We have dared to demand; we have also the courage to give to the uttermost."

That is what this war has done. It has made men and women who differ fundamentally in many things, who have opposed each other politically, meet with a common patriotism on the ground of deeper fundamentals still, on the ground of issues that affect the whole of civilization, and not alone the social and political history of one country.

You have not asked me the question to which I am now going to reply, but I am going to ask it of myself. It is this:

"What has been the part played by the United States in this year of war? From the British standpoint, has she helped or retarded us?"

The account which we render of ourselves brings no blush to our cheeks, though we differ and criticise and gibe and challenge each other, as Britishers have always done, as Americans did in the time of their civil war, when Lincoln's heart was almost broken by opposition from his political foes, and by savage criticism of his friends. At this time we are all in a state not perfectly normal.

We are living, as it were, at the top of our being, and we are inclined to exaggerate, to be extravagant in denunciation or in criticism when things do not go as we think they ought to do, but go as they always do in war, with staggering ups and downs.

There are those among us who have thought that the United States, as a vast democracy inspired by high national ideals, and as the enemy of all reactionary and tyrannical elements, might have done more to help us in our fight for civilization, might indeed have entered the war with us.

But let me say—and in this I believe I speak for the great majority of British people—that we have not had the least desire to invoke the armed assistance of the United States, or to influence her in the slightest in this matter.

The United States has performed immense service to the Allies by resisting all attempts to wean or force her from her neutrality by prohibiting the export of munitions of war. Her perfect propriety and adherence to the spirit of true neutrality have resisted German pressure.

Secondly, the services she has performed to civilization by organizing relief for Belgium have been a service to humanity, and therefore a service to the Allies, who are fighting to restore to Belgium her ursurped dominion.

Thirdly, the United States has rendered immense services to this country by caring for the interests of British subjects abroad, and above all, by making the lot of British prisoners of war easier. Some of the worst cruelties and inhuman oppressions have been removed by her intervention.

Lastly, her sympathy, expressed in a thousand ways, and not the least by fair consideration of the action taken by Great Britain in the blockade and other matters, has eased the minds of millions of King George's subjects. Lack of sympathy might easily have misinterpreted the acts of our Government.

I wish Americans would believe that in this country there has been since this war began a larger and truer understanding of the American people. For my own part I have known the United States intimately for many years, have had faith in her national purposes and confidence in her diplomatic integrity, and, from reading her history, a realization of her sense of justice.

And in this war of ideals, fundamentally different, I believe the people of both nations have come to a sense of kinship and of mutual admiration, not diminished by the possible mistakes which may have been made by Great Britain largely due to improvised organization, or in the United States by her rigid neutrality, which may not have seemed to chime with her sympathy.

Her diplomacy has been unimpeachable, and we in Great Britain are grateful for an understanding which is as material a support as an army in the field.

MEXICO BALKS THE RED CROSS

Railroads Are Not Running, and Little Can Be Done to Help, Says Miss Mabel T. Boardman

By Edward Marshall.

WHILE the flaming sword of war has come to be the common symbol of nearly every European country, as well as of unhappy Mexico, we, the greatest of the world's republics, are represented upon every firing line by the red cross of mercy.

Our work in Belgium is the one spot of brightness in a blood-drenched, conquered land.

In Mexico, where war has brought a famine, we are striving vigorously to distribute food to starving hordes, in spite of ruined railways and often hostile beneficiaries.

In the Balkans, where warfare has been incessant and has left deadly fever in its trail, we are fighting typhus for a helpless population.

For the good of an entirely alien people in unhappy China we have sent our engineers to the earth's furthest side to save the land from flood and the resultant tragedy of drowned thousands, ruined homes and lands, and starvation for uncounted multitudes.

From an old-time, now somewhat shabby red-brick building, once a residential mansion, radiates our nation's energy which thus strives to soothe and save while almost all the balance of the world is radiating forces of destruction. This building is the headquarters of the American Red Cross, and there I saw, the other day, Miss Mabel T. Boardman, Chairman of the National Relief Board and member of the Executive Committee.

"We are doing what we can," said she, "but there is so much to do! The world seems to have gone mad.

"Generous as America has been, we continually must beg for more, and then still more, conscious all the time that, no matter how tremendous our charity may be, it inevitably must fail to mitigate more than slightly the awful sum of the world's woe in these years of tragic climaxes.

"And we have less to work with than is at the disposal of the Red Cross in certain other nations. Japan has $13,000,000 in her Red Cross reserve fund, Russia had $19,000,000 in hers in 1911. We, in ours, have less than a single million.

"In the ten years ended with the 1st of January last the American Red Cross had distributed more than $9,750,000, of which not much more than half had been spent within our own boundaries and territorial possessions.

"That speaks rather highly, does it not, for American generosity toward others?

"The proportion of funds spent upon our own would have been smaller still had it not been for the two vast disasters, the earthquake and fire in San Francisco, to the sufferers from which we contributed more than $3,087,000, and the Ohio storm and flood in 1913, which cost the American Red Cross almost $2,500,000.

"Of the eighty-seven principal occasions of our giving, fifty-five were foreign to our territory and our people—far more than half.

"And now we are confronted by an agony unspeakable among our sister nations on the other side of the Atlantic. Since the European war began, despite a constant outpouring of American generosity, the calls for help have been unceasingly insistent.

"The $1,460,000 already expended or obligated for by the American Red Cross is but a little portion of the sum which would be needed were we to attempt adequately to meet the opportunity for generosity which Europe's madness thrusts before us.

"The demands of the great war are ceaseless, the misery it is creating seems immeasurable, a charity which should meet all needs of the incredible horror which involves so great a portion of the civilized world would be unbelievably tremendous."

"What has our generosity actually amounted to in this war?" I inquired.

"We have spent over a million in actual cash for Belgium," answered Miss Boardman. "In addition to the contribution to her saddened people of vast food supplies, Red Cross supplies and other necessaries, we have sent her nurses and physicians.

"Through the Red Cross not less than a million and a half in cash and necessaries have been sent to all Europe, and not all American contributions have gone through our organization.

"Without knowing anything definite about it, I feel justified in expressing the belief that the Germans in this country have given not less than two millions for relief in their Fatherland, and, in a sense, that surely must be ranked as an American contribution.

"Of the designated funds which we have distributed, those to be sent to and spent in and for Germany have been the greater in sum total. I suppose such designated funds have come principally from Americans of German blood.

"Shipments of relief supplies have been made, through the Red Cross, to every one of the belligerent nations except Japan, who refused our offered aid entirely because her own able Red Cross made it unnecessary. Neither have we aided the German and Austrian prisoners in Siberia. These latter sufferers we cannot reach. Otherwise we should have helped them.

"We have contributed especially all kinds of hospital supplies—absorbent cotton, bandages, drugs, instruments, even complete hospital outfits, including tents, and ambulances. A good deal of the money given to us has come with the direction that it must be expended for the purchase of certain designated things included in this general category.

"The whole country has responded wonderfully. We have not yet had time to tabulate the sections as to generosity, but New York, of course, has given most in money—surely not less than $500,000, and this in addition to generous contributions of supplies. Mr. Bush of Brooklyn has even donated the use of a great warehouse at the Bush Terminal for the storage of collected Red Cross supplies.

"In view of the fact that the beginning of the European war was coincident with much actual suffering in and many demands for help from our own country, this generosity has been amazing.

"The first contributors were people of large wealth, but gradually all classes have been stirred to give. How I admire my countrymen and countrywomen! They never have disappointed the Red Cross. They never will, if a real need is made entirely clear to them.

"Almost every conceivable thing which could take comfort to the zone of tragedy has come to us for distribution. For example, more than 10,000,000 cigarettes have been intrusted to us, some specifically intended for the Allies, and some for the German fighting men.

"More than a million yards of hospital gauze have been contributed, 211,000 hospital gowns have been sent to us and shipped, more than a million surgical dressings and pads have been donated, and I find upon my list, among a multitude of other things, 31,000 pounds of anaesthetic, 892,000 pounds of cotton, (mostly absorbent,) 209,000 articles of clothing for refugees, more than 70 cases of typhoid and tetanus antitoxin, 10,000 smallpox vaccine tubes, 29,000 mufflers, 28,000 pairs of socks—and so on.

"For the sanitary commission which went into the Balkans to fight typhus money was donated for the purchase of great quantities of supplies, including 358,000 pounds of sulphur, 11 motor trucks, 3,000 rolls of ribbon paper to be used in pasting windows to make rooms airtight for fumigation, hundreds of barrels of old flour for making paste, many spray pumps, 35,000 gallons of phinotas oil, 7,000 gallons of kerosene to use in spraying for the destruction of typhus-carrying vermin.

"A wonderful piece of work is that done by Dr. Strong and his associates. Solely through their efforts typhus now is under control in Montenegro, and almost has been mastered in Serbia.

"Dr. Strong is a remarkable man. He did extraordinary work during the pneumonic plague in Mukden, working for five weeks with four inches of wadding over his mouth as a safeguard against infection.

"He both saved himself and conquered the plague. Harvard well may be proud of the man who occupies her chair of tropical diseases.

"In Serbia he now is mercifully revolutionizing a distracted nation. He has a special railway train and with it goes from place to place, gathering in the people, washing them, fumigating their their clothing and their houses, instructing them in sanitation. Two of the Americans, Drs. Macgruder and Donnelly of our regular surgeons, died at their posts. Eight of our doctors had the typhus fever and recovered, as did twelve or fifteen of our nurses.

"In every one of the warring European countries except Italy, where our aid is not yet needed, we have now surgeons and nurses. To England, Belgium, Germany, Austria, Russia, France, and Serbia hospital units each made up of three surgeons and twelve nurses, and some of them of double that numerical strength, have been sent.

"In all, including the sanitary personnel under Dr. Strong, 367 have gone from the United States.

"No other nation ever sent so large a number to a war with which it had no actual concern. During the Russo-Japanese war Germany sent a fully equipped field hospital to Russia. To the Balkan war Germany, England, and Russia and other countries sent hospital units. But our work remains unprecedented—though so much more is needed.

"It seems so very hopeless! When the Red Cross works to save flood sufferers in China it also works to preserve China from like floods in future, although floods are not man-made.

"But all these things are 3,000 miles away or more, while Mexico is at our door. The famine there is very terrible, and we can know but little of it, for of all great disasters a famine is the only one of which it obviously is impossible to get a birdseye view.

"Brig. Gen. Devol, General Manager of the American Red Cross, after investigations on the border and in Vera Cruz, reports conditions to be very bad, and adds that even if the American people should contribute adequately for relief there still would be no way by means of which food might be properly distributed.

"We have gone into Monterey, Monclova, and elsewhere, and have managed to get a small quantity of hospital supplies up to Mexico City.

"But the railroads are not running, and we can do but little.

"If we could get into Mexico the American people would give to help her. But as it is, what can we do? It seems very hopeless."

BRIDGEPORT AN AMERICAN ESSEN

Quiet New England City Transformed Into Mars' Workshop by the Great Struggle in Europe

THE attention of industrial America has just been turned upon Bridgeport because of misunderstandings and rumors of misunderstandings—principally the former—between the manufacturers of that city and numbers of their employes growing out of the alleged efforts of European agents to bring about interference and disturbance in the manufacture of munitions of war. With the growth of the discussion came the information that the quiet, homelike Little New England city is bidding for world fame as Mars's workshop.

There is little or nothing in the physical aspect of the pretty Connecticut commonwealth to indicate such a condition of affairs, yet Bridgeport is making such strides in the manufacture of arms and munitions, war motor trucks, and war machinery that it is upon the very threshold of becoming the American Essen.

Today its light artillery is to be found upon nearly every battlefield of Europe and is a feature upon the smaller naval vessels of the world; Bridgeport rifles are winning infantry battles daily; Bridgeport bayonets enjoy universal fame; Bridgeport shells and cartridges are going forward to the firing lines by hundreds of thousands, while Bridgeport automobiles transport troops and supplies throughout the various war zones, from frozen Archangel to the sunny slopes at the head of the Adriatic.

In order to turn out these military supplies Bridgeport has shifted temporarily from many of its varied industries, its few unemployed have gone to work, an army of artisans from outside have drifted to town and found employment, and there is work for many more who will be brought from less favored industrial centres. Already the tip has gone from coast to coast: "If you want work, write the Bridgeport Manufacturers' Association." Predictions are freely heard on all sides that unless some unexpected check is encountered Bridgeport will grow by leaps and bounds to a city of half a million population within the next few years.

The sociological and psychological changes that are being wrought in the evolution of a community of widely diversified manufactured products into a New World Essen are extremely interesting. Bridgeport is as yet on the halfway road between a small town and a metropolis. There are no slums, no long rows of "company houses" or cottages, and no tenements. Neither is there any marked social division between the successful manufacturer and the workingman. Every one knows every one else, and there is a general understanding that every one is boosting for the permanent growth and development of his home city.

The workers are scattered throughout the city, occupying comfortable homes nestled among the trees that abound everywhere. They have taken root, bought their own homes, and belong to Bridgeport quite as much as the boss does. The foreign-born population is so small as compared with the whole that its members have become amalgamated with the community instead of drifting into distinctive settlements. The only suggestion of the Old World is found in the typically Slavic architecture of the Greek Catholic churches, the Oriental domes of two or three synagogues and Hungarian and Polish signs over assembly rooms.

From these comfortable homes the workers go to and from the shops in automobiles—for Bridgeport, a pioneer in the jitney service, has gone stark mad on the subject. The craze swept over the city throughout the Spring months, and, of course, will not be put to the crucial test until snowfall, when the jitney operators will have physical difficulties to contend with. Meanwhile, during the long Summer, automobiles convey one almost anywhere in town for a nickel. It may be a hard blow to the traction interests, but it is exceedingly comfortable and convenient to the working man or woman.

Selling agents are disposing of cars on weekly or monthly payments, and many of these have been bought by workmen, who sally forth at 6 o'clock in the morning to convey their companions to the shops, and then quarter the machine somewhere close at hand until night, when they take the day shift home and bring the night shift to work. In the evening and on Sunday they make special trips of all sorts. Throughout the dull hours of the day companies which control large numbers of "jitneys" monopolize the business. Every one concerned appears to be making money, for the license and original investment is small and the patronage apparently unlimited, at least through the pleasant weather.

Again, Bridgeport has the provincial aspect of the "small-time" community through the fact that Saturday night is shopping night and the stores all remain open until late. But this overtime is made up to the employes by closing early throughout the rest of the week. On these days 5 o'clock is the closing time recognized by the stores, both large and small.

In the past Bridgeport has contented itself with making sewing machines, talking machines, cabinets, clock cases, corsets, cutlery and tools, electrical machinery and supplies, light hardware, automobiles and auto parts, motor boats and all sorts of odds and ends up to and including steel billets made without ore from the trimmings, &c., from its many metal working establishments. Since long before the civil war it has had a big cartridge and rifle plant, so with the development of the present situation in Europe it was not strange that military contractors turned their attention toward Bridgeport.

First came orders for an increased output of rifles and ammunition, and the local machinery manufacturers were called upon for the special machinery necessary. Foreign agents saw they were able to turn out the machinery speedily and satisfactorily—that managers and workmen knew just what they were about—and placed orders for such machinery for export. Then, one by one, came orders for motors, shells, cannon, and bayonets and all manner of military supplies. Then everybody commenced to get busy.

As the home of the Lake Submarine Torpedo Boat Company, the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, the American and British Manufacturing Company, makers of rapid-fire guns, ammunition fuses, &c., and the Remington Arms and Ammunition Company, Bridgeport already had a fair start in its career toward becoming the American Essen. As the transformation gained impetus, the proud boast, "Bridgeport contains the largest body of skilled artisans of any city of its size," was put to a severe test. Little by little almost every plant in town found its business affected to a greater or less degree by the demand for military supplies, and their employes were compelled to demonstrate their adaptability.

It is a far cry from corset making or typewriter making to shell manufacture, yet that is just what happened. Some form of military necessity became the principal product of most of the shops, and the men went at it, and successfully at that. After all the available workers were employed night shifts were introduced. More workmen came to town, and as their numbers increased so did the shops. But Bridgeport was ready for them; the city that created for the world such widely different blessings as the sewing machine and the Barnum & Bailey Circus was not to be floored by a war. So it jumped to the fore as the greatest little war purveyor in America.

The element of danger that would ordinarily be associated with the manufacture of war material appears to be reduced to a minimum at Bridgeport. This is probably due to its half century of experience, for accidents have happened in the past, and with each the manufacturers have gone to work to prevent the possibility of a similar accident in the future. One by one the danger spots have been eliminated, until today the hospital maintained at the largest munition plant treats a very small number of patients.

The danger seems to be confined to the preparation of fulminators—the little caps in cartridges and shells which explode the powder charge. These are made in little stone buildings nestling among prettily sodded mounds of earth segregated between a lagoon and a cemetery, where they look for all the world like a group of miniature fortifications. The high explosives that are the foundation for these caps are brought in packed in a bladder suspended in a hogshead of water. A quantity that would possibly fill a wine glass is doled out to the solitary worker in the tiny fortress, and he labors away in solitude, realizing that if any carelessness on his part precipitates trouble he alone will suffer, for the earthworks surrounding his shop localize any detonation that might result.

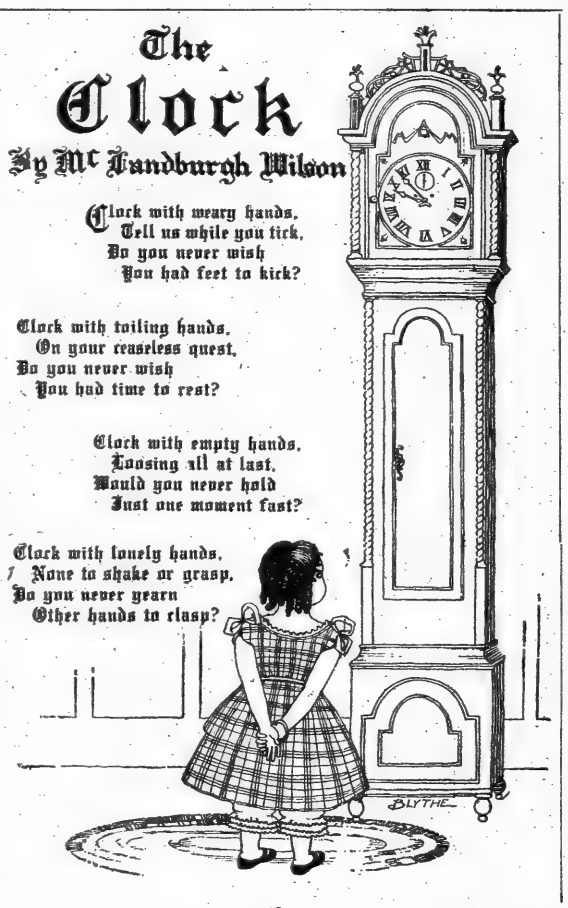
All other operations are performed by machinery under expert guidance in great shops, where care, order, and system minimize the possibility of anything going wrong.

In the sudden development of Bridgeport as an international factor the first big new enterprise to spring up was the Bridgeport Projectile Company, which, as its name implies, will manufacture shell cases, and which is now engaged in the erection of a huge plant. Then the Remington Company and the Union Metallic Cartridge Company began to branch out and put up great buildings that dwarf those used in the past. This structural activity brought an army of outside iron workers, bricklayers, millwrights, and carpenters to the scene, employed by the New York contractors having the work in hand. All were union men, working for a contracting firm that employed no others, whereas Bridgeport is and always has been an "open shop" town. The visiting union men became involved in a jurisdictional dispute over the question whether the millwrights owed allegiance to the carpenters, or metal workers' organization, and the strike scare was on—the first to affect the Bridgeport shops in fourteen years.

The apathy of the Bridgeport employes is demonstrated by the fact that only 1 per cent.—200 out of a total of 20,000—paid any attention to the row, but continued at their work while the rival labor organizations wrangled and made threats of closing every industry in town. This may be largely accounted for by the fact that simultaneously with the first suggestion of trouble the largest employers called their employes together and put into execution a plan they had been working out for months in order to bid for Government work—an eight-hour day.

Away from the main streets, out where the big new shops are going up, Bridgeport has the aspect of an exposition city in the making. Houses and cottages are going up, in anticipation of an influx of workmen, while tents and open-air restaurants and catch-penny open-air refreshment booths cater to those already on the job. All this is in strange contrast with quiet, conservative Bridgeport, whose workmen are quite as staid and dignified normally as the New England business man is pictured in the comic newspaper. They have good hotels and restaurants, 81 churches that are liberally attended, 218 social organizations, and 39 clubs. They are the backbone of 14 banks, whose vaults hold $31,000,000 in savings deposits. The average savings deposit is $475—a matter of $50 above the average for New England as a whole.

Thus it will be seen that, regardless of how war is affecting others, it is demonstrating itself good business for Bridgeport and Bridgeport people.



TAUGHT HINDENBURG STRATEGY

Maxims of the Great Chinese Warrior Loutao of 1150 B. C. Are Followed by German General

THE strategy and tactics that have made Field Marshal von Hindenburg one of the commanding figures of the world war did not originate in the brain of the great German commander, a fact that von Hindenburg frankly admits. To a great extent his maxims of war are those of Frederick the Great, and the maxims of the great Frederick were not of his own making.

Furthermore these maxims, the carrying into effect of which has twice overwhelmed the Russians, and has undoubtedly played a prominent part in the wonderful resistance of the German armies in France and Belgium, have not been the secret possession of the Prussians. They were brought to light by a Frenchman, and from France found their way to the war councils of Frederick the Great and his successors.

About one hundred and fifty years ago there labored in China a French missionary, a Jesuit priest, Father de Guignes. De Guignes mastered the difficult language of the Chinese and in due course of time (in 1767) was permitted to study and to translate into French the five Holy War Books of the Chinese. These books contained the maxims of the great Chinese warriors who lived in the period between 1200 and 500 B. C., maxims that as late as A. D. 1800 every Chinese officer was required to memorize. Says The United States Infantry Journal in the July-August issue:

Thus it became apparent that, centuries before the time of Homer, war was already waged according to fixed rules, and that even in ancient times strategy was an art and the art of war was taught. • • • Napoleon recommended their study and many of that great General's maxims may be traced to them.

The maxims followed by Frederick the Great and by von Hindenburg are those of the great Chinese warrior Loutao, who lived about 1150 B. C. Loutao's maxims were recently published in Germany and the publication is prefaced by the statement that "it is remarkable that the maxims of Frederick the Great should have been enunciated 3,000 years before his time, and that the principles of Hindenburg's strategy and tactics should have been likewise laid down at that early period."

The maxims as they appear in The Infantry Journal were translated from the German by First Lieutenant Walter Krueger of the Third U. S. Infantry.

These are the "War Maxims of General Loutao," as translated into English by Lieutenant Krueger:

There are four things to which a General must give careful attention: (1) time—the establishment of his reputation; (2) place—he must be familiar with the country in which he operates; (3) opportunity, which, if he is skilled, he will be able to create; (4) the condition of the troops as regards strength, ability, and morale.

War should be so conducted that one need not wage it again for the same cause. Those who master the true principles of the art of war will be able to subsist their armies at the expense of the enemy.

An army should be so disposed that all the corps of which it is composed can mutually support and defend each other whenever requisite.

The troops in the right wing and those in the left must fulfill for those in the centre the same function that the wings of a bird fulfill for its body. Its wings impart to the bird the ability to pass quickly from one point to another and enable it to move in any direction at will. The troops posted on the right and those posted on the left should enable a General quickly to make any disposition of his army that he may see fit.

The mobility and strength of birds are generally proportionate to the size and strength of their wings. This should likewise be true of an army. The two wings of an army should be composed of the most mobile, the best disciplined, the most experienced troops.

If you desire to profit by your army, if you wish to make it invincible, model it after the snake Chouaijeu, which, when struck on the head, instantly brings its tail forward to defend its head; when struck on the tail, the head is ready to defend that appendage; when struck on any part of the body, head and tail combine for the defense of the part attacked. But some one may perhaps question whether this can be done with an army, and I answer it can, it should, and it must be done.

To post an army in order of battle is not a difficult matter, but it is difficult to fight without deviating from the original plan that was decided upon.

A strong and well disciplined army should not waste its time in hesitation, in raids, or in small engagements, which never lead to decisive results, but should, as soon as possible, engage in pitched battle.

The corps should not all attack simultaneously at the outset of a battle. If they did, confusion and disorder would inevitably occur and defeat would be the result.

The troops must be well instructed in all the details of their work; they must be commanded with firmness and rewarded with glory. Make gallant deeds count, glorify them. This is the easiest way to flatter men, encourages them, and spurs them on to great deeds.

Do not wait orders from your Princes when you are placed in a situation that requires a prompt decision. In cases where you must act contrary to an order do not hesitate, but act, and act without fear. The first and foremost desire of him who placed you at the head of his troops is that you may defeat the enemy. Had he foreseen the situation which confronts you he himself would have prescribed the action that you propose to take.

General von Hindenburg and Officers Cross-Examining a Civilian.

A good General should never say that he will do a certain thing come what may, for his course of action should be determined solely by the situation.

The renowned Generals of the past believed that in order to gain victory the troops would have to demand to fight, and they were equally certain that these same troops would suffer defeat if they insistently demanded victory.

If your army is approximately equal in numbers to that of the enemy nine of the ten advantages of the terrain should be on your side. Employ all your mental resources, all your physical efforts, all your diligence in obtaining them.

Before you enter upon the decisive battle you should have foreseen it and have prepared for it long in advance. Do not let accidents decide your action in this case.

If a General is all that he should be he will be able to distinguish what is great from what is small, what is strong from what is weak, what is insufficient from what is superfluous, what is difficult from what is easy, what is obscure from what is obvious; he will always know how to dispose the three brigades, five divisions, or two corps without confusion as the situation, the time, and the terrain may require.

The leader of an army must possess the ability of making such dispositions of his own army as to dictate the enemy's conduct, movements, and disposition.

The great art of generalship consists in keeping the enemy constantly in the dark, so that he will never know where he may have to give battle.

It may be said in general that an army that is strong in numbers is a strong army, but it may be said with equal propriety that an army that is too strong numerically is difficult to subsist, to dispose, to lead, to move, and to keep intact, and that the strength of an army depends less upon numbers than upon efficiency.

In a campaign one must take care that both animals and men are well fed.

The Commander in Chief should keep a part of his cavalry under his own orders to support those who need prompt help in order that they may not be defeated.

When the proper moment arrives for beginning the battle the cavalry should fill the air with the noise of its instruments, with its cries, and the neighing of its horses. The General should attentively watch this first attack. From the conduct of his own troops and from that of the enemy he should draw conclusions as to whether any of his disposition ought to be changed.

Not only those who command but also those who obey should devote their principal attention to the manner of assembling, forming ranks, advancing, retiring, attacking, defending, in order that the Commander may never issue inappropriate orders that are not in accordance with the time, the place, and the situation, and that subordinates may quickly and intelligently carry out anything that may have been ordered.

The best arms and tactics are those that enable us to attack the enemy while, at the same time, they permit us to defend ourselves against his attacks.

Whenever troops march or execute manoeuvres of attacks they should be as mobile as birds. If they have to hold a position they should stand as firmly as if nailed to the spot assigned to them. If they fight they should support and follow each other just as do all the fellows and other parts that constitute one and the same wheel.

Dust, the flight of birds and their cries serve to indicate the march of the enemy, though one may neither see nor hear him.

Information of all movements of the enemy, and even of matters that happen within his lines, must be obtained in order that one may draw conclusions as to his probable conduct. But if the condition of the enemy is not known, what must be done to obtain information of it? The hostile camp must be attacked with a selected detachment. By the manner in which the enemy repulses this attack one may see whether it is profitable to attack in force or not.

Feed your horses well and conserve their strength for the moment of battle. If you follow this advice you may, if need be, ride over the entire world on those same steeds.

If you believe that you should not risk battle, do not fight, even though your orders direct you to give battle. When, on the contrary, you see that a battle would be advantageous to you, then fight valiantly, although your sovereign may have ordered you not to accept battle. Neither your life nor your reputation will be risked in this case, and you will not be guilty of crime against him contrary to whose orders you have acted.

Do not go to sleep after an initial success, and do not allow your troops an untimely period of rest. Do not dream of reaping the fruits of victory until the defeat of the enemy is complete.

PRICE CUTTING AND PRICE FIXING

Courts Taking Traders' Views on Trade Discipline -- Cold Comfort for Ultimate Consumers

By E. A. Bradford.

It is odd that the first case under the Clayton law for the prevention of unfair competition and restraint of trade should overturn numerous decisions under the Sherman law regarding the maintenance of fixed prices.

Very little has been heard regarding the reasonableness of fixed prices. The fact that producers fixed prices, and prevented the cutting of their prices, was imputed to them for original sin. Bargain hunters dearly love cut prices, and to a man—or woman—have conceived ideas amounting to a prejudice against prices "fixed" so that they should be uniform to all buyers to sell again, and to all consumers.

The origin of the anti-trust law was resentment against the reverse conditions, that is, against discriminating prices by the trusts—prices which were different to different customers, different in different districts, secret rebates to favored customers, and other trade arrangements which created a universal suspicion that the other man got better terms. The courts construed the law in sympathy with that sentiment in a long line of decisions designed to prevent the enforcement of trade discipline by the "trusts," that is, the large producers. Whatever they did was wrong.

Now comes the Clayton act designed to compel the trusts to do what the decisions under the Sherman law punished them for doing—that is, for having prices fixed, the same for all under the same conditions. Until now the law has protected the price cutter and punished the price fixer. Another rule is set by the decision of Justice Hough in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, in the case of the Great Atlantic and Pacific Company against the Cream of Wheat Company. It is a precedent which may alter the customs of "big business."

The case arose upon the refusal of the Cream of Wheat Company to supply the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company with its goods because it cut the prices below those of other retailers of Cream of Wheat. Thereupon action was brought under the Clayton act:

> Sec. 2. It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities, which commodities are sold for use, consumption or resale within the United States or any territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, where the effect of such discrimination may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce. Provided, that nothing herein contained shall prevent discrimination in price between purchasers of commodities on account of differences in the grade, quality, or quantity of the commodity sold, or that makes only due allowance for difference in the cost of selling or transportation, or discrimination in price in the same or different communities made in good faith to meet competition; And provided further, that nothing herein contained shall prevent persons engaged in selling goods, wares or merchandise in commerce from selecting their own customers in bona fide transactions, and not in restraint of trade.

The argument in support of the application for an order that the Cream of Wheat Company should do business against its will is the same set up by all price cutters and dear to all bargain hunters.

The plaintiff alleged that he had been a large customer and had always paid for his goods. He operated 938 stores, and was constantly establishing others upon a plan designed to reduce the cost of living by reducing the cost of marketing. The "Economy" stores make no deliveries and have no telephones. They close the store except when business is brisk, and all sales are for cash. No premiums or trading stamps are given, the only inducement being the low prices.

In this way it was possible to sell Cream of Wheat two cents cheaper than in the plaintiff's other stores, where credit was given, deliveries made, and other usual accommodation shown customers. The argument was that the lower price was justified and that compulsion to maintain a higher price was restraint of trade, prejudicial alike to the public and to the plaintiff. Special weight was given to the fact that the Cream of Wheat Company not only refused to sell to plaintiff, but sought to put an embargo upon its procuring supplies of Cream of Wheat in other quarters. That was represented as a boycott. There was no dispute about the facts nor any other issue raised. It was a clean-cut question whether such trade discipline was lawful. And there was a long line of decisions in similar cases that such conduct was unlawful.

A Novel Defense.

The defense to the charge was the first of the kind in this class of cases. It set up that Cream of Wheat was simply a fancy name for "purified middlings," and that no monopoly of purified middlings was possible. Anybody could supply themselves with Cream of Wheat by taking equal care in selection of purified middlings regarding color, size, quality, and so on. Cream of Wheat's proportion of the total middlings trade was insignificant, and no restraint was exercised or was possible. The only monopoly was in the trade-mark, which stood for certain qualities maintained in the customers' interest. Nobody else could sell Cream of Wheat, but anybody else could supply himself with and could sell the same thing under any other name. Little weight was thrown on this point, the decision turning upon the defendant's method of selling and fixing the resale price.

That method was published to all the trade, and was substantially as follows: The Company declined to sell to consumers, or to retailers, or to chain stores. It dealt entirely with wholesalers, and relied upon a simple request that prices should be maintained. There was no agreement, and the only penalty for refusal was discontinuance of relations. The desire of the plaintiff, as of the defendant, was to protect the consumer regarding the price and quality of the product. It is of a perishable nature, and requires to be fresh to be good. Quick and wide distribution is essential to the excellence of the product, and is defeated by irregularities in the accumulation of large stocks and their distribution by cut prices. Stale goods are sold, and the guaranty of the brand is prejudiced, if the producers of the goods lose control over their distribution. Accordingly wholesale customers were "requested" to sell to retailers only at a fixed price, and not to divide their purchases with others, but to retain them for their own trade exclusively. Finally wholesalers were requested not to sell to other wholesalers to whom the company would not sell for reasons satisfactory to it.

The request regarding fixed prices was broken by the plaintiff, and he was refused further supplies. He sought to obtain supplies from others, and the defendant tried to prevent him from doing so. That was the ground of the suit.

An injunction was sought, and damages for restricting the plaintiff's business by, refusing to allow him to sell to the public more cheaply than the defendant required. The answer was that cut prices were not quoted in good faith, nor were they to the benefit of the public. The establishment of the "Economy" stores was declared to be a subterfuge for driving other retailers out of business, and establishing a monopoly for the sole benefit of the plaintiff, to the ultimate disadvantage of the general public, the consumers of this product, the wholesalers, and the defendant. This was said to be unfair and unlawful competition, and was asserted to be practiced regarding other products, discouraging other producers similarly to the defendant.

The Decision of the Court.

Judge Hough found that the defendant did have a trade-mark monopoly, and that it was lawful. It was "the monopoly of a creator, something which is not and never has been within the prohibition of any law, anti-trust or otherwise." The Judge also found that the defendant did not fix the price, in his opinion. Fixing connotes enforcement, and that was not even attempted. Nothing was done beyond refusing to do business, and abstention from business is not price fixing. Regarding the charge of restraining trade the Judge said:

> There is abundant authority for the general proposition that preventing competition is restraint of trade; but it does not follow that it is unlawful either to prevent any and every species of competition, or to restrain trade in any and every degree.
> The only competition prevented or sought to be prevented by defendant's acts is that of Cream of Wheat against itself; the only trade restrained is the commercial warfare of a large buyer against small ones, or that of a merchant who for advertising purposes may sell an article at a loss, in order to get customers at his shop, and then persuade them to buy other things at a compensating profit. That competition, as encouraged by statutes and decisions, does not include such practices has been sufficiently shown (with ample citations) in Fischer Flouring Mills Company v. Swanson, 76 Wash. 649.
> It is further obvious that, when plaintiff premises that preventing competition is restraining trade, it is assumed that the resultant restraint is unreasonable; for there is nothing in the Clayton act to compel or induce courts to hold that the trade restraint referred to by this statute differs in kind, quality or degree from that now held to be meant by the Sherman act.
> I am not persuaded that the acts of defendant have produced, or tend to produce, diminution of any competition favored by reason or law; or have restrained trade unreasonably (if at all.)

The Judge was equally clear regarding the right to select customers. He could not understand how it could be substantial or unreasonable restraint of trade to refuse to do business with a man who avows intent to injure the vendor's business. Never before had it been asserted that if a vendor made enough of anything to supply two men, and sold it all to one, the other had cause for action. If Congress sought to create such a cause of action the action would be invalid, because it would take from one person for the private use of another the first person's private property.

If a man wants to keep what he has, the offering of money to salve the taking does not prevent the taking being confiscation. In a compulsory sale the contract and the price are mere surplusage. The constitutional violation lies in the compulsion to part with property for a private purpose. Unlawful business can be stopped, but private property cannot be taken. The embargo or boycott charge was dismissed with scant respect. There was no conspiracy, nor malice, nor any threat to refuse business with those who disregarded the defendant's request not to supply the plaintiff with goods of the defendant's own making.

Distinctions from Other Decisions.

The difference between this case and the one most popularly known is apparent. In the case sustaining the right to cut the prices of books, or rather condemning the wrong of the method taken to stop the price cutting, there was conspiracy in restraint of trade, not only the trade of the conspirators, but trade with which they had no concern, whether the prices were cut or not.

In the Straus case the "cut off" list was sent to 75 per cent. of the publishers of the United States, and an effort was made to prevent the price cutter from getting books except from the remnant of the trade. This effort was extended to all books, both copyrighted and uncopyrighted. This exceeded any legal and fair agreement to protect prices and trade among the parties to the agreement, and prevented when dealing with uncopyrighted books the sale of any kind of books at any price. In the case sustaining the right to fix prices there was no such restraint of trade in general.

There is a similar distinction between the cases of Cream of Wheat and the Lumber Trust case. In the latter seventy-seven dealers, each without regard to the effect upon their individual trade, agreed to refrain from business with those who affected the trade of any of the others. Each of the seventy-seven might have done the same thing individually, but collectively it was conspiracy and restraint.

In the Watch Trust case there was the same fault. When prices were cut there was a threat to obstruct the trade in other merchandise than that of the vendor. Generally speaking, earlier decisions against sustaining prices upon resale were based upon the fact that something more than restraint of price cutting was attempted; or that the trade of others, or trade in other merchandise, was involved; or that there was a combination or conspiracy; or that an excessive percentage of the trade was controlled; or that there was an actual monopoly. The latter case is the most inclusive. It includes such cases as a particular copyrighted book, or a proprietary medicine, or a food made under a secret process, or goods made under a patent. These were the cases of Peruna, Sanatogen, Toasted Corn Flakes, and others. In no case was it possible that the buyer could supply himself otherwise. The vendors controlled all the goods of that sort, and no substitute was obtainable.

Similar State Decisions.

No doubt the decision will be unpopular. Cut prices and competition among sellers have been deemed the inalienable right of bargain hunters. Nevertheless, the reaction against the punishment of price fixers is unmistakable. The Cream of Wheat case merely followed the lead of a Washington case regarding the maintenance of prices upon a brand of flour, which was decided upon common law, neither State nor Federal statute being concerned.

There is a similar case in California sustaining "protected" prices. New Jersey has a law against cutting prices on established brands, and Wisconsin's Legislature had before it an even more elaborate statute for the same purpose among many similar.

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States is canvassing the sentiment of its large and representative membership. The New York Retail Grocers' Association after long approving cut prices has veered with the changing sentiment and approved the Stevens bill for the maintenance of prices which was considered at the last session of Congress. The highest British court, the judicial committee of the Privy Council, sustained about the time of the above-quoted cases an appeal from Australia which established the right to maintain prices. The case is the more striking because the prices were maintained by a combination, but the decision was that the maintenance of prices was not proven to be to the detriment of the public. There was such a thing as prices being unreasonably low, said the court, and in the proven conditions it was lawful to maintain prices.

Finally, it is interesting to remark that when Uncle Sam is in trade he does as traders do. When the Director of the Pan-American Union issued his excellent book on the Panama Canal he sold it under an agreement for a fixed price to the public. He said he wished to protect the retail buyer. That is what other price fixers say. Also that is what most retail buyers do not want. They appreciate cut prices more than the protection of trade discipline. Therein they resemble the Supreme Court, whose decisions have affronted traders as much as they pleased ultimate consumers.

At present the Supreme Court's position is passing through a process similar to that by which it discovered the "rule of reason" on the trust question. The court never reverses itself—that is, hardly ever—but Judge Hough's decision is a sign that traders' rights are having their day, as buyers' rights had their day. It may be that if there were any Federal common law the Supreme Court might arrive at a position like the Washington case. Judge Hough arrived at the same result by aid of the Clayton law, doubtless to the surprise of those who hardly foresaw such a result. Assistance to the Supreme Court may come in the same way, or by the passage of a bill like the Stevens bill, or by the process of "distinguishing" new cases from the old.

AMERICANS AID FRENCH ARTISTS

Art at Home and Abroad

Exhibition of Art from France to be Held Next Autumn as a Token of French Gratitude to This Country

THE French have never been accused of failure in the matter of gratitude. Their recognition of kindnesses received is apt to be courteous and prompt and characterized by a peculiar tact, at once delicate and formal. A recent instance of this national genius for appreciation is provided by the response of the French artists to the efforts made in their behalf by the "American Artists' Committee of One Hundred," which has had in charge the American side of the "Relief Fund for the Families of French Soldier-Artists."

Practically all the members of the American Committee are pupils of French masters and felt that the suffering and distress caused by the war gave them their opportunity to express their own feeling of grateful obligation in a material way. In co-operating with La Fraternité des Artistes in Paris in the relief work undertaken by that organization they have established relations so fine in all aspects that, to quote one member of the committee, they feel there is reward enough for them all in the mere existence of these relations.

The French artists, however, have done their best to acknowledge the benefits received, and news has reached us of a fresh evidence of their gratitude. The exhibition and sale of pictures and bronzes by American artists which was held last winter at the Knoedler Galleries in New York, the receipts going to the Relief Fund, especially interested them. Photographs of the works exhibited were shown at Knoedler's Paris gallery, and M. Bonnat wrote to Mr. Coffin, Chairman of the committee, that these were greatly admired by the French. The distinguished group of artists composing the French committee of the Fraternité, together with other members of the principal art societies of France, collected some sixty of their own works, paintings, drawings, bronzes, engravings, and so forth, to be distributed by lot to the contributors to the exhibition. The cases containing these were packed and forwarded to New York before it was known that over a hundred Americans had contributed to the exhibition, and another case has since been prepared, bringing the total number of objects sent for distribution to more than one hundred, thus providing a gift of acknowledgment for each contributor. Mr. Coffin has just received the first consignment, which was insured for 80,000 francs, and is arranging to have the contents of the cases placed on exhibition during the Autumn at one of the prominent galleries, so that the public may see how the French have paid their tribute.

Among the artists represented in the collection received by Mr. Coffin for distribution are Bonnat, Montenard, Mathey, Dechenaud, Maxence, Muenier, Le Sidaner, Dinet, all of whom have sent oil paintings; Lefévre, Carolus-Duran, Harpignies, Roll, Jonas, Ménard, Flameng, R. Collin, Beiel, Chabas, Friant, Lepère, Dagnan-Bouveret, Cormon, Maufra, Maurice Denis, le Comte du Nowy, who have sent drawings; Gervais, R. Prinet, Gilbert, Lucien Simon, Luigi Loir, Adam, Nozal, Calbet, Barbier, P. Roche, Dervaux, Gorguet, Auburtin, Rochegrosse, Baschet, d'Espagnat, who have sent water colors; Raffaelli, Bonnat and Cottet, who have sent engravings or etchings; Vernier, who has sent a bronze plaque; Bartholemé, who has sent a medallion, a unique piece, and Delaherche, who has sent pottery. A very slight knowledge of French art is required to realize that the Americans who so cordially gave their works for the relief of their unfortunate comrades will feel that their generous impulse has been met not less generously, and that they will have in return for their own works souvenirs of permanent importance.

"France—the Alarm." Illustration Accompanying Prospectus of the "Album National de la Guerre," Published by the "Fraternite des Artistes" and Sold for the Benefit of Their Relief Fund.

A somewhat different and more formal expression of the same sentiment was the nomination of certain American artists as honorary attachés to the French Government Commission to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco. The artists chosen for the honor were William A. Coffin, J. Carroll Beckwith, William M. Chase (painters), Herbert Adams, Daniel C. French (sculptors), Thomas Hastings, Lloyd Warren (architects), Henry Wolf and William B. Closson (engravers).

Just recently another characteristic official touch has been added by conferring upon Mr. Coffin, in his rôle as President of the American Artists' Committee, the title of Member of Honor of the two great French art societies, the Société des Artistes Français and the Société Nationale des Beaux-Arts. In announcing the act of his society, M. Roll, President of the Société Nationale, writes, "La Fraternité des Artistes owes you recognition without limit. It is on account of this gratitude which cannot stop with thanks alone, however warm they may be, that the société has been inspired to ask you to accept the title which it will be proud and happy to see you wear."

Other letters are marked by the same tone of warmth and affection, and every now and then an eloquent sentence reveals the deep feeling of the writer for the sad plight of his country, as when M. Bonnat, referring to the soldier-artists at the front who had been pupils in his atelier, says: "Brave fellows! What I most regret is that my eighty-one years do not allow me to go to cheer them. Why cannot I be at their head and lead them on as I used to do with you others when you were working in the studio! But they do not need me. They are sublime, my poor pupils and their comrades. They are filled with an extraordinary enthusiasm such as was never seen before. * * * How far away, my dear Coffin, seem now the quiet days when we were absorbed in other preoccupations, when we were busy with other struggles—those of pure art. But those days, I am convinced, will come back to us. It is not possible that the efforts our valiant sons are making will not be rewarded."

All this is not only very characteristic and graceful in expression, but truly significant of a national trait, the desire to recognize by something more than words acts of kindness and generosity on the part of friends.

And the aid rendered by Americans through the American committee of the Relief Fund has in truth been far from negligible. The total receipts from subscriptions, sales, etc., had been, up to the end of May, considerably over twenty thousand dollars, and the total remittances up to July 4, 1915, had been $18,075, with a balance at present on hand for future remittance. It is interesting to note that this balance is held in waiting for the reason that the Fraternité has reported itself as comfortably provided for its relief work for some months to come. Up to June 7 it had distributed 190,629 francs, or nearly forty thousand dollars. This, to an American society, might seem an unimposing amount in view of the extent of the destitution it was expected to relieve, but the thrift of the nation makes much of little, and donations that would go but a short distance toward relieving the American type of poverty have proved astoundingly efficient in France and Belgium.

Not Only French but American Artists Living in Paris Will Be Represented--Their Contributions Now Here

Since the Committee was formed it has lost by death Mr. Alexander and Mr. Hoeber.

The expedients of the "Fraternité" for gaining money for their cause have been ingenious and also practical and dignified. The latest of their undertakings is the publication of an "Album National de la Guerre" which is to be sold in France and in this country for the benefit of the Relief Fund.

As described in the prospectus this album is to consist of sixty plates by the following notable artists: Adler, Bail, Bartholomé, Baschet, Beraud, Besnard, Jacques Blanche, Bonnard, Bonnat, Paul Chabas, Cormon, Cottet, Dagnan-Bouveret, Dannat, Degas, Maurice Denis, Desvallières, Devambez, Dumoulin, Carolus Duran, Flameng, Forain, Franc-Lamy, Friant, Geo-Weiss, Gervex Harpignies, Humbert, Jonas, Jouve, J. P. Laurens, Ernest Laurent, Le Sidaner, Lévy-Dhurmer, Lhermitte, Luce, Henri Martin, Maxence, René Ménard, Antonin Mercié, Merson, Claude Monet, Muenier, Picard, Prinet, Raffaelli, Renard, Renoir, Renouard, Rochegrosse, Rodin, Roll, Roussel, Soubés, Signac, L. Simon, Valloton and Vuillard. Each design will be made by the artist especially for the album, and it will be a souvenir of the epoch greatly to the taste of collectors.

The Print Laboratory of the Brooklyn Museum.

The Print Laboratory of the Brooklyn Museum is justifying its existence in a manner highly satisfactory to those responsible for it. It was opened last December, and up to the first of July it had been used sixty-nine days. Although note was taken of its installation when it was first opened, its history is not generally known. It grew out of a need which was brought to the attention of the museum authorities, who recognized it with prompt sympathy. Numerous artist etchers in this city and elsewhere lack facilities for trying out their work and conducting those forceful experiments that lead to mastery of technique. The machinery of etching for artists wishing to make their own prints is cumbersome and expensive, and those in the student period of their career are usually limited to such practice as they can get in the class room.

Since the installation of a side press at Brooklyn Museum any person of serious intention may, at the discretion of the Librarian, use the press without charge, providing only his inks and paper. A small room adjacent to the Print Gallery has been fitted up for this purpose, the press having been squeezed in among the book stacks which formerly occupied the entire space. The room is lighted by electricity, and, while there is none too much of elbow room, there is quite enough space for effective work. Boards are provided on which the proofs may be pinned to dry, and there is an ample supply of blotting paper and a stove for heating the plates. Each workman uses the room as though it were his own and, cleaning up after his work is done, leaves it in good condition for the next comer. It is entered from the long gallery in which hang the lovely Whistler lithographs, and, as the press can be adjusted to print from the lithographic stone, there is every probability that lithographers also will be attracted to the unconventional little workshop in spite of the awkwardness of transporting the heavy stone.

In another room opening from the Whistler Gallery is an exhibition of prints made by means of various processes, accompanied by examples of the tools used and specimen plates. Here the young artist may study and compare the effects produced by aquatint, mezzotint, pure etching, dry point, soft ground etching and wood engraving. Cards of description explaining the technical details of the processes are placed near the exhibits.

The visitors to the Print Laboratory are of all classes and races. A couple of art students from France without the means to carry on their work here hailed with enthusiasm the opportunity offered. One young mechanic came, not for the purpose of using the press, but in order to study its construction so that he could make one for himself. A professional artist from another city seized the chance to pull some proofs from plates made on his travels.

The interest shown in the experiment and the simplicity of its working have attracted the attention of other museums, and it is now probable that a similar arrangement will be made at the Metropolitan Museum.

Art Associated with the Child.

In the exhibition of art for children to be held by the Art Alliance this coming November, by far the most interesting and educationally important feature will be the playhouse section. Here will be shown houses on a miniature scale in which children literally can make themselves at home, surrounded by such accessories of ornament and use as would find place in a house designed for adults. The architecture of the playhouses will be undertaken in a serious spirit and the furnishings to the least detail will be under the supervision of the architect as in similar houses designed by the modern German school.

The idea is not new in this country, although it has not before been publicly illustrated. Mr. Levering Jones at St. Martins-in-the-Fields, Pennsylvania, has built such a playhouse as a wing to his residence, balancing an opposite wing that forms a library. This playhouse is quite large and elaborate. It is built of brick, trimmed with marble and with marble columns, and contains a living room twenty-five by forty-five feet. Mrs. Payne Whitney also has a playhouse at Westbury, Long Island, designed in accordance with the modern ideas of harmony between a house and its contents.

In the German prototypes even the kitchen furnishings are designed to suit the general style of the architecture and decoration, and, while the model playhouses in the forthcoming exhibition will be ostensibly for the education of the child in the field of interior decoration, it is quite possible that the architects undertaking their construction will find an element of profit for themselves in the adaptation of every detail to the complete scheme.

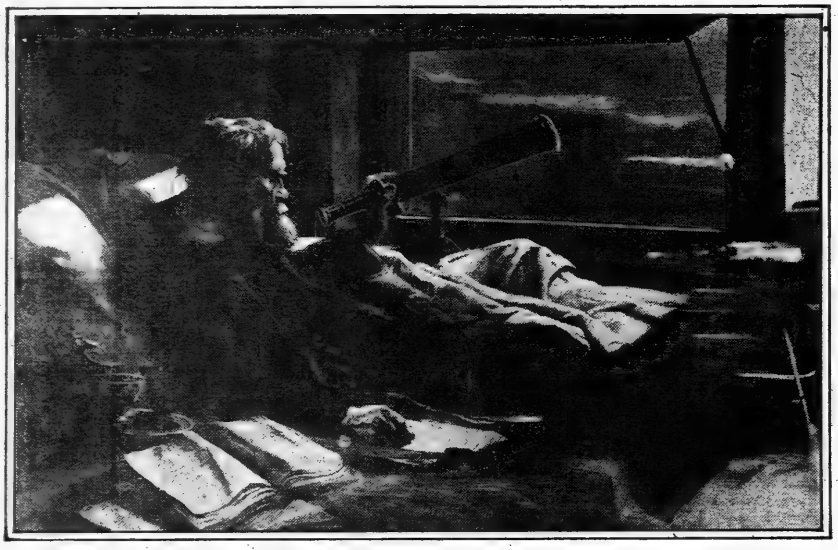
The societies which have been invited to submit drawings for the children's playhouse are the Beaux Arts Society, the Architectural League, Institute of American Architects, the Beaux Arts Society Diplomes, the Craftsman Society, the Friends of Young Artists, the National Sculpture Society, the Mural Painters' Society. One mural painter is to do a frieze for a child's room. Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney has promised to do a mantel for a child's study.

The whole exhibition is to be dedicated to objects that appeal to the child, not to objects that are connected with the child but appeal primarily to its elders. The age of the child is determined as extending to fourteen years. There will be memorials of the Botticelli type, inspired by the Bambino and executed in marble and bronze, shown in a separate room. There will also be books illustrated by children, and written by them in many instances, little verses, fragments of prose, and pencil and water color paintings by children. The little Carlsen boy, (12 years old), whose picture was hung in the Academy last Spring, will be invited to contribute.

It is probable that an entire building will be devoted to the exhibition, as it is to emphasize interior decoration and entire rooms will be shown. One of these rooms will contain a frieze by Mr. Monkhouse, who recently was commissioned by Lady Warwick to decorate a nursery in her castle. All the ceramic societies will be represented by articles suitable to a child's bedroom and dining room. The silversmiths in the city are co-operating with the ceramic societies to make artistic silverware with designs appropriate to different ages. The linen manufacturers are making designs for table linens with such motives as may be drawn from La Fontaine's fables, Grimm's fairy tales, and other literature dear to children. There will be toys, of course, designed and made by American artists. Such men as Hugo Ballin, experienced in other fields of art, have turned eagerly to this occupation. Furniture is being especially designed with miniature lounging chairs and sofas, bookcases, desks, and everything else that a child can use. There will be performances of music by children during the exhibition, and there will be performances of dramas by children on a miniature stage, with at least one drama written by a child. For these performances an admission will probably be charged, half of the proceeds to be used for the student fund of the Art Alliance of America, the other half going to the organization supplying the performers.

It is proposed to appeal to all the private and public schools of the city, and, for that matter, of other cities, for the best examples of artistic work done by their pupils in all fields of art as associated with the child. There will be a modern marionette theatre. There will be authentic costumes worn by models representing characters in children's books. There also will be a very large exhibit of books for children published in America. As a side issue there will be miniature portraits, portraits in oil, and sculptured portraits of children by all the leading artists of the country. The show, as outlined, promises to be the most novel and entertaining feature of the Fall season. Nothing of the kind ever has been attempted in this country. Its management is in the hands of Francklin Paris.

Among the interesting points of the schedule is the absence of the modern craze for dancing, which is subsiding in the stress of the present time. In place of the dance there will be an inanimate zoo. The exhibition is planned to last three weeks, and is expected to stimulate public interest in the art education of the child in numerous practical ways. There have been already inquiries from cities outside of New York inquiring whether the exhibition could be given a traveling character with an extended itinerary.



"Galileo in Velletri," by Charles Laurent Marechal. (Lent to the Metropolitan Museum by J. W. Boyle.) One of the Largest Pastels in Existence.

Two Important Pastels.

Two large pastels are on view at the Metropolitan Museum, lent by J. W. Boyle several years ago, and withdrawn from exhibition when lack of space necessitated their removal to make room for other pictures. One represents Galileo in Velletri, and was shown in the Salon of 1855. The other subject is "Columbus Brought Back in Chains," and was in the Salon of 1857. It formerly belonged to H. I. H. the Prince Napoleon. Both pictures are extraordinarily large, measuring 50 inches by 80, probably the largest pastels known. They were painted by Charles Laurent Maréchal, who was born at Metz in 1801, and died at Bar-le-Duc in 1887. Maréchal was a pupil of Regnault and usually painted in water color or on porcelain or glass. He was also quite famous as a maker of stained glass windows and examples of his work in this kind are in the churches of Saint Jacques du Haut-Pas, Saint Augustine, and Saint Ambroise at Paris, Haguenau and Saint Paul at Nimes, and the stained glass representing the Bishops of Paris in Nôtre Dame is by him.

Works of Art Belonging to the City of Boston.

An additional list of works of art belonging to the City of Boston has been completed by the registry of the Museum of Fine Arts for publication. Data regarding the historical paintings formerly owned by the City of Charlestown, before it became a part of Boston, brought together from several sources, will be given in the forthcoming list. These works include a large picture of Daniel Webster in the act of delivering the famous oration at the dedication of the Bunker Hill Monument, the work of John Pope, which was presented to Charlestown in 1853; Frothingham's copy of Stuart's portrait of Washington, presented in 1858; a copy of Vanderlyn's portrait of Andrew Jackson, made by A. G. Hoit in 1855, after the original, painted in 1819, in New York; Henry Sargent's portrait of General Richard Devens, painted in 1798, and bequeathed to Charlestown by Miss Charlotte Harris in 1877; and Samuel Finley Breese Morse's historical painting of the "Landing of the Pilgrims," painted in 1811. Morse was born in Charlestown.

Some new works of art belonging to the city have been catalogued, as well as the older pictures. Among these are certain mural paintings recently installed in the public schools. A conspicuous item in this list is the mural work painted by the students in the School of the Museum of Fine Arts for the Boston Latin School, the subject of which, it may be recalled, is "The Land Where Latin Was Spoken," certainly a most appropriate motive. This work, nearly twenty-four feet wide by ten feet high at the centre, is placed at the gable end of the study room. Edward R. Kingsbury's mural decoration, entitled "Time and the World," painted in 1911 for the Charlestown High School, is another relatively recent addition to the list of the city's art treasures. The notable historical mural panels made by Mr. Mills for the walls of the hall in the Franklin Union a few years ago are also catalogued and described in the list.

A share of space is devoted to recording the architectural and decorative sculpture of the Zoo in Franklin Park and the Aquarium in South Boston.

Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney Offers $1,100 in Prizes.

Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney announces a series of prizes for the best painting, black and white drawing, poster, or sculpture on "The Immigrant in America." The competition is designed to secure the best possible artistic expression of the meaning of "America to the Immigrant" and of "America as the Successful Fusion of Many Races, Traditions and Forces."

For painting, drawing, or sculpture there will be a first prize of $500, second prize of $250, third prize of $100, fourth prize of $50.

For the black and white drawing there will be a $100 prize, for the best poster a $100 prize.

The contest closes Nov. 1. The judges will be announced later.

An exhibition of the work submitted in competition for these prizes will be held from Nov. 15 to Dec. 15 at Mrs. Whitney's studio in New York City. Admission cards will be sent upon request.

Following the widespread Americanization Day celebrations throughout the country, this contest will awaken artistic America to its opportunity to portray the immigrant in American life. The Immigrants in America Review is in immediate charge of the contest, and a board of nine judges will be announced soon. Address all communications to Frances A. Kellor, 95 Madison Avenue, New York City.

A SOURCE OF INNOCENT MERRIMENT

Some fellows don't consider that they are being treated well unless they are being treated often.

The art of bluffing lies in knowing when not to.

Even in being wedded to his art, many a man marries in haste and repents at leisure.

Love laughs at locksmiths, so it's no wonder wedlock sometimes arouses his mirth.

There is nothing so calculated to give a young man that tired feeling as annexing a rich father-in-law.

The fellow who jumps out of the frying pan into the fire may be justified in thinking he is hot stuff.

When Strephon Dances.

O YOU should see my Strephon trip—
(Come, Mother—here's the Elephant!)
A smile upon his nether lip—
(Take care, my child—he's petulant.)
A lively glitter in his eye,
How languidly his hoppers fly
When he the Limping Duck doth try—
(If I was big as him I'd bust!)

O you should see my Strephon's slides
(O Mother, see the Kangaroo!)
As o'er the polished floor he glides.
(O tut, my child—he's nothing new!)
'Tis ten to one he'll have a fall—
"Look out—Take care!" the others call—
Thank Heaven, he has hit the wall!
(I wish I had a private Zoo!)

He Fox-Trots like a ship at sea
(O Mother come and see the whale!)
That's tossed sou'west by nor'-nor'-E,
(Hush, child—don't go too near the rail.)
And O the dull despair and pain
When Strephon steps upon your train
To hear it rip and rip again—
(I love to see him lash his tail!)

THE MAIDEN'S LAMENT

By WALTER G. DOTY.

HE wooed me, but I turned away
And would not listen to his plea;
But, should he come again today,
How different would my answer be!

How soft yet ardent was his tone!
Alas, my stubborn heart was steeled!
But now that heart has tender grown,
While he—I fear his wounds are healed.

My bitter tears unheeded flow.
Life's song assumes a dol'rous pitch.
But, after all, how could I know
That some day he would be so rich?

Missed Something

MRS. McGREEVY was a dinner guest one evening where a noted explorer was the attraction. Being of a somewhat languid turn of mind, she paid more attention to her dinner than to the conversation. After dinner was over, she turned to one of the guests and asked:

"What was that tiresome old explorer talking about?"

"Progressive Patagonia," was the reply.

"Really?" asked Mrs. McGreevy with sudden interest. "And how do you play it?"

Hadn't Served It Before.

ONCE a short little woman and her tall husband went to a café of the cheaper sort for dinner.

"Will you have oysters?" asked the husband, glancing over the bill of fare.

"Yes," said the little woman, as she tried in vain to touch her feet to the floor, "and, Henry, I want a hassock."

Henry nodded, and as he handed his order to the waiter, said: "Yes, and bring the lady a hassock."

"One hassock?" asked the waiter, with what Henry thought more than ordinary interest, as he nodded in the affirmative. Still the waiter did not go, but brushed the tablecloth with a towel and rearranged the articles on it several times, while his face got very red.

Then he came around to the husband's side, and, speaking in a whisper, said: "Say, Mister, I haven't been here long, and I'm not on to all these things. Will the lady have the hassock broiled or fried?"

Did He Put His Foot In It?

AN English soldier, a member of the Second South Staffordshire Regiment, says that one bitterly cold night in the early Spring he and his mates came out of the trenches. They were billeted in a barn, where they were packed in very close.

"Though numb with cold, we were soon asleep," said the soldier in telling the incident. "I was awakened in the night by one of our chaps trying to put his boots on. After he had been trying for a minute or two I heard the fellow next him say:

"'What the —— are you doing?'

"'Putting my boots on,' was the reply.

"'Well, that's my foot, you fool!'"

AN INSIDE VIEW OF RUSSIA IN WAR TIME

Gregor Alexinsky, a Former Member of the Duma, Opposed to Czarism, Discusses Existing Social and Economic Problems Facing the Empire

RUSSIA AND THE GREAT WAR. By Gregor Alexinsky. Translated by Bernard Miall. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons.

A RARE opportunity for a critical inside view of Russian affairs in war time is afforded by this book from the pen of an able Social-Democratic ex-Deputy to the Duma. M. Alexinsky's earlier book, "Modern Russia," was highly esteemed. In "Russia and the Great War" he undertakes to describe internal conditions in Russia both before and after the beginning of the war and to estimate the probable effect of current events upon Russia itself.

The author's attitude should be understood at the outset. He is a patriotic Russian, eager for the defeat of the Austro-German aggressors, yet hostile to "Czarism." In view of his distrust of the Petrograd authorities, it is interesting to see what he says of Germany's assertion that Russia wanted this war and forced it upon Austria. M. Alexinsky weighs the evidence and is convinced that the Czar and his bureaucracy did not want war. They had proved it by repeated concessions, verging on humiliation. Besides, he says, the Russian autocracy contains a strong, even dangerous, pro-German element. He, therefore, concludes:

> Not only did official and Governmental Russia not desire war, but they evaded it until the moment when the war was forced upon Russia by Germany, and when a fresh withdrawal of the Russian Government before the Austro-German plot was already absolutely impossible. * * * I am not a friend of the Russian Government. I do not believe in the "sincerity" of the intentions of the autocratic Government. But this is no reason why it should commit a final act of cowardice and abandon Serbia to the Austro-German sword.

His own view of the economic and sociological factors which induced Germany to provoke the war is stated thus:

> German capitalism, guided by the military caste of Prussia, endeavored to avoid the prospect of a labor revolution and a Socialist transformation of society, and sought an issue in the international war and the German domination of Europe.

M. Alexinsky urges the Socialists of Europe to bar the way before German imperialism on its errand of stupendous military brigandage, and to turn back the German workingmen to work out their own problems of liberty at home. If the allied armies do this, he says, they will be fulfilling a positive and progressive rôle in the drama of human freedom.

Let us glance at the main counts in M. Alexinsky's indictment of "Czarism." He cites some impressive proofs that the Russian Government's reactionary stupidities have not ceased with the coming of war. Immediately after the outbreak of hostilities, the entire opposition press, even the most moderate section of it, was suppressed. Many labor associations, trade unions, workingmen's clubs, and other societies were broken up, and numerous arrests and deportations completed the picture. M. Bourtsev, a political refugee, misled by the liberal tone of the proclamation to the Poles, returned to Russia to offer his services to his country. At the frontier he was arrested, and after months in prison he was exiled to Siberia for life.

Five Social-Democratic members of the Duma were sent to Siberia because, in the room of one of them, the police had found an anti-militarist resolution sent by some irresponsible group in a foreign country. To exile these deputies on such a ground was sheer stupidity, the author contends. He thinks it a great pity that the French and English do not bring pressure to stop such reactionary folly, as it injures the strength of the Allies.

The author believes that the Armenians, who are flocking by thousands to the Russian standard to fight against the age-long cruelties of the Turks, have solid grounds for their enthusiasm. He also speaks hopefully of conditions in Poland. But in Finland the Czar has begun a narrow program of Russification, which the author characterizes as "a provocation unheard of even in the history of the Finnish Constitution, which has already had to bear many an unlawful blow."

His most serious charges, however, are against Russia's war-time treatment of the Jews. They are still forbidden to go outside the pale, even in Poland and Lithuania, where they have been completely ruined by the war. If any succeed in finding shelter in towns outside the Ghetto they are arrested, punished, and sent back to the ashes of their homes. The author quotes a letter from a Jewish woman of refinement living in Petrograd:

> Already there is nothing left of our dreams. We have awakened to the same injustice, the same humiliations and outrages, although there are nearly 400,000 Jews in the Russian Army, and among them many heroes who have already merited the Military Cross for their brave deeds. All is as it was before; the situation is even growing worse. It is terrible! At this moment, when one and all have their hearts full of feeling and their hands full of work, these cowards are nevertheless continually inventing fresh humiliations for the Jews.

M. Alexinsky draws a terrible picture of the flight of 100,000 Jewish refugees to Warsaw at the time of the former German advance. He says their shops and homes were sacked by Russians; and many of the fleeing women, being forbidden even to pass through intervening villages on the way to Warsaw, died by the wayside. If the Government wishes to cleanse itself of these stains, he adds, it need only abolish the unjust restrictions affecting the Jewish population.

The bearing of these things upon the army is summed up in these words:

> While stating that the Russian soldier is fighting in the present war far better than he fought ten years ago, I ought at the same time to state that the errors of the domestic policy of Czarism are shackling his heroic impulse. By not proclaiming a political amnesty Czarism has retained in the background of the army the prisons and penal settlements, living tombs, in which are suffering the noblest of Russia's sons. By failing to suppress the racial and religious restrictions the Government continues to poison the moral atmosphere in which the country is living during the war, and which the army is breathing as it fights. These errors diminish the success of the army by weakening the morale of the army.

Another target of M. Alexinsky's criticism is the severity and bad faith with which Russia is alleged to have treated the people of Galicia, especially the Ruthenians, during its occupation of that Austrian Province. At the same time he says all democratic Russians believe there is a better chance for liberty under Russian than under German masters. The Letts and Esthonians in the Baltic Provinces of Russia have had a chance to try both kinds of masters, and their testimony against the Germans is emphatic. One of them says:

> The geographical position of our country has brought upon the Letts the singular misfortune of suffering the German yoke before the Russian. And, as compared with the Germans, the Russians appeared to us liberators. For centuries the Germans kept us by brute force in a state comparable to slavery. Only fifty years ago the Russian Government gave us our freedom, but at the same time committed the grave injustice of leaving all our land in the hands of German proprietors. In spite of all we have managed in twenty or thirty years to redeem from the Germans a portion of our soil, and to attain a certain level of culture.
> The German journals call us ungrateful for that culture which they boast of having brought us. We follow the word "Kulturträger" (!) with a mark of exclamation, for the actions of the Germans have made the word a term of derision. We acquired our culture in spite of them, against their will. Even today it is the German representatives in the Duma who oppose the rare intentions of the Russian Government to introduce a few reforms in the Baltic Provinces.

The Letts and Esthonians form the lower middle-class and the peasantry of that region, and are noted for their number of revolutionary martyrs, says M. Alexinsky. On the other hand, he adds, the Germans, though in the minority, form the entire nobility of the Baltic Provinces. Like their Junker kindred in East Prussia, they not only hold all the land, but also all the political influence, furnishing the Russian Government with some of its strongest reactionary supporters.

In support of his belief that there are Prussian sympathizers high in authority at Petrograd even now, the author cites some of the remarkable utterances that have been allowed to go unchecked in the Russian newspapers. While all journals of democratic tendencies were suppressed, the organs of reaction, such as the Russkoié Znamia, have been allowed to go on lauding the Hohenzollerns and their Government to the skies.

The author also recalls the case of Lieutenant Colonel Miassoiedov, who was hanged last April for selling military information to the enemy. He advises France and England not to repose too much confidence in the ruling classes of Russia. At the same time he testifies to the wonderful loyalty of the people, and has himself done what he could to dispel the "dread of victory" among the socialistic and revolutionary groups. The scornful rejection by these groups of the offers of paid Austro-German agents sent to foment revolutionary uprisings at the outbreak of the war furnishes some of the most hopeful and significant pages in his book.

The author's bias is frankly stated, his tone is temperate, and the net impression produced by his book is rather optimistic than otherwise. His final chapters on the territorial results of the war, being based on Russian victory, seem a little premature at the present moment.

LIFE IN A FAMOUS BIRD VILLAGE

Mr. Ernest Harold Baynes Describes Some of the Results of His Experiments in Meriden, N. H.

WILD BIRD GUESTS: HOW TO ENTERTAIN THEM. By Ernest Harold Baynes. With fifty photogravure illustrations from photographs. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $2.

A REFRESHING experience awaits the reader of "Wild Bird Guests." Mr. Baynes lives in the famous "bird village," Meriden, N. H., and he begins by telling what that community's kindness to the feathered folk has accomplished. To the bird lover it is astonishing and inspiring.

If you visited Meriden some Winter day, says the author, it is more than likely that a wild bird would alight on your shoulder before you could reach the main street, and if you paused in delighted surprise, probably another would fly upon your hat and peep at you over the brim. There is no magic about it. It is simply that the Meriden people have made it a rule to be very quiet and gentle with their feathered guests, and have given them homes and food. The result is that seven species of Winter birds have learned to eat out of human hands, and sometimes they allow themselves to be picked up. The species thus tamed are pine grosbeaks, white-winged crossbills, redpolls, pine siskins, chickadees, and the two kinds of nuthatches. No English sparrows are allowed in the town.

The chickadees are tamest of all, and many are the delightful experiences with them related by Mr. Baynes. They come and sit in a row on his windowsill, and hammer on the glass with their bills till he lets them in. He taught one to stand on his finger and take a bit of nut from his lips. He has photographed another peeping into the muzzle of a leveled rifle to see what is in it. One day in the snowy woods he paused to eat a sandwich, when the chickadees swarmed down on his cap, his shoulders, his snowshoes, while one alighted on the sandwich and helped to eat it.

The object of the author is to promote a sympathetic interest in our wild birds, so that other communities will entertain them as honored guests. He tells how to win their confidence, how to house and feed them, how to protect them from enemies, and how to organize bird clubs. He hopes to spread a network of such clubs all over the United States, as a solution of the problem of wild bird conservation. It was for the Meriden Bird Club that Percy Mackaye wrote his fine bird masque, "Sanctuary."

Red squirrels are among the worst robbers of birds' nests, says Mr. Baynes; and gray squirrels, though less harmful, are not quite exonerated. The sharp-shinned and Cooper's hawks, with crows, jays, and grackles, are more or less destructive; but man himself is the most relentless enemy of the birds. And next comes the ordinary cat. A house cat has been known to catch fifty birds in a season. Edward Howe Forbush, State Ornithologist of Massachusetts, estimates that if there is one cat on each farm, and if it kills only ten birds a year, the loss is 700,000 wild birds annually in that State alone.

One of the most impressive things in Mr. Baynes's chapter on the destructiveness of man is his story of the massacre of birds on the island of Laysan, eight hundred miles northwest of Honolulu. Until recently whole sections of that island were literally white with the snowy plumage of albatrosses and other sea birds. The place was the happy home of hundreds of thousands of birds of all sizes and many species. In the Spring of 1909 a party of cold-blooded plume hunters landed on Laysan and proceeded to slaughter 300,000 of these innocent creatures before a United States revenue cutter could arrive and stop them. Mr. Baynes adds:

> But the wretches who did this thing—I cannot call them men—went further than this. They put hundreds of sea birds into a dry cistern and allowed them to slowly starve to death, because in starving they would use up the fatty tissue stored next to the skin, leaving the skin free from grease, and therefore much easier to prepare. These birds were tortured to supply the millinery trade.

This is an exceptionally helpful and magnetic book for bird lovers. It has more practical information about bird boxes, baths, foods, and methods of attraction than can be indicated in a brief review. The photogravure plates are an attractive feature in themselves.

ENGLISH AND GERMAN VIEWS OF GERMANY

Dr. T. F. A. Smith, Instructor in a Bavarian University, Writes of His "Study of the People from Within"—Recent Books by Prof. Edmund von Mach and Others

THE SOUL OF GERMANY. A Twelve Years' Study of the People from Within. By Thomas F. A. Smith, Ph. D. New York: George H. Doran Company. $1.25.

DURING the years 1902 to 1904 Dr. Smith, an Englishman, was an instructor in the University of Erlangen, Bavaria, and used his vacations to visit all parts of Germany. A day or two before the war was declared he and his family sought safety in England. Having served the Bavarian State so long he supposed that his household goods would be safe in Erlangen.

In October Dr. Smith was dismissed by the school authorities for having left Germany. In January his belongings were levied upon by the State for income tax—likewise by the landlord for rent. His goods have been sold to meet these claims. In March he received formal notice that he was to be "tried" by the Chamber of Discipline for State officials in Nuremberg for having expressed anti-German opinions in private letters. He had written to German friends, including an invalid lady, and these letters had been confiscated by bullying officials. Meanwhile he has been writing a book that will interest these officials.

The author's opinion of the German character is what one might expect in the circumstances. He knows it with the thoroughness of twelve years' intimate contact, but in his present mood he naturally emphasizes its unpleasant traits. The German soul, seen through his eyes, is hard, vulgar, materialistic, and brutal.

Dr. Smith's first indictment is against the German's low estimate of womanhood, and the servility with which the women accept their present status. A German wife is esteemed only for her abilities as a housekeeper, says the author. Marriage for the men is a cold-blooded matter of money—the size of the girl's dowry—and if a girl's parents cannot buy a man for her, she must earn and save enough to do it herself. The author continues:

> Without exaggeration it may be stated that in Germany every man has his price, and Fräulein's determination to make a purchase at all costs only tends to make the market go up. Officers command the highest figure. Next in order come university and professional men, while the mere man of business makes a bad third.
> No German officer may marry without his Colonel's permission. This gentleman looks carefully—with the help of Germany's social spy system—into the lady's social standing before giving his consent. If the officer is still a Lieutenant, the lady must further deposit a sum from $15,000 for Infantry up to a much higher figure if the man is in a crack regiment.

According to Dr. Smith the German spy system has nowhere reached a higher or more obnoxious efficiency than in the "heaven" where marriages are made. A young man can always buy secret information about a young woman before committing himself. There are agencies that make a business of collecting data about marriageable women, and many of them get a commission on the dowry when a marriage is made.

> It is exceedingly illuminating [says the author] to think that your well-groomed German guest carries the art of spying into the "best circles" and exploits your family life to gain a commission by finding a husband for your daughter.

The tyranny of the State over the whole school system is the theme of one chapter. Dr. Smith soon discovered that the German Government would not permit any school to teach self-reliance or independence of thought. He calls the universities "high schools of Kultur and brutality." The poison disseminated by Treitschke forty years ago has percolated through the whole educational system and has affected nearly every educated man in the country. Atheism is taking the place of religion. Sentiment long ago gave way to a cynical intellectualism. The "reptile press," as Bismarck called it, is merely a channel for infecting the people with the ruling clique's baneful ideas of aggression and brute force.

So runs Dr. Smith's indictment through 350 pages. As confirmation of his charges of low national morals he compares the yearly average of crime in Germany and England over a period of ten years. The figures are overwhelmingly against Germany, especially in crimes against women and in malicious attacks with weapons.

This book should satisfy those in quest of data on the darker side of German institutions and characteristics, but its spirit is far from judicial. While its statements in the main are true, allowance must be made for the author's obvious inclination to see only the worst.

SWISS VIEW OF WAR

LA CASTE DOMINANTE ALLEMANDE: SA FORMATION—SON ROLE. Par Maurice Millioud. Lausanne, Switzerland: Librairie Payot et Cie.

THIS remarkable study of the social and economic causes back of Germany's plunge into war has attracted widespread attention in the original French edition.

The author, Maurice Millioud, is Professor of Sociology in the University of Lausanne. He begins by showing that Germany's ruling caste is composed of the old landed aristocracy and the new bourgeois capitalists, and that the ancient tool of militarism has been made to serve both elements. His main thesis is that the Kaiser and the ruling caste had set out to conquer the world's commerce by peaceful methods, but that their industrial and financial system became so inflated that the whole structure was threatened with collapse.

Inside the empire, inflated prices had caused unrest. Outside, tariff discrimination and unscrupulous methods of seizing rival markets had brought reprisals. Says the author:

> Raising prices wherever they controlled the market, thus making living more expensive; in the markets that they could not control, "dumping," crushing, war without mercy. Such is the system in its frightful simplicity.

This colossal compaign for the world's markets had come to a point where it could neither succeed nor fall back. The ruling class saw disaster ahead, and chose war as offering the best chance to save itself. Such is Professor Millioud's argument, and it is fortified by an astonishing array of concrete facts and examples, ranging all the way from the markets of Russia to those of the United States. The volume is well worthy of the thoughtful reader's attention.

GERMAN PROGRESS

SECRETS OF GERMAN PROGRESS. By Frank Koester. Illustrated. New York: The Fatherland Corporation. $1.25.

FRANK KOESTER, a German-American engineer who has lived twelve years in the United States, undertakes in this book to tell Americans how superior all things German are to all things American. Beginning with an infinitely better Government, Germany, we are told, has a better press, better schools, better industrial methods, a stronger financial system, more scientific agriculture, better marriage customs, more efficient methods of housing and city planning, to say nothing of a superior army and navy and "pre-eminence in the arts."

The chief emotion that Mr. Koester's book produces is one of wonder as to why the author has chosen to remain in so inferior a country when he might be living in Germany and fighting in the German Army, "the greatest organization which has ever been perfected by the brain of man."

Rejecting the author's attempts to justify the war and making allowance for his enthusiastic superlatives, one readily grants that his pages contain many things about Germany which Americans should know more fully than they do. Mr. Koester says we are entirely mistaken as to the power and importance of the Kaiser. Save as King of Prussia, he has far less power than the President of the United States. The great dynamo of the imperial machine is the Bundesrat, and in that autocratic council Mr. Koester finds "the greatest secret of German progress."

When Germany declared war, it was the Bundesrat, not the Kaiser, who exercised that power. Its members are appointed by the various States of the empire, and they are invariably men of the ruling caste—heads of wealthy trusts, noted lawyers and professors, capitalists and bankers, great land owners, merchants, and manufacturers. It is to this body that Germany intrusts her destiny. With the concurrence of the Kaiser, it can at any time dissolve the Reichstag, whose members are elected by the property-owning portion of the people. The executive, legislative, and judicial powers are all united in the Bundesrat, and the result is a swiftness of action that is typical of German efficiency in other lines.

Instead of suppressing the trusts, the German Government has promoted them and gone into partnership with them, an example which Mr. Koester thinks we might profitably imitate. His chapters on municipal ownership of lands and industries, State pensions, and the non-political administration of cities are well worth reading. He makes the assertion that the German Army, by training nearly all officials, is the backbone of the nation's progress. Graft is almost unknown. Another secret of Germany's industrial progress is the spirit of collectivism that has made perfect teamwork possible in every department of life.

Among the author's sweeping claims of German superiority there is a fair percentage of fact so far as scientific industry is concerned. His claim of pre-eminence in art is nonsense. The chapter attacking American newspapers, moreover, comes with poor grace on behalf of a nation whose own press was at once the servile tool of Bismarck—by his own testimony—and the butt of his contempt.

GERMANY'S POINT OF VIEW

GERMANY'S POINT OF VIEW. By Edmund von Mach. Chicago: A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.50.

PROFESSOR VON MACH'S defense of Germany at least has the merit of being written with rare self-control and reasonableness of spirit. It sets forth the usual German excuses for the war with unusual urbanity and ability. The author says his object is "to explain, if possible, why those who had not lost faith in Germany differed from many of their fellow-citizens in their interpretation of the relative merits of the causes of the several belligerents."

While appreciating his temperate tone, one cannot say that Professor von Mach's book is competent to alter America's adverse judgment. He concentrates much of his attention upon the violation of Belgium, but the "damned spot" will not out.

His excuses do not lack for variety. First he tries to show that England did not want a neutral Belgium. Because a secret arrangement had been made for British aid in case of German attack, "Belgium had broken her own neutrality, and Great Britain had helped her do it." At one time the author holds that Germany broke no treaty, because there was no valid treaty to break, and at another time he pleads that Germany only did to Belgian neutrality in dire need what England and Japan did to Chinese neutrality at Tsing-tao.

For the average American all these quibbles count as nothing in the presence of the overshadowing fact that Germany not only smashed her way through Belgium by brute force but still holds that country by the right of might alone. If Germany had meant to act in self-protection alone she could have stationed an army on the German side of the Belgian border and waited for England or France to be the first to violate Belgian neutrality. If either had done so, America's sympathies might have been with Germany. But Germany has been "caught with the goods," and no amount of explanation can nullify the evidence that she deliberately set out to seize what she wanted. Professor von Mach only strengthens this evidence when he forgets himself for a moment and indulges in these boasts:

> Where are the French coal mines? They are held by the Germans.
> Where are the French iron mines? They are held by the Germans.
> Where are the other French mineral mines? They are held by the Germans.
> Where are the French industrial centres? Where are the great cotton mills or the ironworks? Where are most of the gun factories? They are held by the Germans.

Americans believe all these sources of French wealth are held by the Germans because the Germans plotted long beforehand to seize them for their own profit. If Professor von Mach does not realize this it is because of the same naïveté that leads him to assure his readers that the German armies did not "continue their victorious march to Paris" because "it is more than likely that this was not their intention." They merely wished to take an impressive stroll through France. The American public will believe this quite as soon as it will accept the stock German defense of international brigandage.

A large part of Professor von Mach's book is devoted to complaints of British tyranny on the high seas, with an urgent plea for American protest against British infringement of the rights of neutral shipping. If England is overriding neutral commerce the average American feels that this is a separate question to be settled between us and Great Britain. The German outcry against Britain's policy of blockade leaves us unmoved. He who seeks equity must first do equity.

According to Professor von Mach, Sir Edward Grey is the arch-conspirator who caused the war, and he prints a long letter from Professor Conybeare of Oxford to show that it was Grey's "treasonable lies" that rushed England into hostilities. He quotes a newspaper dispatch indicating that England and Russia had made a secret naval compact, offensive and defensive, a few weeks before the outbreak of war. This move, for which Grey was responsible, he says, gave Russia the necessary confidence to force war.

He devotes the greater part of six long chapters to a meticulous analysis of the British White Paper and the French Yellow Book, with the object of proving Sir Edward Grey's guilt and his garbling of documents to hide it. Here is the author's summary of points on which he says important information had been suppressed by Sir Edward:

> (1) The telegrams exchanged between the royal houses of London, Berlin, and St. Petersburg, in which many people see the sincere efforts of the German Emperor to preserve peace; (2) the final offer of Germany, made by the German Ambassador, and published later as No. 123 of the Blue Book; (3) the full promise made to France, which has never been published by England, and seems to have been unknown even to Dr. Conybeare; (4) the British-Russian naval agreement, without which Russia would never have dared to risk a war; (5) the "conversations" between the British and Belgian General Staffs, which had given to England all the military secrets of Belgium, and in a war between Germany and England made it practically impossible for Belgium to remain a neutral outsider.

All the author's massing of minute details is unavailing to convince the average American that England wanted the war and started it. The one fact that looms larger than a mountain of such details is the relative preparedness of Germany and England. To the man in the street it looks as if Germany was ready to strike before any of the Allies had thought of mobilizing. England is only half ready after a year of war. The very success of Germany's raid on her neighbors nullifies all this author's attempts to represent the Fatherland as a poor, abused victim of designing English plotters.

It will require something more than Dr. von Mach's book to convert Americans to the German point of view.

SECRETS of GERMAN PROGRESS

By Frank Koester

It is the most constructive book written since the war. It epitomizes Germany's progress; presents a vital and illuminating statement of Germany's position and incentives of progress and her relation to the United States. Such a volume has never appeared before; it is a mine of information; every page glistens with facts that startle and convince. It shows why Germany has been successful commercially, nationally and politically.

FORECASTING THE SCHOOLS OF TOMORROW

Professor Dewey Studies the Methods of a Number of Institutions and Tells How the New Principles of Education Are Being Applied

SCHOOLS OF TOMORROW. By John Dewey and Evelyn Dewey. Illustrated. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.50.

WHEN one considers how little of Professor Dewey's "Schools of Tomorrow" could have been written twenty, even ten, years ago, one realizes that the much-talked-of and long-heralded transition period of our educational history is as good as over. Ten years ago only the merest guesswork could have picked with any certainty the new shift in the educational stream which obviously is now to become the main current. We are still in the experimental stage, but the transition is accomplished. The old building has been condemned and a new site selected. The work of the educator of tomorrow is not to tear down or revolutionize, or even to feel his way, but to construct, to build up.

Professor Dewey's study makes abundantly clear that the "new education" which we see springing up all over the country is by no means new in its theoretical aspect. Had Rousseau's genius been a little fuller, or had there lived some practical and executive soul of the past century who had the power to apply the sound educational principles which the French philosopher evolved, the history of our schools might have been, not different, but swifter by a hundred years.

Gary, Fairhope, Howland, Interlaken, Phoebe Thorn—these are but applied Rousseau. These are the new schools. They are among a great and growing number. They are opposed to the old school in that, instead of imposing adult accomplishments on the child, they insist upon the guidance of natural growth. Development takes the place of mere acquisition. The new aim is not to enlarge the child's store of information but to widen his experience, and to do this in a manner that continues the method by which he learned to walk, to talk, to get what he wanted, to avoid what he disliked. Obviously the forcing of adult experience on the child, the storing up of information which he has no use for at the time in the hope that he will be thus more amply equipped to meet the requirements of mature life, must be banished from the school.

Surely the adult is much more likely to learn the things befitting him when his hunger for learning has been kept alive continuously than after a premature diet of adult nutriment has deadened his zest to know [writes Professor Dewey.] * * *

We are continually moaning about the things we adults know, and are afraid the child will never learn them unless they are drilled into him by instruction before he has any intellectual or practical use for them. If we could really believe that attending to the needs of present growth would keep the child and teacher alike busy and would also provide the best possible guarantee of the learning needed in the future, transformation of educational ideals might soon be accomplished.

It was inevitable that back of the misconception of the function of education, Professor Dewey, who is after all nine parts philosopher to one part educator, would find a misconception of the nature of knowledge. Men have come to regard as knowledge the store of facts which has been piled up in the millenniums of human experience. To learn, complains Professor Dewey, has come to mean only appropriating the greatest possible amount from this ready-made store, not finding out for one's self.

Educational reformers may go on attacking pouring-in methods of teaching and passive reception methods of learning, but so long as these ideas of the nature of knowledge are current, they make little headway.

The endeavor must be not to master the material of learning, but the tools of learning, to make pupils hungry and capable to acquire knowledge.

To find out how to make knowledge when it is needed is the true end of the acquisition of information in school, not the information itself.

The very fact that statements like the above might be branded as truisms by the layman majority is evidence that the developmental idea in education has sent out some far-reaching roots. It is the actual application of the theory, however, which is still the controversial field. What are the "natural" methods by which a child develops? What is meant specifically by giving him freedom? What subjects shall be taught, and how shall they be taught so as to meet his physical and intellectual requirements?

These are the questions with which Rousseau did not condescend to concern himself. They are the questions which are being answered in actual experiment in perhaps two-score schools in this country. Professor Dewey and Miss Dewey consider some dozen of these schools which they have personally visited and studied to learn the various ways in which the new principles of education are being applied. The list includes the Teachers College Kindergarten and Miss Pratt's Play School in this city, Professor Meriam's Elementary School at Columbia, Mo.; the Wirt School at Gary, Ind.; Public School 45, Indianapolis; the Francis Parker School, Chicago; Cottage School of Riverside, Ill.; the Phoebe Thorn Experimental School at Bryn Mawr, the Interlaken School in Indiana, the Little School in the Woods of Greenwich, Conn., and the Howland School of Chicago.

The drawing together of the varied curricula of these schools and the constant reference to the constant principle which informs them make Professor Dewey's book undoubtedly the most significant educational record of the day. For its importance is derived from the importance of that which it sets down, the actual working out of a theory which appeared a hundred years ahead of its time. "Learning by doing" is the motto which Professor Dewey phrases for the school of tomorrow, but we have been a century in finding what to do to learn. How the schools considered in the present volume are meeting the problem is the main point. They are so far different from the old-fashioned school of desks, questioning teacher, blackboard, and textbooks that it is a wrench to call them schools at all. It is the teacher now who observes and the pupil who questions. Geography is no longer Frye, but field work in streets and fields; arithmetic is carpentering, and literature is amateur theatricals.

There is no negative discipline, mental or physical. Children are not intended to sit still before desks for hours, say the new teachers, and "the habit of giving work for the sake of its disciplinary value would seem to indicate blindness to moral values rather than an excess of moral zeal, for after all the habit is little more than holding up a thing's defects as its virtues."

The necessity of freedom for the child's development is clearly recognized. Here Professor Dewey takes sharp issue with Dr. Montessori:

Physically the pupils of a Montessori class are freer than they are in the classes of most American educators with whose views this book has been dealing; intellectually they are not so free. They can come and go, work and be idle, talk and move about quite voluntarily; getting information about things and acquiring skill in movement are the ends secured. Each pupil works independently on material that is self-corrective. But there is no freedom allowed the child to create. He is free to choose which apparatus he will use, but never to choose his own ends, never to bend a material to his own plans.

The newer educators, says Professor Dewey, do not subscribe to the older view that children have ready-made faculties which can be developed by suitable appliances and then devoted at will to other uses. They believe that "a child is born with special impulses of action to be developed through their use in preserving and perfecting life in the social and physical conditions under which it goes on."

The whole tendency is to link the school more closely to the intermingling of adult and child life which makes up each community, to divorce it totally from the purely abstract. But skillful teaching will effect little or nothing unless the community itself comes to regard the school as an organic part of itself, instead of as a necessary convention, as an isolated institution:

But a community that demands something visible from its schools, that recognizes the part they play in the welfare of the whole just as it recognizes its Police and Fire Departments, * * * such a community will have social schools, and whatever its resources, it will have schools that develop community spirit and interests.

It is this that will most widely separate the school of tomorrow from the academic and "cultural" institutions whose knell has already sounded; it is this in which the schools of the vanguard today agree, however diverse they may be in matters of detail; they are essentially social.

IN CAMP AND ON THE TRAIL

Practical Information for Those Who Enjoy Life in the Open

CAMP CRAFT. By Warren H. Miller. Introduction by Ernest Thompson Seton. Illustrated. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

ON THE TRAIL: An Outdoor Book for Girls. By Lina Beard and Adelia Belle Beard. Illustrated. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.

MR. MILLER, who is the editor of Field and Stream, writes out of the fullness of the widest practical knowledge of life in the open and an abiding joy in its craft that has moved him to constant observation, thought, and experiment upon the ways and means by which it can be most efficiently and happily practiced. In this book he sets forth the phases of how to be comfortable and successful in outdoor life in the light of the improvements in method and equipment which during recent years the observing, thinking, and trying out of himself and others have made impossible. It deals with camp life in the East and the West, by river side or sea shore and in the mountains, on horseback and by canoe, in permanent camp or by nightly stops. The author tells how to make yourself comfortable in camp, how to organize your expedition so that each member will have his own duties and will know when and how to perform them, counsels about cooking kit and cook fire, discusses the various kinds of tents and camps and considers the different sorts of beds and sleeping clothes, advises about the kinds of clothing that are most suitable and comfortable, devoting a whole chapter to footwear and the care of the feet, and treats with detail the equipment and the resourcefulness which will enable the camper to meet emergencies. One chapter takes up the special subject of Western camping, and another gives instruction upon horse packing, the diamond hitch, tents and clothing for Western outdoor life.

The author does not consider the joys and benefits of camp life to be the exclusive right of man, but advocates the sharing of it all with wives and children. One of his most enthusiastic chapters tells how to take the family along and how to manage the affairs of the camp and the trail in order that all may be comfortable and get out of the outing the maximum of benefit and enjoyment. Another chapter is on the building of a permanent camp, and tells how it may be done in a variety of ways.

The book makes, altogether, a very comprehensive and quite up-to-date manual of life in camp and on the trail. It is copiously illustrated from photographs that elucidate the text.

In his brief introduction Mr. Seton writes of camp life as "the climax of all woodcraft," and points out that its only dangers are those that result from ignorance of how to accommodate one's self to the methods of living that make it advantageous and adds that it is an open secret that the author of this book has himself and among his friends "tried out all the things he writes about—yes, many times—before offering them to the world as things of proved worth."

No vigorous girl could take so much as a peep into "On the Trail" without being fired at once by the desire to organize a camping party and do the fascinating things described in its pages. The Misses Beard, who are nieces of Dan Beard, famous both as artist and outdoors man, are evidently thoroughly versed in the craft of camp and trail and, applying their knowledge to the special uses of girls and women, they have written a practical little volume of advice and counsel that is compact of the wisdom of how to live in the wild.

The book tells the girls how to make camps of the various kinds themselves, how to set up tents, how to make beds of all the sorts that campers use, and how to take care of the sanitation of the camp. Camp cookery gets plenty of attention and so also does the construction of many simple articles for camp use. There are lists of things necessary for camp life and there are directions for learning how to do all those things that will make the girl resourceful, self-reliant, and sure of herself in the open—such as using the compass, finding her way in the woods, using tools, blazing a trail, and learning animal signs. Several chapters deal with animal, tree, and plant life and describe the appearance of species with sufficient detail to enable the girl camper to learn to distinguish them by sight. Wild fruits that are edible and plants that should be avoided receive attention. There are chapters on using the camera and how to tie many kinds of knots, while still others deal with water life—swimming, canoeing, rowing. The accidents that may happen are considered with terse advice as to what to do in each case, and one jolly section deals with the games that can be played and the fun that can be enjoyed around the camp fire.

Nearly a hundred illustrations by the authors, some of them from photographs, but many from designs and diagrams, bring clearly to the eye most of the things described in the text.

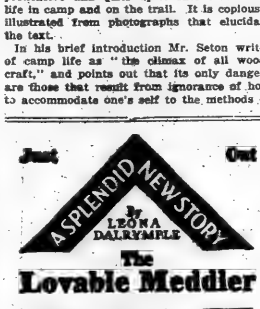
SAN FRANCISCO

THE BEGINNINGS OF SAN FRANCISCO. From the expedition of Anza in 1774 to the City Charter of April 15, 1850, with biographical and other notes. By Zoeth Skinner Eldredge. Two vols. San Francisco: Author.

Practically everything the ordinary person cares to know about the early history of San Francisco is to be found in Mr. Eldredge's work. He starts his story with a circumstantial narrative of Juan Bautista de Anza's two long and perilous journeys from Tubac to the Pacific Coast, the second of which resulted in the founding of San Francisco, in 1776. This serves as an introduction to a detailed account of the Spanish régime in California, which lasted until the coming of the Argonauts, covering a priestly, pastoral and peaceful period, interesting to read about and to contemplate.

Then comes the story of the gold hunters, full of enterprise, action and tragedy. The author has evidently studied this episode in the early life of his city with diligence and understanding, for the graphic portrayal he makes of it is notable for its assemblage of well-attested facts.

Mr. Eldredge closes his work with an account of the establishment of governmental forms in California and of the provision by legislative charter of a municipal organization for San Francisco. Included in the second volume is a large body of notes and appendices which deal with considerable fullness with matters only briefly touched upon in the principal narrative.



HERBERT QUICK was raised on an Iowa farm in a community where good men sat on the tail of progress and shouted "Whoa!" He went to a good-for-nothing one-room school, taught in a back number farm district, and was associated with county school affairs under those conditions. He became a writer for farm papers, edits Farm and Fireside, does intensified farming, studies rural conditions, and knows personally the men and women who have transformed one-room schools, have made over entire counties, and are now in the national educational arena. His new book, The Brown Mouse, is the evolution of all the germs of country life betterment through the schools that have been afloat in the Corn Belt in the last ten years. It is interesting as a story in first class pedagogy, and is a great study in rural sociology.—Dr. Albert E. Winship, Editor of the Journal of Education, Boston.

HUMOR IN WAR TIME

IN spite of the reported supremacy of the war book in England just now it is pleasant to learn that a work of pure humor, "Bealby," is having "a tremendous sale"—that it is, indeed, "selling better than such books sell in peace time." The fact should be stimulating alike to authors and publishers who are speculating on the best type of literature to put forth at a moment when the world is suffering from the horrors of war. "Bealby" is Mr. WELLS at his humorous best. There is nothing serious in it. From beginning to end it is one delicious provocation after another to laughter. It is farce, burlesque. Mr. WELLS wrote it in order to make people laugh—and laughter is a tonic that, always invigorating, was never so much needed as it is today. Hence, as Mr. SHORTER assures us, "'Bealby' is just the book for war time. It is cheerful reading for soldiers in our hospitals, for mothers anxious about their boys at the front. There is a laugh in every page." Nevertheless, the same critic declares that "Bealby" is "a book that is not quite worthy of its author." This singular conclusion seems to be based on the notion that for an author of the first rank to employ his talents to make people laugh is to lower, somehow, his literary standards. Such a view is, of course, quite indefensible, and we doubt whether Mr. SHORTER would attempt seriously to defend it. One of the prose masterpieces of literature is unquestionably a work of humor—albeit there is pathos of the undying kind hidden away in its pages—and it is worth noting that "Don Quixote" is as plentifully sprinkled with farce as are some of the unforgettable scenes in SHAKESPEARE, DICKENS, and even MOLIERE. Mr. WELLS may have written better stories than "Bealby"; he has written none that have left the world so much in his debt. As an example of the kind of literature that answers a very real human need at this particular time this "rollicking farce" is well worth consideration.

A NEW American review that promises it will not always "reek of the soil" deserves success even if it does not happen to achieve it. The Texas Review, edited by Professor STARK YOUNG and published quarterly at the University of Texas, does not hamper itself at the commencement of its career with some impossible mission, the alluring quixotism that has so often proved the undoing of the newcomer in periodical literature. The "mission" disposed of, one might expect, judging from its title, that The Texas Review would at any rate "set itself to reek of the Texas soil"—but this, Professor YOUNG assures us, is not to be, for the simple reason that deliberate "reeking" usually reveals anything rather than the true quality of the particular soil that is under analysis. But The Texas Review will undoubtedly give, in the course of its existence, the Texas point of view—if there is a Texas point of view—on matters of "thought and life and letters." The initial number of The Review is at least distinctive enough to promise well for the future. It contains some excellent poetry by MADISON CAWEIN and MAURICE HEWLETT. In prose, among the longer contributions the paper by Professor T. W. RIKER on "The Case Against Great Britain—In the Light of Her History" is notable for its painstaking research.

EXCEPT for "Maria," the exquisite little story of Colombian life, by JORGE ISAACS, American readers are scarcely aware that South America has produced works of fiction that in number and quality claim a dignified place in literature. An article by ISAAC GOLDBERG, the third of a series, appearing in the current number of The Bookman, indicates how much we have underrated the achievements of our Southern neighbors in this respect. In spite of the small circle of readers that the best of the native writers can hope to address in South America, imaginative literature has done exceptionally well down there. Mr. GOLDBERG brings forward an imposing list of men from the various republics who have written fiction that is permanently worth while. Indeed, so excellent are their stories that Signor FERRERO, the Italian historian, is quoted as characterizing one of them, ARANHA'S "Canaan," as "the great American novel." This may have been a bit of enthusiasm that a subsequent reading of the Brazilian author's work would not have warranted. But it emphasizes the fact that the Western world is producing a literature that is attracting the attention of European scholars and about which we of the United States practically know nothing.

THE effect of the war on book publishing in Europe has not been so disastrous as was at first expected. The number of publications, of course, has been greatly diminished—particularly in France and Germany—but enough books have appeared to keep the traditional "season" going, even if the latter must be rated "very dull." With the opening of the second year of the war it is difficult to say whether existing conditions will continue. A greater proportion of "war books" is noticeable today than a few months ago in England, and it may be that the popular interest in the absorbing topic will impress itself on current literature still further. The announcement by two leading book periodicals in London, The Bookseller and The Book Monthly, that they will be published hereafter at longer intervals than formerly indicates, presumably, that the output of general literature in the immediate future is not expected to be so great as it was a year ago. If the inevitable curtailment means "fewer and better books" the cause of good literature will not be injured directly by the war. Every season brings forth a large number of books that apparently serve no particular purpose. Recently, however, publications of this sort have not been so much in evidence, either in this country or in England—a change that is due directly to the winnowing effect of the war. What the further result of the latter may be is evidently a problem among European publishers. Here, however, there is no indication that the coming season in books will depart noticeably from normal standards.

IT was inevitable that the writers of obituaries, one and all, emphasized the "international" feature in the work of MAARTEN MAARTENS, whose death was announced this month. For a native of one country to write novels showing the finest literary quality in the language of another country and then translating them into the language of his birth is certainly a rare achievement. It is done by JOSEPH CONRAD and by the Indian poet TAGORE—although the latter writes first in his native tongue and then translates into English. In the case of MAARTENS, as of CONRAD, this achievement is more than a mere lingual triumph. Both men have captured not only the verbal facility but the spirit, the point of view that places them among the English novelists of the day as if the distinction were theirs by right of birth. This is very different from translating one's thoughts from a native to a foreign tongue. MILTON when he wrote sonnets in Latin and SWINBURNE when he did the same thing in Greek remained Englishmen in thought and expression, notwithstanding their proficiency with a foreign tongue. MAARTENS, however, was a native when he wrote English novels. When he wrote in Dutch he was a translator.

THE AMERICAN YEAR BOOK

THE AMERICAN YEAR BOOK: A Record of Events and Progress, 1914. Edited by Francis G. Wickware. New York and London: D. Appleton & Co. 1915.

THIS is the fifth issue of this useful reference work. Two departments, "Population and Immigration" and "Prevention, Correction, and Charity," have been consolidated with the department "Social and Economic Problems." The order of the remaining departments is unchanged from that of the issue for 1913.

The Supervisory Board of Representatives of National Learned and Scientific Societies, officially known as the American Year Book Corporation, has now forty members, representing forty-four societies. One hundred and twenty-two contributors have co-operated in the preparation of this issue. All are experts in their special fields. Editor Wickware in the preface says:

"To Americans, no less than to those directly engaged, the European war overshadows in importance all other events of the year; its causes, the military and naval operations, and the manifold ramifications of its effects in this country are comprehensively reviewed. Among events of more local interest, the most important part of the year's record is, of course, the crisis which brought the United States to the verge of war with Mexico. American events and progress in politics, economics, sociology, the sciences, the arts, and the humanities are surveyed with fullness and authority, and are placed in their proper perspective by a background of the significant events in foreign countries."

The great achievement of the Administration during the year, Mr. Wickware declares, was the extrication of the United States from the most pressing of its foreign relations difficulties. The controversy with Great Britain was composed by the repeal of the exemption clause of the Panama Canal act. The President's policy toward the de facto Huerta Government in Mexico was brought to a successful issue through a crisis which led the United States to the verge of war. A final adjustment with Colombia was advanced by the negotiation of a treaty offering full reparation for the secession of Panama, while the arbitration treaty with Japan was renewed and measurable progress was made toward the resumption of regulated commercial relations with Russia.

At the outset, he continues, the course of the Administration in accepting mediation, after the decisive action at Vera Cruz, was harshly attacked in Congress and in a section of the press. At the end the critics of the President's policy were silenced by the triumph of his efforts for the avoidance of war. For this issue of the Mexican adventure the whole country united in gratitude, although it has never fully understood the motives which impelled the Administration to embark on an undertaking so full of danger and so utterly barren of advantage, even the small satisfaction of the salute to the flag, which the expedition set out to enforce and on which its official justification still rests.

Charles E. Asmis, however, in his article on "International Relations," takes a different view. He says:

"The results of the A B C mediation must not be judged from the practical standpoint alone. It would appear that the immediate results were barren of accomplishment; that the United States emerged from the conference without international satisfaction for the affronts and indignities suffered by it and that the whole troubled field of Mexican affairs was still untouched. But there were other considerations not quite so tangible but equally important. * * * The offer of mediation came at a time when suspicion in Latin America of the designs of the United States was deepest. * * * The seizure of a great Central American port, Vera Cruz, served to substantiate the suspicion. The readiness with which the United States accepted the tender of mediation by the South American Republics did more to allay this suspicion than any number of Pan-American conferences and tours of Secretaries of State. The mediation conference had some of the aspects of a Hague Tribunal, and in its broader phases it was as beneficial. It may serve as the starting point for the general recognition that the Americans have interests peculiarly their own, and that the New World has awakened to the consciousness that in some aspects it is a political unit. The statement may also be ventured that the 'Concert of America' has been inaugurated, its first action serving to allay the growing feeling of danger of aggression from within the hemisphere itself."

Other important topics are discussed in the same interesting way.

WHEN DOES A BALLAD BECOME A BALLADE?

A Curious Confusion of Terms Among Poets Themselves That Obscures an Otherwise Well-Defined Form in Popular Verse

By Richard Le Gallienne

THE BALLADE. By Helen Louise Cohen. Columbia University Press. $1.75.

ONE still meets with people, by no means unlettered, who use the words "ballad" and "ballade" as though they were interchangeable. In this innocent looseness of speech they are aided and abetted by no less illustrious a sinner than Swinburne himself, who, even when writing "ballades" punctiliously strict in form, such as "A Ballad of Dreamland," or even when no less strictly translating Villon, "prince of all ballad-makers," uses the word "ballad" as he would have used it in speaking of the ballad of "Chevy Chase." Even with the people from whom the "ballade" proper comes, notes Miss Cohen, "the same word 'ballade' serves for the English or Scottish popular ballad and for a certain kind of narrative poem, written in imitation of German authors like Uhland, as well as for the artificially fixed lyric poem." Similarly one still hears the word "sonnet" used loosely for any brief snatch of verse. "I saw your little sonnet in"—such and such a magazine—they will say. Addison's "Ned Softly" refers to an eight-line lyric of his as a "sonnet." Of course, it doesn't matter a great deal, yet when a simple word exists for a thing, clearly distinguishing it from some other, there seems an advantage in using it, rather than another word that but loosely suggests it. In its earliest English use, that by Chaucer, in the "Legend of Good Women," (1394,) the word "ballade" is used correctly as indicating a three-stanza poem, with fixed form imitated from the French—the first form of the ballade, without the envoi. But, after Chaucer and his immediate successors, the special use of the word "ballade" was lost, or ignored, in English till its notable renaissance toward the end of the nineteenth century by Swinburne and the "bric-à-brac" school of Messrs. Larg, Dobson, and Gosse. The word "bric-à-brac" was the unfair and inadequate label of the time, for in their renaissance of the ballade and other old French forms these poets, and their allies, notably Henley in England, and Messrs. Clinton Scollard, Brander Matthews, Dempster Sherman, H. C. Bunner, in America, produced a mass of sometimes beautiful, and always spirited and attractive work, which gave a poetic justification for the use of those "artificial" forms such as had not been forthcoming since the days of Villon. It must not, of course, be forgotten that this English renaissance of the ballade was the echo of the renaissance already inaugurated by Théodore de Banville and his confrères in contemporary Paris.

The harvest of the English ballade renaissance was reaped by Gleeson White in a charming collection, since become a classic among anthologies, of "Ballades and Rondeaus, Chants Royal, Sestinas, Villanelles, &c.," (1887;) a little volume which, among its other attractions, has the value of an "editio princeps," in that there appeared in it for the first time over his signature a number of ballades contributed anonymously to a defunct English magazine, "London," by W. E. Henley. Henley's fame as a poet, as he himself admitted, sprang indirectly from this publication. Gleeson White prefaced his collection by a pleasant, well-informed historical introduction, but he made no pretense to an erudition such as that displayed by Miss Cohen in this at once learned and attractive study. Miss Cohen's book is indeed a notable piece of original research, a valuable addition to our knowledge of literary origins. No little of her material appears in print for the first time, unearthed by her from manuscript collections in various European libraries, and other material she has reprinted from early and little-accessible volumes. As she is well aware, the ballades thus unearthed have seldom, if ever, anything but an antiquarian value. Her researches have resulted in no lucky finds of poetic buried treasure. But, had they done so, such good fortune would have been but a by-product of her purpose, which is historical. Her business has been to trace the history of the ballade from its beginnings to the present day. She considers that the probabilities are that the ballade sprang from the Provençal "balada," which was a song woven to the motions of a dance, (as the name, from the Latin "ballare," to dance, implies,) and originally sung to music. From the formal repetitions of the dance was developed the refrain. An intermediate evolutionary form was the "ballette," which there is reason to suppose was sung. Summing up her conclusions, Miss Cohen says: "Apparently, then, the 'ballade' took, roughly, about four centuries to develop. * * * The 'ballade' stanza was well developed by the fourteenth century, whatever the process. * * * We see the 'ballade' stanza in various stages of development in the 'balada' and in the 'ballette.' To the latter the 'ballade' owes probably its three stanzas and refrain. The 'ballettes,' composed in the thirteenth century, were artistic dance songs. The incorporated refrains which, copied from those of traditional poetry, had become the stock in trade of the 'trouvères.' Many of the 'ballettes' consisted of only three stanzas, with a refrain at least two lines in length, loosely connected with the stanza." The envoi was not added till late in the fourteenth century, and has an interesting origin, somewhat different from that usually assumed.

The "Prince" addressed was not originally, as seemed natural to think, the feudal lord thus humbly addressed by the wandering trouvère, but was in fact a literary courtesy title. The "Prince" was the President of those curious mediaeval societies known as "puys," poetical fraternities originally of a religious character, gradually evolving "into literary societies, chambers of theoretical academies, with only a faint coloring of their religious purpose left." Many of these "puys" existed throughout France, notably at Arras and Le Puy, (hence, some say, the name,) and there was one in Edward I.'s reign in London, a "religious, convivial, and literary" body, which, it is conjectured, found its appropriate meeting place in that section of old London known as "The Vintry," largely inhabited by merchants from Bordeaux and other localities of Gascoigne and Guyenne. Who knows, hints Miss Cohen, but that Chaucer, "son of a vintner," was not made free of those learned and convivial exercises in the Vintry. The statutes of this English "puy" exist in a "Liber Custumarum." "Its convivial aspects," says Miss Cohen, "feasts, and processions seem most prominent, but masses and almsgiving also are prominent, not to speak of the yearly literary contest. On this occasion a crown was awarded to the composer of the best 'chancoun reale.'" It was in these "puys" that "the envoy, which had hitherto been a feature of several kinds of 'chansons,' became attached to and identified with the 'ballade,' so that after the opening of the fourteenth century a 'ballade,' whether composed in a 'puy' or not, almost inevitably contained a conventional address to the 'Prince' in the first line of the envoi."

The vogue of the ballads lasted for about three centuries, from the end of the fourteenth to the middle of the seventeenth. During that period it was employed as a sort of poetical hold-all. "In the ballade for three hundred years," says Miss Cohen, "the dominant ideas of mediaeval society were perpetuated. The current conception of love, death, and religion, the hand-to-mouth wisdom of proverbs, satire mordant and mild, the chronicle of marching events, aristocratic politics—all these subjects were accepted as within the proper scope of the ballade. Of particular interest, too, is its presence in the religious drama." It was written in dialogue, stories were told in ballade sequences, letters were written in the form, and in the hands of pedantic poetasters it was distorted into acrostics and all manner of barren ingenuities. By such industrious dunces as Eustache Deschamps ballades were written literally by the thousand, he being credited with no less than 1,175. For two of these he claimed the absurd distinction that they might be read in eight different ways. Too seldom did a real poet freight the form with life and charm. Jehannot de Lescurel and Alain Chartier are exceptions, but practically the ballades of Charles d'Orléans and François Villon, out of all the gigantic ballade production of three centuries, are all the wheat that remains from the winnowing of the prodigious chaff. Owing to its abuse by bad poets, the form began to fall under the contempt of good ones as early even as the days of the Pléiade, Ronsard, and du Bellay and their fellows would have none of it; and it may be said to have received its coup de grace from Boileau and Molière. In the latter's "Les Femmes Savantes," Trissotin says:

> La ballade à mon gout, est une chose fade;
> Ce n'en est plus la mode, elle sent son vieux temps.

In the last analysis we are left with François Villon. "François Villon alone in these three centuries," says Miss Cohen, "produced ballades, one is tempted to say a ballade, of great beauty." On this famous "Ballade des Dames du Temps Jadis" Miss Cohen has a commentary to make which brings home to one with uncommon force the elusive nature of original magic in literature. There is practically nothing in the components of Villon's ballade that is his own. And yet by some indefinable transforming touch the whole is his own so splendidly. The motive, the "ubi sunt" formula, was, Miss Cohen, following Sainte-Beuve, points out, a favorite one with mediaeval theologians first and poets afterward. St. Bernard inquired:

> Dic ubi Salamon, olim tam nobilis?
> Vel ubi Samson est, dux invincibilis?
> Vel pulcher Absalon, vultu mirabilis?
> Vel dulcis Jonathas multum amabilis?

Professor Gummere (in his book on "The Beginnings of Poetry," also cited by Miss Cohen) quotes this further parallel from a thirteenth century English poem by Thomas de Hales: "A maid of Christ asks me to make her a love-song. 'I will do it. But the love of this world is a cheat; lovers must die, and men fade all as leaf from bough. Lovers, quotha? Where, indeed, are Paris and Helen; where Tristram, Ysolde, and the rest; where, too, are Hector and Caesar? As if they had never lived at all!' But we say, with Sainte-Beuve, the great refrain, at all events, was Villon's! But was it? Alas! come along Professors Mackail and Gummere, and claim it for Chaucer; "yea, farewel al the snow of ferne yere!" Perhaps it was not Chaucer's either, "for," says Professor Gummere, "it not only echoes a popular phrase, and perhaps is itself nothing more than a communal refrain, but it continues a theme of the mediaeval poet even better known than the 'ubi sunt.'"

But, for all this marshaling of origins, the miracle of a masterpiece—as in the similar cases of Shakespeare and Burns—is made the more rather than the less mysterious. What is it that has entered into these various materials that look so very much the same as marshaled alike by the critic and the poet—materials far from raw in the first instance? What can we say but that a current of genius has been passed through them, and that, while the parts remain the same, they have mysteriously come by a composite life, an immortal soul?

STIEGEL GLASS

STIEGEL GLASS. By Frederick William Hunter, A. M. Illustrated with twelve plates in color and 180 half-tones. Edition limited to 420 copies. New York: Houghton Mifflin Company. $10.

HAVING not long ago presented to the Metropolitan Museum in New York an interesting and valuable collection of Colonial glass produced in Pennsylvania in the latter half of the eighteenth century by Henry William Stiegel, Mr. Hunter now comes forward with an excellent biography of Stiegel, which includes a full account of his career as a glass manufacturer.

The biography is distinctly destructive of the legendary story of Stiegel's life current for over a century in the counties of Pennsylvania in which he operated. According to the legend, the man who made the glass was a German Baron, who landed in America with a cash capital of £40,000; Mr. Hunter demonstrates that the immigrant was not of noble birth and that no great sum of money was in his possession at the time of his arrival in America—nor at any later time.

It seems that Stiegel was a Colonial high financier, who owned a great deal of property with other people's moneys. If he had been of the plodding sort he might have died a rich man; but he was speculative and "splurgy."

He took up with glass making while he was an ironmaster, regarding it, apparently, as an avocation; eventually he devoted himself entirely to the operation of his glass factory, and, as the Metropolitan Museum collection indicates, succeeded in producing many artistic pieces in addition to the simple ware which was designed for use rather than for ornament. Had he managed his factory in a businesslike way and abstained from extravagant living, he probably would have made a success of his venture, although his financial condition was far from good when he built his factory; but failing in these respects, he moved on from bad to worse until finally he was completely ruined and was sent to prison for debt.

THE RAINBOW TRAIL

ZANE GREY'S NEW NOVEL OF ADVENTURE
Hitting the trail and taking the reader along with him, through the country of adventurous romance, is the best thing Zane Grey does. And he's done it again most emphatically. For here is a new story, double-barrelled as Mark Twain would say, because it is a remarkable tale by itself for any one to read, whether or not he ever heard of Z. G. before; and, also, for any one who read "Riders of the Purple Sage" here is the out come of some of the stirring incidents in that widely read novel.

NEW BOOKS BY TWO POPULAR NOVELISTS

Mrs. Wiggin Continues Penelope on Her Travels and Mrs. Porter Writes of an Irish Newsboy—History and War in Current Fiction

MICHAEL O'HALLORAN. By Gene Stratton-Porter. Illustrated by Frances Rogers. New York: Doubleday, Page & Co. $1.35.

So huge an army of readers awaits Mrs. Porter's new novel, that the publishers announce the printing, previous to publication, of 300,000 copies. She has won their loyalty and their eager anticipation by her former books, which include "Freckles," "The Girl of the Limberlost," "The Harvester," one or two other novels, and several nature books, such as "Music of the Wild" and "Moths of the Limberlost," which show unusual keenness in observation and facility in description. Most of her previous fictional work has been addressed to younger readers, although it has won almost as many admirers among those who have passed their teens—wholesome books for young minds, because of their cheerful, sturdy qualities, their outdoor themes, and the knowledge of birds and flowers, skies and woods, with which they are permeated. "The Harvester," meant for grown-up readers, whose story was woven about a unique idea, was filled, perhaps beyond due proportion, with nature love and nature knowledge. Its ultra romantic spirit brought down upon it much severe criticism, but it was a brave attempt to combine intimately romantic imagination, spirituality of theme, and the realism of every-day life.

This new novel is less ambitious in its aims and in form harks back to the author's earlier manner of writing with its primary appeal to younger readers, but ready also for such of their elders as enjoy unsophisticated fiction. They will find much to charm and delight them in its central character, Michael O'Halloran, otherwise "Mickey," an Irish newsboy apparently in his first teens. If the author had written with more care and better sense of proportion Mickey would have been a striking and original character, for the central idea of him has a strong appeal and he has a delightful endowment of Irish wit and Irish wheedlesomeness. But Mickey talks to such endless and impossible lengths that he is likely to wear out the patience of even uncritical readers, while the head upon his young shoulders is so very, very aged that the whole of him is rather appalling.

Mickey lives all alone in a clean and tidy little room and orders his life according to the advice and counsel of a wise and much-loved mother, dead some years before the beginning of the story. Then he finds a wretched, deserted little girl of the slums, crippled, unable to walk, and he takes her to his home and proceeds to bring her up in cleanly, civilized fashion. Intermingled with his and her fortunes are the affairs of two fortunate young lovers, the marital troubles of an unhappily wedded pair, and the home life of a farmer couple. The book bears every evidence of having been written in haste, with little or no subjection to that maturing and ripening process which does so much to improve the quality of fiction. The obvious is described and insisted upon to wearisome lengths. The characters, though each possesses a certain individuality, are there for the purpose of working out the story, and the reader waits ever in wonderment to see whom and how the garrulous Mickey will next instruct in matters of law, journalism, farming, or life in general. The little lame girl, however, deserves a word of praise, for she is a vivid and convincing piece of character drawing.

The scene of the story is near that same Limberlost swamp in Northern Indiana that has given Mrs. Porter so much background and so much material for her former volumes. It contributes not a little to this one in the way of bird songs, flowers, and expeditions that influence the lives of many of the characters. The pleasing decorations of the book on cover, title page, and end-papers take their motive from the swamp and its ladyslippers.

PENELOPE'S POSTSCRIPTS

PENELOPE'S POSTSCRIPTS. By Kate Douglas Wiggin. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.

It is twenty-two years since Mrs. Wiggin's Penelope began to keep a diary in which she recorded her lively and amusing ideas and impulsive doings and occasional lapses into irresponsibility which had always a flash in it of inspiration. That was in the "English Experiences" of her self and her friends, one of the gayest and most readable of travel books, which won for Mrs. Wiggin, because of its international understanding and good-feeling, the English compliment of being "one of the most successful of Ambassadors between America and Great Britain." Penelope and her companions kept up their wanderings, and she her vivacious accounts of them in "Penelope's Progress," published five years later, while fourteen years ago appeared "Penelope's Experiences in Ireland."

The last chapter in this new book tells why Penelope, of the unflagging curiosity, the irrepressible interest, and the gay, amusing pen, has been silent ever since. Penelope has been engaged in the serious business of getting married and raising a family. The four other chapters, which tell of wanderings in Switzerland, a sojourn in Venice, some goings about in Devon and certain "Prints of Wales," are evidently taken from her diaries of those days before her roving foot was tied to the "sit-fast acres" of her New England husband. They are just as vivacious and readable as the former books, and just as full of Penelope's unexpectedness of word and deed. Miss Van Tyck, for instance, in an Italian city gets very busy "vaccinating herself with information," and Penelope, considering the irregular verbs of almost any language, decides there is only one way of learning them, and that is by marrying a native, a method that may be radical, even illegal and bigamous, but is not, on the whole, attended by any more difficulty than that of learning them from a grammar. She sandwiches in many entertaining pictures of life and people in the lands where she travels, and even allows herself occasionally to garnish her narrative with facts of history.

These travel chapters had magazine publication some years ago, but the final section is new. Therein Penelope tells of her husband, her home, and her three babies, contriving to endow them in quoted conversations with characters and temperaments. There are outlines, too, of the romances that hovered about the heads of Francesca and Salemina, her former companions in travel, and led them into matrimony and the settled life. There is a hint, too, that some of these days Penelope, "Himself," and the babies will make a "progress" of their own and send news to her readers of the lives and homes of her two friends.

THE NURSE'S STORY

THE NURSE'S STORY. By Adele Blanesa. Illustrated by M. Leone Bracker. Indianapolis: The Bobbs Merrill Company. $1.25.

The heroine in this novel tells her own story, in which the horrors of war are intermingled with a thread of romance, and love is born and wins his way while cannon rage and men are made over from the things that raging leaves them into the semblance, once more, of human beings. She is an American girl from the South, and of mingled French and creole blood. At the beginning of the war she goes to France as a Red Cross nurse and is assigned to duty at a field hospital. The narrative is told in a simple, matter-of-fact style, with revolting details omitted and without any attempt to play upon the reader's emotions through the piteous, the tragic or the horrible nature of the scenes in which most of its action is laid. Whatever may be the identity of the author, the point of view of a war nurse is maintained with skill and consistency throughout the story. The incidents, too, are deftly contrived to develop the love story which forms the centre of its interest and to concentrate gradually and increasingly upon it the reader's attention.

Much of the nurse's time during the six months or more through which the story slips is spent at the field hospital to which she is first sent and in which, in the course of her duties, she saves by her care and determination the life of the desperately wounded English officer of high station whom she had met on her voyage across the Atlantic. But presently the place is captured by the Germans, and both she and the officer are removed to a hospital inside the German ranks, where she continues her service as a nurse. Before long she is forced to go as a spy across the English lines to locate certain hidden batteries for the German aeroplanes circling above. To carry out the scheme she evolves when this service is imposed upon her entails some complication of plot, and much exciting incident. But she wins through in safety, and the love affair between her and the English officer comes to its duly happy ending.

The bulk of the story is made up of the things the nurse sees and does and hears and learns from her vantage ground of observation as a nurse, almost upon the firing line, whose duties bring her into attendance upon both officers and men of both sides of the conflict. All this is told skillfully and with animation, and reads very much as if it might have been taken from the actual experience of a real nurse. The accounts of conversations, both English and German, that she hears or takes part in are full of revealing glimpses. There, for instance, was the Prussian Lieutenant who admitted some German atrocities, but laid the blame for them at the door of the Bavarians, who, he said, were "an obviously inferior people." And in the German prison camp there were German grammars and dictionaries, sold to the English prisoners at 6 cents each, in the hope, the head surgeon told her, that study of the language would lead to a better feeling toward the Germans. A realistic incident in the French hospital tells of the visit of a French woman to her wounded husband and of her attempt to win his forgiveness because of the German baby that was about to be born to her, and of his implacable attitude, in which he was upheld by the other men in the ward.

THE SEA-HAWK

THE SEA-HAWK. By Rafael Sabatini. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Company. $1.25.

Whoever likes a strong, old-fashioned tale of elemental passions and daredevil fearlessness will find entertainment in this lively story of Queen Elizabeth's time which tells how it happened that a Cornish gentleman, apparently destined for a contented life upon his estate, became instead a follower of Mohammed and a corsair of Algiers, a pirate of such evil fame that he was known far and wide as "the Sea-Hawk," and by what parlous events it finally came about that he was able to return to his own country, wedded at last to the fair lady of his heart. Sir Oliver Tressilian was, indeed, from the start a man of giant strength, of high courage and quick temper, though of such keen intelligence that he could check and control his anger when he thought it best, and these qualities helped him to win early and remarkable success when he set forth to harry the commerce of the Mediterranean. And they, as well as the deep sense of injury in his heart, had been fostered by his six months' service as a galley slave chained to his seat. His half-brother was the cause of it all, a fair and gentle lad much loved by every one, but a coward, and having such fear in his heart lest it should be known that he had committed a murder that in selfish terror he aided the suspicion that was settling upon Sir Oliver, and then had him kidnapped and carried off to sea so that it might appear as if he had fled from justice.

Much of the story is concerned with Sir Oliver's exploits and threatening and befalling fates while he scourges the Mediterranean and looks for opportunities to revenge himself upon the ships of Christian Spain for all that he had suffered when chained to one of her galleys. But of all his reckless enterprises, the most desperate and daredevilish is that in which the Sea-Hawk sails far afield and swoops down upon his Cornish coast, leaves the wedding guests in chains, and carries off to Algiers his false-hearted brother and the fair lady, once his own love, about to become his brother's bride. And afterward happen, in consequence, some of the most fearsome events of his whole strenuous career.

It is a well-told tale, barring many marks of carelessness in the manner of its writing. Its plot is of workmanlike construction, and all its nearly 400 pages are crammed with action that develops consistently from foregoing situations. And also, although it is primarily a story of action, and not of character portrayal, Sir Oliver, the Sea-Hawk, is made to stand out clearly before the reader's eyes very much alive and every inch of him a man, and a very likable man, too, notwithstanding some of his vengeful and high-handed deeds.

THE BREAKING POINT

THE BREAKING POINT. By Annie Austin Flint. New York: Broadway Publishing Company. $1.50.

It was inevitable that the daughter of Dr. Austin Flint should choose such a subject as "ambulatory automatism" to write about, but the unexpected is that she should have novelised the condition, and in so dramatic a fashion that the reader would never suspect, were it not from the preface, that he is following a case "well authenticated in the annals of psychiatry." For Miss Flint's book is a real story, thrilling and human. Curiously enough, George Savidge, the normal, more or less ordinary young man, is not by one-half so real as his other self, the Emil Kreppel, who, with absolutely no knowledge of his past or even of the English language, turns up to become a waiter in a hot, crowded, little German restaurant. The character sketching here is unusually sympathetic, and in the depiction of Rosa Klein, later Rosa Kreppel, the author touches some truly high spots. For the story is, after all, not the story of its hero; it is the story of a big-limbed, fresh-faced, wholesome creature of a woman confronted with the almost impossible task of realizing that the man to whom she was married is dead, although he stands before her in the flesh. Probably Miss Flint did not intend the emphasis to be placed on Rosa Klein to the extent of overshadowing her difficult hero, but it is the tragedy of the whole-souled German girl which will most vividly impress itself upon the reader's memory. There will be many who will look forward to further work from Miss Flint's pen.

Mediæval Rome

A volume prepared by C. R. Morey and entitled "Lost Mosaics and Frescoes of Rome of the Mediæval Period" is published as one of the Princeton University's monographs in art and archæology. It contains reproductions or drawings in the collection of Cassiano dal Pozzo, now in the Royal Library at Windsor Castle. The drawings Mr. Morey has selected for publication are copies of mosaics and frescoes which once decorated churches in Rome, but are now destroyed or greatly damaged. (Princeton University Press. $2.)

THE COST OF LIVING

THE COST OF LIVING. By Walter E. Clark, Professor and Head of the Department of Political Science in the College of the City of New York. National Social Science Series. Chicago: A. C. McClurg & Co. 50 cents.

THE HIGH COST OF LIVING. By G. H. Gerber. New York: The New York Book Company.

A book by Professor Walter E. Clark of the College of the City of New York, entitled "The Cost of Living," will interest anybody who is seeking the causes of the high prices he has to pay for the necessaries of life, and wondering whether there is a way of halting the steady upward movement of household expenses. Not everybody who reads Professor Clark's book will accept all of his conclusions, but nearly everybody will admit he has made an important contribution to the literature of a perplexing subject.

In the course of his discussion, Professor Clark takes up one by one the alleged causes of expensive living—exhaustion of natural resources, increasing population, retailers' big profits and short weight, adulteration, cold storage, labor unions, excessive transportation rates, tariff, trusts, speculation, extravagance and waste, rising standard of living, increasing gold supply; he practically eliminates all except the first and last of these influences, rating them as unimportant factors. An increasing gold supply seems to him to be the great cause of the advance in the cost of living. As he puts it:

> The increasing gold supply, energized by perfected exchange machinery in its full price effects, appears, with rough approximation, to account for the general price-rise of the past eighteen years in the United States.

A check in the increase of gold production Professor Clark believes will halt the rise of prices; he already sees signs that the check is being applied. He does not think it would be the part of wisdom to make use of any artificial method of interfering with price tendencies. It is yet to be demonstrated, he says, that generally rising prices cause more harm than good.

Among those who will dissent from the views expressed by Professor Clark we may certainly mention G. H. Gerber, author of "The High Cost of Living." His explanation of advanced and advancing prices differs in every respect from that set down by Professor Clark. Mr. Gerber finds the seat of our trouble in our labor and legislative policies; his remedy is an abandonment of these policies and the adoption in their stead of policies "in harmony with the fundamental principles of human existence." Mr. Gerber does not appear to be disturbed in the least by what is called the overproduction of gold.

Born of all the great forces which are giving a glad new life and reality to modern fiction is the new realistic masterpiece,

QUERIES AND ANSWERS FROM TIMES READERS

COMMUNICATIONS for these columns should be addressed to the Editor of Queries and Answers, New York Times Review of Books. They should be written on only one side of the paper and must contain the name and address of the writer. If the inquirer prefers, initials only will be printed with the communication.

ANSWERS BY THE EDITOR

M. I. GRAY.—Will you kindly inform me of the value of a "New England Primer" published in 1825 by Holbrook & Fessenden, Brattleboro? also of a volume entitled "Works of the Late Dr. Benjamin Franklin," consisting of his life, written by himself, together with essays, humorous, moral and literary, chiefly in the manner of The Spectator; a second American edition printed by Samuel Campbell in 1794?

The "Primer" is worth about $5. The Franklin book's value is about the same.

A. B. C.—Can you tell me the author of the verses entitled "A Woman's Question"? I was told it was by Elizabeth Barrett Browning, but cannot find it credited to her. It commences:

Do you know you have asked for the coolest thing
Ever made by the hand above?
A woman's heart and a woman's life,
And a woman's wonderful love?

The author of the poem is Lena Lathrop. It is printed in "My Recitations," by Cora Urquhart Potter, and published by J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia.

C. M. E.—Can you tell me where I can obtain a copy of "Jack Hall," a boy's book, by Robert Grant, also a charming story called "A Sea Change"? I do not remember the author of the latter, but I know it was a woman and her first name was Flora.

"Jack Hall," by Robert Grant, is published at $1.25 by Charles Scribner's Sons. "A Sea Change," by Flora Louise Lugard, is published at $1 by Little, Brown & Co. of Boston, Mass.

ANSWERS FROM READERS

FLORENCE L. WILLS.—In the issue of THE BOOK REVIEW for July 18 "E. S. P." asked for the author of a poem heading the story "Amiel." I inclose a copy of the verses, whose author is given as Harriet Esrhart Monroe. A sketch of her life and work is to be found in Volume VIII. of "Who's Who in America." The poem, which bears the title "An Encounter," is as follows:

Who cares for the burden, the night, and the rain,
And the steep, long, lonesome road,
When at last through the darkness a light shines plain,
When a voice calls hail, and a friend draws rein
With an arm for the stubborn load!

Though his way lie over the prairies green,
And mine up the sunrise hill,
Though no more in my path may his light
be seen,
And I never may travel the leagues between,
His succor aids me still.

For life is the chance of a friend or two
This side of the journey's goal.
Though the world be a desert the long night through,
Yet the gay flowers bloom and the sky
grows blue
When a soul salutes a soul.

L. B.—In reply to the request of "R. E. H." in THE BOOK REVIEW for June 27 for the poem "At End," by Louise Chandler Moulton, would say that it was printed in Harper's Monthly for June, 1885.

K. F.—It may interest "P. M." to know that the poem by Richepin quoted July 25 has been set to music by Arthur Foote, who used a translation made or given to him some years ago by Miss Caroline Hazard, former President of Wellesley College. The song remains in manuscript.

LAWRENCE.—"L. W. K.," who asked in THE REVIEW of July 18 for the author of "David in Heaven," is informed that this poem was written by F. C. Tailes, an English clergyman. The collection of his verse is called "David in Heaven and Other Poems." The publishers are Simpkin Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co. of London.

The query was answered also by C. Noel-Wilde of Vancouver, B. C.

JAMES TERRY WHITE.—The poem asked for by J. J. N. in your issue of June 27 is entitled "To Lady A. Hamilton," by Robert William Spencer, minor English poet, (1770-1834,) and grandson of the third Duke of Marlborough, chiefly remembered for his poem "Beth Gelert." The poem is as follows:

Too late I stayed—forgive the crime—
Unheeded flew the hours;
How noiseless falls the foot of time
That only reads on flowers.

And who with clear account remarks
The ebbings of his glass,
When all the sands are diamond sparks,
That dazzle as they pass?

Ah! who to sober measurement
Time's happy swiftness brings,
When birds-of-paradise have lent
Their plumage to his wings?

Information about this poem was also received from W. W. Scrugham, Yonkers, N. Y.; Maude Waldron Belknap, Newburgh, N. Y.; Mrs. Gertrude Y. Dooley, Brooklyn; E. J. Seeley, Oswego, N. Y.; George W. Lyon, Pittsburgh, Penn.; John H. Baxter, Peekskill, N. Y.; A. B. Coyle, New York; James M. Hudnut, New York; "M. C. B.," Clinton, N. Y.; Alvin McCashin, New York, and Mrs. A. E. Hooper, East Orange, N. J.

LOUELLA D. EVERETT.—The poem for which "S. C. F." asked in THE BOOK REVIEW of July 4 is "Wayfarers," by Margaret E. Sangster. It is also known as "We Two Are Going Home."

Mrs. C. H. POOL.—In reply to the query of "Mrs. A. R. M." in THE BOOK REVIEW of July 18, would say that I have a copy of the "Vocalist," used in P. S. No. 23 about twenty years ago, containing the two songs mentioned. The book is edited by James E. Ryan and copyrighted 1885 by A. S. Barnes & Co., New York and Chicago. The book can be obtained from Charles H. Ditson & Co., 8 East Thirty-fourth Street, New York.

J. D. R.—The poem entitled "The Little Church Around the Corner," for which Sackett M. Barclay inquired in your issue of July 18, was written by Albert Edmund Lancaster on the occasion of Rev. Dr. Sabine's refusal to permit the funeral services of George Holland, a veteran actor, at his church. I inclose a copy of the poem.

The poem is too long for our space, and a copy has been mailed to the querist. Information about the verses has also been received from Fred. J. Davis, Owego, N. Y.; M. K. Hewitt, Hackensack, N. J.; L. C. Girvan, Glen Ridge, N. J.; Elizabeth A. Rounds, Shelton, Conn.; Miss M. E. Baxter, Cornwall-on-Hudson, N. Y., and S. C. Baker, Elizabeth, N. J.

ALMIRA GIFFORD.—I am inclosing a copy of the verses requested by "A. A. S." in the issue of July 25. I have given the author's name, but I do not know where they were first published.

THE GOD OF THE MEN WHO DO THINGS.

Gerardus Post Herrick.

The cause is all and the triumph naught
To the God of the men who do things;
He scorns the "Don't" and leaves the "Ought,"
The God of the men who do things.
He has one motive and only one,
He loves things doing and loves things done.
As all His battles are fought and won,
This God of the men who do things.

He knows high purpose, He works things out,
The God of the men who do things.
Though the lazy lie and the righteous scout,
The God of the men who do things.
He cares not a whit for the common mould,
He burns the dross to get the gold,
He cannot be bought, He cannot be sold,
The God of the men who do things.

He hates things weak, He loves things strong,
The God of the men who do things;
In soul or body, in right or wrong,
This God of the men who do things.
He knows there is hope for the men who try,
He sees them fail and He sees them die,
For they will win to Him by and by,
The God of the men who do things.

HILA THOMPSON.—The lines quoted by H. F. Krause in THE BOOK REVIEW of July 25 are from the poem, "The Things That Count," and the author is Clarence Urmy. The poem is as follows:

Not what we have, but what we use;
Not what we see, but what we choose—
These are the things that mar or bless
The sum of human happiness.

The things near by, not things afar;
Not what we seem, but what we are—
These are the things that make or break,
That give the heart its joy or ache.

Not what seems fair, but what is true;
Not what we dream, but good we do—
These are the things that shine like gems,
Like stars in Fortune's diadems.

Not as we take, but as we give,
Not as we pray, but as we live—
These are the things that make for peace,
Both now and after Time shall cease.

ANNE MACDONALD HAWLEY.—Some time ago I cut the query of L. W. Kearn from THE TIMES, and on leaving New York for the Summer carried it with me, hoping by looking through songbooks and asking others to get the words complete. Just yesterday I received a letter from a brother, who is blessed with a good memory, sending the song and saying he learned it as a small boy from a songbook used in the grades. May I ask you to publish it in your next issue? And I do hope that L. W. Kearn will see it and rejoice, as I did, to find it, for we all loved the song.

TWILIGHT.

I.

Twilight is stealing over the sea,
Shadows gray on land and lea,
Borne on the night wind's voices of yore
Come from the far off shore.

Chorus.

Far away beyond the starlit skies,
Where the lovelight never, never dies,
Gleameth a mansion filled with delight,
Sweet, happy home so bright.

II.

Voices of loved ones, songs of the past,
Still linger round me, while life shall last.
Lonely I wander, sadly I roam,
Seeking that far off home.

Chorus.

ELIZABETH CORNICK.—In a recent issue of your paper a request appeared for a book entitled "Pilgrims of Walsingham." I have a copy which has been in my possession for more than sixty years, but it is in good condition.

JOHN B. DAY.—In relation to the query of "J. N. L." with reference to the book "Guy Livingstone," would say that, if my memory is not at fault, I read the book as early as 1861. It was published by Harper & Bros. in 1858 in their Library of Select Novels. There was also "Brakespeare," by the same author, and I had read several novels by him prior to that year. They gave the author's name as George Lawrence. The Library of Select Novels antedated by many years the Franklin Square Library.

L. L. B.—"J. M." may find the passage asked for in the issue of July 11 in Emerson's essay on "Beauty."

Give me health and a day and I will make the pomp of Emperors ridiculous.
The dawn is my Assyria; the sunset and moonrise my Paphos and unimaginable realms of faerie; broad noon shall be my England of the senses and the understanding; the night shall be my Germany, of mystic philosophy and dreams.

APPEALS TO READERS

ELOISE WILLIS.—Will some reader tell me the author of the following lines and give the entire poem from which they are quoted?

The moon made thy lips fade, beloved;
The wind made thy bosom chill;
The night air shed on thy dear head
Its frozen dew, and thou didst lie
Where the bitter breath of the naked sky
Might visit thee at will.

RICHARD J. TAYLOR.—Could any of your readers inform me where I can find a recitation the title or first line of which is "If I could live my life over again"?

MORTON WATKINS.—Will some reader give me the author of these lines:

Each slew the other, and himself was slain,
Life living upon death,
The fair show veiled one vast, grim conspiracy, of mutual murder, from worm to man,
Who kills his fellow-man.

A. M.—Can any of your readers tell me where I may find a poem containing these lines:

When the bread is brought
The soup is cold.
And everything comes too late, too late.

D. J. W.—Can any of your readers give me the name and author of a poem of which I can only recall the following line:

Home with its banners tattered and torn.

J. H.—Will some reader kindly give me the name and author of the poem in which these lines are found:

Life's a short Summer, man a flower;
He dies. Alas, how soon he dies!

HELEN F. DUCEY.—Can some reader discover for me to what poem or hymn belong the following verses:

Then, leaving all our sorrows
With the One divinely strong,
Forget that we bore the burden
And carry away the song.

EDWARD WALL.—When I was a boy at school I remember reading in the reading books in England a poem which began with the lines:

When twilight's gay and pensive hour
Breathes the low breeze and shuts the flower.

Can any of your readers tell me who wrote the poem and where it can be found?

R. D. H.—Can any of your readers give the name of the author of the following lines:

Force rules the world, still;
Has ruled it, will rule it;
Meekness is weakness;
Strength is triumphant;
Over the whole earth
Still it is Thor's day.

F. W. C.—Can any of your readers give the authorship of the following lines and in what poem they appear?

Loud o'er my head the awful thunders roll,
The vivid lightnings flash from pole to pole.

A. E. B.—Will some reader kindly let me know where to find the poem quoted by Henry Cabot Lodge at opening of Widener Library, of which the following is a part:

Oh, let me leave the plains behind,
And let me leave the vales below;
Into the highlands of the mind,
Into the mountains let me go.

Here are the heights, crest upon crest,
With Himalayan dews impearled;
And I will watch from Everest
The long heave of the surging world.

Mrs. R. F. BAYLISS.—Can some reader tell me who is the author of a short poem beginning:

All along the white chalk coast
The mists lift clear, and ending

The first time I loved you
Was when I turned away.

CARL RICHARDS.—Can any of your readers tell who is the author of the following lines and in what book they occur?

The dear man holds honor far more precious than dear life.

M. C. H.—Can any reader give the author's name of the following, and the end of the poem?

Oh, little home with windows wide,
A-looking towards the lea!
How have you come, why did you come
To mean so much to me?

M. C. S.—Will some reader enlighten me as to the poem in which the following lines occur, and name the author?

Oh, silver trumpets, be ye lifted up
And cry to the great race that is to come!
Long-throated swans, amid the waves of time,
Sing loudly far beyond the walls of the world.
It waits, and it may hear and come to us.

A Clergyman's Confession

In an anonymous volume, entitled "Confessions of a Clergyman," the author "unpacks his soul in public." "In these 'Confessions,'" he says, "I take the layman behind the scenes with us parsons and show him some of the difficulties that often tempt us to forsake the pulpit for the greater freedom of a business career. In doing so, I have three objects—a better church, a better churchgoer, a better clergyman." Execution of the author's purpose has resulted in a clever, useful, and thoroughly enjoyable book. (McBride, Nast & Co. $1.50.)

Gustavus Conyngham

A bit of naval history of which Americans are justly proud is impressively set forth in Volume VI. of the publications of the Naval History Society which contains "Letters and Papers Relating to the Cruises of Gustavus Conyngham, a Captain in the Continental Navy, 1777-1779." The story of Captain Conyngham's brilliant achievements as a destroyer of British commerce is better told in this volume than in any other publication; it was prepared under the editorial direction of Robert Wilden Neeser, Secretary and Treasurer of the Naval History Society.

THE COMING SEASON IN LITERATURE

Books of Fiction by Well-Known Writers Promised for the Fall—What Authors and Publishers Are Doing

A NEW historical romance of love and adventure by Mary Johnston will be among the Fall publications of Houghton Mifflin Company. It will be entitled "The Fortunes of Garin," and will have for its scene Southern France in the time of the Crusades.

Harpers have ready for immediate publication Zane Grey's new novel, "The Rainbow Trail," a tale of adventure in the author's stirring and forceful style staged in his favorite Southwest. It reveals the outcome of some of the important incidents in his previous "Riders of the Purple Sage."

Early in September the Harpers will publish a new novel by Will N. Harben, whose studies of life in Georgia are well known for their local color. It will be called "The Inner Law." "The Trail of the Hawk," by Sinclair Lewis, whose "Our Mr. Wrenn" attracted attention last year, will be another September novel to be brought out by this house.

Owen Johnson is the author of "Making Money," which the Frederick A. Stokes Company will publish in September. The story recounts the varying success of four young college men who come to New York hoping to make their fortunes, each one choosing a different field from the others, and deals with the complications of love and business in which they become entangled.

"Off Sandy Hook" is the title of a book of short stories by Richard Dehan, which the Stokes Company promises for next month. The stories are said to mingle ingenious bits of fancy with humor and with touches of irony and pathos.

"Naval Occasions," which has been much read and discussed in England, is ready for immediate publication in this country by the Houghton Mifflin Company. The book presents a series of pictures of the life at sea of the officers and men of the British Navy. It was written before the outbreak of the war. The personality of the author, who is an officer in the navy, and is, therefore, compelled to write under a pen name, is concealed under the pseudonym, "Bartimeus."

A book which will bring vividly before a new generation some of the events of our civil war will be published next month by the Houghton Mifflin Company. It is by Clifton Johnson and bears the title, "Battleground Adventures." The author made a trip over the scenes of some of the great battles of that war and talked with survivors among the local inhabitants who could tell him about their own observations and experiences. Bull Run is described by a woman who lived close to the line of battle, and Fredericksburg by a man whom the Union soldiers called then "the little rebel." The author gathered his material from all sorts of people, black and white, rich and poor.

"Feminism in Germany and Scandinavia," by Katharine Anthony, will be a September publication of the Holts. It will give a full and concrete account of what the leaders of the woman movement in Germany and the three northern kingdoms are attempting and have achieved. The greater part of the book will deal with the movement for maternity protection, recounting its history and showing what it has done. One chapter will summarize the radical measures adopted by Norway last Spring concerning the problem of the illegitimate child. State maternity insurance in Germany also receives attention, as does also the influence of feminism upon all phases of woman's life in Middle Europe.

Fred Lewis Pattee, Professor of English in the Pennsylvania State College, is the author of "A History of American Literature Since 1870," which the Century Company will bring out in the Autumn. It will consider all the significant American literary figures of the last forty years, including many authors still living. The author is said to have chosen 1870 as the starting point of his history because he thinks that only then, with the consolidation of national sentiment following the civil war, did a national literature really begin.

In their Heroes of All Time Series the Stokes Company will this month bring out "William the Silent," by Agnes M. Miall, and "Mohammed," by Edith Holland. In their Myth Series will come also "Hero Tales and Legends of the Rhine," by Lewis Spence.

Within the next week or two Harper & Brothers will add two more volumes, "Christian Science" and "Sketches New and Old," to their new limp leather, thin paper edition of Mark Twain's writings, which is eventually to include all of his works.

Edward Step's "The Marvels of Insect Life" will be published toward the end of this month by McBride, Nast & Co. It will have an introduction by Raymond L. Ditmars of Bronx Zoological Park, and it is said to have some very interesting pictorial features, as it will be profusely illustrated with colored plates and will have in addition more than 600 other illustrations made from photographs and artists' drawings from life. The author has been engaged for many years in making these photographic studies and observations of insect life in all parts of the world. The descriptions of insects at home, in society, at work and at war are written in untechnical language.

The Yale University Press will have ready shortly "The Liberty of Citizenship," by the Hon. Samuel W. McCall, whose main theme is the duty of the citizen to aid in checking the modern tendency to allow laws to encroach upon liberty.

Another early publication from the Yale University Press will be "Some Christian Convictions," by the Rev. Henry Sloane Coffin, a series of lectures planned to bring to thoughtful men and women desiring an intellectual basis for their religious beliefs, the results of the study of scholars upon the essential Christian doctrines.

Duffield & Co. have in preparation a Christmas book, with illustrations in full color, by Jessie Willcox Smith, to be called "When Christmas Comes Around."

Doubleday, Page & Co. are publishing this week a new edition, revised and printed from new plates, of Gene Stratton-Porter's first book, "The Song of the Cardinal," which attracted so much attention as a distinctive piece of nature study that it has been through many editions. An interesting brochure concerning Mrs. Porter's work and her methods of nature study has been prepared by this house and is ready for free distribution. The account is mainly in her own words and contains many anecdotes of adventures in fields and swamps and of all-night work over her photographs.

MARY ROBERTS RINEHART, who is spending part of the Summer at Eaton's Ranch, Wyoming, recently attended a big Indian pow-wow held in Cutbank Canyon, Montana, where she was formally adopted into the Blackfeet tribe of Indians and given the name of Pitamakan, (Running Eagle,) after the famous woman warrior of that tribe. The ceremony, presided over by Chief Tail Feathers, an old-time warrior, assisted by half a dozen other braves, was sealed by valuable gifts, including some old tribal possessions and was followed by a number of tribal dances.

Zane Grey has been forbidden the Mormon country by authorities of the Mormon Church, who have notified him in direct manner that there is a price upon his head because of the frankness of his writings.

Rudyard Kipling will have in the September Century a story called "Mary Postgate," in which the central figure is said to epitomize the genius of the nation.

Susan Glaspell's last novel, "Fidelity," is being published in Australia by George Robertson & Co.

Richard Matthews Hallett, author of that sea story of combined romance and realism, "The Lady Act," has visited in search of adventure almost every country on the face of the earth, usually by preference working his way because, he says, "it isn't only fun, it's real living."

Norman Angell will address the Unity Forum of Montclair, N. J., in October on the subject, "America and the World Crisis."

Kate Douglas Wiggin, who is now at her Summer home at Hollis, Me., busy with helping in the preparations for the annual fair at that place, is listed among the very few American women who earn $50,000 a year.

Rupert Hughes says that he based upon actual fact the keystone situation in "Empty Pockets," in which a captive is made by the clutching of a dying man's hands, and that he also had the text of the incident revised by a famous physician, who assured him that it was scientifically correct.

HABITS THAT HANDICAP

"Habits That Handicap," by Charles B. Towns, promised for early publication by the Century Company, says, among many other statistics proving the surprising extent of the domination in this country of habit-forming drugs, that our annual per capita consumption of opium is now far greater than that of China and our total consumption as great as that of all Europe put together. Fourteen years ago Mr. Towns made his first experiments in the cure of drug habits, and has devoted his life ever since to that form of serving his fellows. His book tells of his travels and his work in that line. He went to China when the Government of that nation instituted its crusade against opium and established four hospitals in which he treated successfully 4,000 opium addicts. Afterward he traveled and investigated conditions in all the large cities of Europe. Eminent physicians have tested and commended his treatment, and he is at present conducting a clinic for a national committee working on the subject of prison reform. A recent news item concerning his work told of the success with which he had treated a number of drug users sent to him by Henry Ford, the automobile manufacturer. In his book he presents the whole subject of addiction to habit-forming drugs in its wide and various ramifications, recounts the many ways in which such habits are formed, points out the interrelations between tobacco, alcohol and drugs, and the relation they all bear to insanity. He sets forth his ideas of what should be done by city, State, and national authorities to remedy the existing situation. The book has an introduction by Dr. Richard C. Cabot of Boston and an appendix by Dr. Alexander Lambert of the Medical Faculty of Cornell University.

CURRENT BOOKS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

Publications That Use Various Themes to Interest and Instruct

THERE is something brand new for the very little people in little books which they can illustrate themselves. They have done that in one way or another before, but this is by way of poster stamps, and the eight little volumes of the "Stampkraft" set will fill every child's heart with joy. The name gives the secret away, for the illustrating is done with stamps having upon them gay little pictures representing different familiar stories and rhymes.

The books are tiny, a few inches square, very thin, with twelve pages of type, opposite each of which is the setting for the poster stamp picture. The stamps, ready for use, are to be found on the inside of the front cover, held in place by a bit of transparent paper. Pull open the paper and there is a puzzle, but not too much of one, for each poster picture must go to the story to which it belongs or the entire set will be wrong.

The bindings, all different, are of paper-covered boards, each with a stamp for an illustration. Three little books have "Mother Goose Rhymes," there is one "Alice in Wonderland," Andersen's and Grimm's "Fairy Tales"; an animal book with "Twelve Wild Animals" to be illustrated, and there is the Bible story of "Joseph and His Brethren." The books are 10 cents apiece, 60 cents for the set. (United Art Publishing Company.)

In "Billy Whiskers on the Mississippi," by Frances Trego Montgomery, (Saalfield Publishing Company) are the many exciting adventures always to be found in the Billy Whiskers books. Billy's little daughter Day has a trip on an aeroplane, an exciting event for a goat. A nice little long-haired kitten tries to go off in search of adventures with an ordinary short-haired cat named Buttons, but does not succeed, and the story winds up with a birthday party for Billy and a family reunion on the farm.

War books are becoming numerous, and a modern one, "The Defense of Paris," is by Captain Allan Grant, the author of "A Cadet in Belgium," (George H. Doran Company, 60 cents.) This is another wonder story, for Ralph and François accomplish remarkable feats of skill, bravery, and endurance. They have a taste of a "Jack Johnson," one of the enormous German shells, which falls near enough to shake them up thoroughly, tear the guns from their arms, and knock them around in the dirt from the force of the concussion, without seriously injuring them. The boys are hidden for a time in the treasure vault of an old church; a Belgium woman conceals them in a smuggler's chamber in the cellar of her house; the youngsters catch a German spy working the Morse code with the hands of a clock in a French village, and after marvelous adventures and escapes and valuable service rendered to and recognized by the chief officers of the allied armies, they are going to Paris at the close of the book for a few days' rest and recuperation, after which they are to hurry back, for as the General tells them: "There are big events under way."

"Between the Lines in France," by Franklin T. Ames, (Dodd, Mead & Co., $1,) is another kind of war book, the second by its author. A brother and sister, Tom and Lucille Maillard, start on an automobile tour through the north of France and are caught by the war in a little French village. The automobile is taken by the French army. Uncle Alvin, with whom they are traveling, is laid up in the hospital, and the children live through exciting times during the first few days of a big battle as they are "between the lines." Accurate information concerning the war and modern warfare is given in the story.

A smaller book is "When I Was a Boy in Belgium," by Robert Jonckheere, (Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Company, 75 cents.) Mr. Jonckheere is a Belgian refugee, a man of culture with a knowledge of several languages. At the opening of the war he was a prosperous manufacturer in the village of Contich, situated between Antwerp and Malines. Now, with his money and business gone, his family separated, he has come to America to begin life anew. Interested in his graphic accounts of the war, told in interviews in the papers, the publishers of the book asked Mr. Jonckheere to write the story of his own childhood, which he has done in English. Beginning with his life as a boy the book is brought up to date, the last chapters telling of the beginning of the present war and the flight of the refugees from their homes. The illustrations are from photographs, the last showing the refugees on the quays at Antwerp in their flight from the city bombarded by the Germans.

Six jolly books by Albert Bigelow Paine, with jolly pictures by J. M. Conde, are to be found in the latest edition of the "Hollow Tree Stories," (Harper Brothers. 50 cents each.) "Making Up with Mr. Dog," "Mr. Rabbit's Big Dinner," "When Jack Rabbit Was a Little Boy." They all include many little stories that the little people like.

A NEW BOOK
By the author of "In the Vanguard"
THE MIGHTY AND THE LOWLY
By KATRINA TRASK
As "In the Vanguard" was a stirring plea for universal peace, so "The Mighty and the Lowly" is a plea for social reform through a right understanding of the teaching of Jesus.
Writing with her accustomed vigor and charm, Mrs. Trask combats the idea that Christ was set against any particular class—rich or poor.
The theme is built around actual events in the life of Jesus, and the reader will find his interest stirred by the dramatic power of the book as well as by its argument.

STRENUOUS LIFE AT PLATTSBURG BUSINESS MEN'S CAMP

Real Military Discipline and Plenty of Hard Work Provided by Army Mentors for Mayor Mitchel and His Khaki-Clad Comrades—"Early to Bed and Early to Rise" Rigidly Enforced—General Wood Praises Work of Citizen-Soldiers.

Special to The New York Times.

UNITED STATES MILITARY INSTRUCTION CAMP, near Plattsburg Barracks, N. Y., Aug. 14.—Never before in the history of the United States has there been organized a camp for military instruction like this one on the western shore of Lake Champlain, south of Plattsburg Barracks. There have been camps before, but this is the first whose membership is limited to men of affairs, bankers, lawyers, doctors, diplomats, artists, newspapermen, brokers, merchants, police officers, preachers, and college professors in the United States. In the words of Major Gen. Leonard Wood there is every reason to believe that this camp will be memorable as the most successful of the kind ever held in this or any other country.

The idea originated with General Wood, and the success of the undertaking has surpassed his most enthusiastic anticipations. Had only 500 men responded to the call General Wood and the officers of the army associated with him would have been more than satisfied, but if anybody had said that more than 1,200 would "join the colors" not an officer in the army would have believed it.

That, however, is exactly what has happened. In the tented city on the Federal reservation there is assembled as representative a body of American citizens as it would be possible to get together. Among them are the Mayor of the greatest city in the Union, a former Secretary of State and Ambassador to France, an ex-Lieutenant Governor of New York, Professors from the leading universities and colleges of the country, members of some of the biggest banking houses in the United States, physicians of the highest standing, merchants whose names are household words, artists, Attachés of American Legations in foreign lands, famous polo players, football stars, baseball men, tennis players, champion track men, and yachtsmen, among the latter the owner of the cup challenger Vanitie.

The city of tents is on Federal property, on a great open green plain, the eastern edge of which is washed by the waters of Lake Champlain. The field reminds the golf enthusiast of the links of some famous country club. To the east and beyond Lake Champlain the Green Mountains of Vermont are always visible, and to the west can be seen the foothills of the Adirondacks. Within throwing distance flows the beautiful Saranac River, and two miles to the north is the little City of Plattsburg, the capital of Clinton County.

The northern boundary of the camp is a forest of great oaks and other trees. On the edge of this forest, and facing the camp, stands a lone tent, a big, conical one, in front of which the Stars and Stripes snap in the breeze. This is the camp home of Major Gen. Wood. A low rail fence separates his quarters from the camp proper.

Every afternoon he can be seen leaning on the top rail, watching the drilling of the big civilian regiment. Three days ago they were drilling in awkward squads and platoons. Today, four days after the organization of the camp, they are drilling as companies. In two days more they will start work in battalion formations, and by the end of the week they will be going at it as a regiment.

To the south of the wooded area are sixteen parallel rows of conical tents, where the enlisted men of the camp live, such as, for instance, Private John Purroy Mitchel, Mayor of New York; Corporal Robert Bacon, ex-Secretary of State and former Ambassador to France; Private E. A. Allen, Professor in the University of Pennsylvania; Private Alexander Smith Cochran, owner of the yacht Vanitie; Corporal "Dick" Little, the Chicago humorist; Corporal Percy D. Haughton, head football coach at Harvard; Private Norman Cabot, Harvard football star; Private Lewis Stuyvesant Chanler, former Lieutenant Governor of New York; Private Willard D. Straight of J. P. Morgan & Co.; Private H. H. Curran, majority leader in the New York Board of Aldermen; Private Philip Roosevelt, who shares with Corporal Little the distinction of being one of the tallest men in camp; Corporal Edward P. Hughes, Captain of Police in New York; Private George Wharton Pepper of Philadelphia, and scores upon scores of others just as well or almost as well known.

The companies run from A to H and are divided into two battalions of about 600 men each, commanded by an officer of the regular army, with another officer of regulars as second in command.

At the southern end of each company street, and standing so as to face down the middle of it, is the tent of the commanding officer of the company. Beyond the last row of tents, and running parallel with it, on the lake side of the camp, is a big tent that reminds one of the side-show tents of circuses. This is the place where the men assemble in bad weather and listen to the army officers explain in everyday language the secrets of the war game.

On a line with the lecture tent, and to the south of it, are the tents of the regimental commander, the camp Adjutant, the camp Surgeons, and the officers detailed for duty as instructors in engineering, cavalry tactics, field artillery, signaling, medical and sanitation work. Beyond this is another big camp, for the regular organizations of infantry and cavalry sent here to help whip into shape the men under instruction.

The men at the camp all dress in khaki and work hard eight hours a day. They go to bed at 9 o'clock, that is, the big majority do, and the rest turn in not later than 10. They are all up at 5:45 A. M. It is drill, drill, drill, and when they are not drilling they are being instructed in the handling of rifles and ammunition, the pitching of tents, the making of the infantry pack, the use of the bayonet, and in the Swedish exercises known in the army as "waist removers."

On Monday additional instruction in equitation, field artillery, engineering, signaling, and sanitation will be added to the schedule and it is the intention to organize four full troops, or a complete squadron, of cavalry, in which will be the polo players and steeplechase riders who are here. There are more than a score of each.

The engineering work will include bridge building and bridge destruction, pontooning, and topographical work; the signal instruction will embrace wireless telegraphy, field telegraph and telephone work, wigwagging, and the proper use of the semaphore. The artillery work will be with batteries of field artillery manned by picked men from the regular service, and the medical and sanitary work will be in charge of experts in that important arm of modern army administration. Target work will also start next week.

Here is a table that indicates the strenuous life of the men of this big camp:

Captain Dorey, the young army officer commanding the camp, is senior aid on the staff of General Wood. He is from Missouri, and for the last decade has been one of the best known of the younger officers of the regular service. He is a West Pointer and a veteran of the Spanish war, the Philippine campaigns, and Vera Cruz.

Not an ounce of fat disfigures his soldierly figure. His features are classic and he is the embodiment of courtesy. He believes in discipline and in absolute justice.

Captain Dorey's tent faces Lake Champlain and is flanked on one side by the tent of Captain Gordon Johnston, the camp Adjutant, and on the other by that of Charles McK. Saltzman of the Signal Corps. The other morning the entire civilian regiment was assembled in front of Captain Dorey's tent to hear their commander tell the reason for their being there.

Dorey is not a speaker. He has made mighty few speeches in his whole life, and the one to his command was the longest.

"I am going to tell you why you are here and what we expect of you," he said, "and I want to add that after looking you all over and watching your work it looks as if you all know already exactly why you are here and what you are expected to do. To sum it all up in a nutshell, you are here so that if you are called upon to command a company of volunteers or assist in the organization of one you will know how to go about it; how to make a good start, so to speak. A finished officer is, of course, not to be made in four weeks. But a man who can teach the elementary essentials of discipline and of organization may be well trained in that period of time.

"I have been asked as to your status in relation to the regular officers. You are on the cadet status. You are prospective officers. You salute us and obey implicitly our commands. Fifteen minutes later you and I may be swapping yarns or rolling cigarettes in your tent or mine. You are gentlemen, all of you, and need no instruction as to the limits of such relationships as must exist between the officer and the soldier under him.

"There will be check roll calls at night; that is, at taps. This will preserve certain hours during which a good, healthy sleep may be had, undisturbed by late arrivals in camp, and it is in no sense a disciplinary measure. Men like you, who have given up important business and personal affairs to come here, do not need to be put under discipline. It may be necessary at any time for any of you to go to Plattsburg to get in touch by telegraph or telephone with your business affairs. In such an event there will be no difficulty if permission is asked.

"There are to be no alcoholic beverages in this camp. I think that you will agree with our idea that there should be none drunk outside of camp.

"Let us remember the rock-bottom purpose of all military regulations. Every command in the manual of arms or in the execution of other regulations goes to one principle—a man who is in a fight must not be bothered about the way the man on his right or on his left does this or that thing. We must know that all are going to do the same thing in the same way, whether it is the very best way or not.

"I have looked you all over, and I have no doubt whatsoever of the success of this camp and of the benefits to all concerned that will flow from it."

As does Captain Dorey, General Wood believes that this camp is the beginning of a movement that will grow. Next year, officers of the army on duty here say, there will be not one but three or four or perhaps even more such camps scattered about the country. Some have even predicted a total in 1916 of more than 10,000 men from business and professional walks of life.

That the fame of the camp has spread to the battle camps of the Allies is proved by a letter that was received by Captain Dorey a few days ago from an officer, supposedly an American, whose name was withheld by the recipient. This officer had received one of the advance pamphlets issued in connection with the camp, and he was so impressed that from the trenches he penned the following letter:

In France, July —.

Commanding Officer, Military Training Camp, Plattsburg, N. Y., U. S. A.:

Sir: I have just received your pamphlet on the "Military Training Camp," and although I am unable to take part in it myself I wish to say that I think it is a big step in the right direction, and I hope that it will be well supported. We are doing nothing but trench fighting out here, and I think this branch of the work should occupy an important place in your schedule. Yours sincerely, ——.

And trench work will figure in the work of this camp. In the latter part of the period battle exercises will be the feature of the business men's military work. They will work in conjunction with a full brigade of regular troops, made up of two regiments of infantry and one of cavalry.

The commissary is one of the big successes of the camp. At the head of the department is Captain Charles N. Sawyer, and under him are a score of army cooks and student cooks from the army School for Cooks, near Washington. Cleanliness and wholesomeness are the watchwords, and there is not an item of food material issued to the big kitchen forces that has not been carefully inspected by the commissary staff before it is permitted to leave the storage tents.

Beans, for instance—they are cited because they are one of the principal articles of army food—are subjected to an inspection as rigid as that of rifles and other equipment.

Here is a sample menu—that of last Tuesday:

Harry Schwartz, who has been for years one of the best "bean men" of the Third Field Artillery, has cooked in Cuba, the Philippines, and in all parts of the United States, and is an honor graduate of the School for Cooks, is one of the culinary stars at the Plattsburg camp. "Billy" Helton and Harry Papke, both from the commissary department of the coast artillery, are also there, as is Joseph Klein, assistant cook of Troop K of the Second Cavalry, who is just back from a tour of two years' cooking duty in the land of the Moros.

There has been no more interesting sight here this week than the instruction of the men in the manual of arms. The big companies, each numbering nearly 200 men, were first formed in the company streets. The regular army officers assigned as commanders and First Lieutenants lined them up first according to height, so that the tall fellows stood at the head of the company formations, the proper proportions being maintained, so that the line would gently and imperceptibly slope, so to speak, until the biggest man was at the top and the shortest at the other end of the column. At regular intervals of about eight or ten feet, and facing the civilian recruits, were picked regulars from the Thirtieth Infantry, who executed the various commands as they were given.

Company A is the one in whose first tall four Mayor Mitchel, or, as he is known here, "Private Mitchel," is one of the soldier units. Captain J. R. Kelly commands this company, with Second Lieutenant C. H. Corlett as the second in command. Last Tuesday afternoon at 1 o'clock this company was lined up in company formation for the first time. Mayor Mitchel, "Billy" Meloney, Professor Alfred R. Allen of the University of Pennsylvania, E. A. Harrison of Baltimore, and Henry F. Loomis of Reading, Penn., are among its taller members. Every one of them saw fit to "fall in" near the centre of the column.

Captain Kelly walked along the line. "Move up!" he said to the Mayor. Private Mitchel fell out and walked to a position near the head of the column. Professor Allen was next ordered to move, and the process was continued until the company was properly formed according to height.

The "model regulars" took their places facing the civilian recruits. The first thing explained was the proper position of the soldier. The men followed every word. The regular models stood at attention, living examples of the perfect execution of every word of instruction uttered by the commanding officers.

"Watch the soldier in front of you," said the officer in command.

"Keep your heads erect and squarely to the front, chin drawn in so that the axis of head and neck is vertical," added the commanders.

For ten minutes this was kept up. Captain Dorey, the camp commander, sauntered up and down the company streets, watching the progress of the instruction.

"I never saw men catch on like these fellows," he remarked.

Next the men were taught the various "rests," such as "Fall out," "Rest," "At ease," and "Parade, rest," the commands that sound sweetest in the ears of all tired soldiers. Then followed instruction in the "facings," such as "Right face" and "Left half face," followed by instruction as to the proper execution of the salute.

Next the drillmasters took the recruits into the secrets of correct marching. The "One, two, three" of the officers rang out, and, first slowly and then briskly, these lawyers and bankers and diplomats "caught on."

By noon of the second day the men had so far mastered the manual of arms that several of the companies were ordered to the drill plain. From his tent on the edge of the woods General Wood watched the work. It was a remarkable exhibition. Here were hundreds of men who a few days ago were as green, so far as the manual of arms was concerned, as the greenest "rookie." A majority of them had never before marched in column of fours, some had never even executed, before they came to this camp, the simplest of commands, such as "Order arms" and "Right shoulder arms."

And yet these men now wheeled by platoons and by companies, right about faced, "fours righted" and "fours lefted" like veterans. To cap the climax, they gave an exhibition in the manual of arms that called forth the applause of some of the best trained soldiers in the regular army of the United States.

General Wood is deeply interested in the success of this camp. He intends to spend most of the month here, keeping in close touch with everything that goes on.

"It is a wonderful success," he said a few days ago, as he watched Company D, under Captain W. L. Reed, drilling in the open space in front of Captain Dorey's headquarters. "I am sorry that we have not a dozen more such camps in all parts of the country.

"The men are as fine a body as it would be possible to get together anywhere, and I have never seen more willing, more earnest workers. The way they learn is remarkable. In two weeks they will be able to make a showing that would do credit to any regiment in the regular army or the National Guard."

HERE AND THERE IN THE WAR NEWS

FORMER Minister of War Sukhomlinoff of Russia, who recently resigned, is to be placed on trial, according to a dispatch from Petrograd, in connection with the shortage of ammunition now hampering Russian military operations. He resigned June 26, while the Austro-German advance through Galicia and Poland was in full swing.

Sir David Beatty, winner of the naval battle in the Bight of Heligoland, is now a Vice Admiral, being the youngest man who has ever held that rank in the British Navy.

The strange spectacle of people sipping drinks in cafés while heavy firing was going on only a few yards away was presented when the Russians evacuated Warsaw, according to descriptions of eyewitnesses. After abandoning the city proper the Russians crossed to the suburb of Praga on the east bank of the Vistula, blowing up the bridges behind them, and soon became engaged in lively fighting with the German vanguard. In the meantime the natives, used to war's alarms since last Fall, went about their business much as if all were normal. One eyewitness even chronicled the fact that a lady sat calmly at her window while the fight for possession of Praga was at its hottest.

The sculptor Fétu has completed the sword of honor to be presented by the French people to King Albert of Belgium. "No Thoroughfare" is the inscription on the hilt, commemorating how the King barred the way to the Germans who sought to cross his kingdom last Summer.

Following the example of the railway officials of Milan, those of Rome last week refused a bonus of $600,000 offered them by the Italian Government for extra work done in connection with the mobilization of the Italian Army. "We should feel humiliated if we did not give our toil while others give their lives to the country," they declared in a statement.

There is a movement on foot in Germany to keep Ernst Lissauer's famous "Song of Hate Against England" from getting into German schoolbooks.

Fifty German submarines have been sunk by the Allies, according to The Army and Navy Journal.

Colonel S. G. Maritz, one of the leaders of the South African rebellion against the British, who escaped after being captured last February, has been caught again by the Portuguese authorities of Angola, according to report.

Just as a dance preceded Waterloo, so it did the tragic death a few days ago of Flight Lieutenant Reginald Lord, killed fighting the Zeppelins that participated in a recent raid on England. He was dancing with his fiancée, Miss Violet Bevor, when summoned to meet the aerial invaders. Half an hour later he was dead.

London hotel rooms now have the following tacked on their walls:

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Visitors are requested to have curtains of their rooms drawn immediately any electric light is switched on, so as to prevent a glare of light being visible from the street or Embankment.

This is to deprive Zeppelins or other aerial enemies of anything that might help them in their raids.

Another incident never known in warfare until now happened the other day when a Turkish aviator dropped bombs on an Allied submarine and sank it.

The Minister of the Interior of the Grand Duchy of Baden reports that good crops will soon permit of an increase in bread portions and a decrease in prices in the German Empire. He added that the potato crop was excellent and that the Imperial Governments of Germany and Austria-Hungary were preparing measures to secure quantities of petroleum and coal stores sufficient to meet all demands at a reasonable price.

Remarkable cures of wounds are reported to have been effected in France by a new serum discovered by Drs. Leclainche and Vallée. It is described as a combination of a number of serums against different forms of bacteria. When it can be made in sufficient quantities it will be sent to the firing line, to be used preventively, as anti-tetanus serum is now used.

According to the London correspondent of the Petit Parisien, Hiram Maxim has invented a contrivance to protect soldiers from the deadly gases now used in battle. It is designed to make the gases rise and pass over the heads of those against whom they are directed.

The Russian crops will be extraordinary this year, according to advices from Russia. In Moscow a harvest 30 per cent. larger than that of last year is expected. It is also said that the reports that the crops in Poland had been damaged by the Russians during their retreat from Warsaw were greatly exaggerated.

The belief seems to prevail in Germany and Austria that the occupation of Warsaw by the Teutonic armies will be permanent. A civil administration is being organized, with Teutonic officials at its head.

Queen Amelia of Portugal has been working incognita as a trained nurse in the Third London General Hospital at Wandsworth, it was learned a few days ago. She entered as a probationer, insisting that her identity be kept secret.

Captain Percy A. Clive, Member of Parliament for Herefordshire, was seriously wounded in Flanders last week by the explosion of a mine.

The Russian Government is employing over 200,000 Teutonic prisoners on railroads, in agriculture, and in other ways, it was reported last week.

The London Daily Mail declares that thousands of cases supposed to contain ammunition for the Russian forces are found to be full of rubbish when opened at the front. This is ascribed to the activities of German agents in Russian munition factories.

A Russian lady working for the Italian Red Cross declared that she met a woman in the Dolomite country who said that her three sons had been shot before her eyes for refusing to serve against Italy in the Austrian Army.

The English language is to be substituted for German in most of the commercial schools of Russia. This step was ordered by the Minister of Finance at the request of the school authorities.

It is said that the German conquerors of Belgium are working the coal mines of that land in a reckless and wasteful manner, regardless of the future.

Italy will send 150,000 men to the Dardanelles and 500,000 to France to aid in fighting the Germans, according to Captain Victor del Sanctis of the Italian Army, who arrived in New York a few days ago to buy war supplies for the Italian Government.

French operations against the Germans in Kamerun, West Africa, are progressing favorably, according to an official statement issued by the French Ministry of the Colonies.

A colossal wooden statue of Field Marshal von Hindenburg thirty-nine feet high is to be unveiled Aug. 28 on the Siegesallee in Berlin, which is lined with statues of Kaiser Wilhelm's ancestors. Any German wishing to drive a nail into the statue may do so on payment of 1 mark, (24 cents.) It is estimated that 1,600,000 nails will be needed to cover the figure. The proceeds will go to the relief of sufferers from the war.

The magnificent library of the University of Warsaw fell into the hands of the Germans when they occupied the Polish capital. The Russians intended to remove it, but left the city too hurriedly.

Canadian casualties in the war now total 10,680. it was announced last week in Ottawa. Of these, 1,877 have been killed, 6,738 wounded, and 2,065 are missing. It was also announced that Canada has sent about 80,000 men to the front up to date.

An enraged mob demolished a "movie" theatre in Lima, Peru, because the German Directors of the place censored a war film from France.

Mrs. Alfred G. Vanderbilt, whose husband perished on the Lusitania, has had newspaper clippings concerning the sinking of the ship collected and bound for her. Her record consists of ten volumes, each containing 100 pages of clippings. She intends eventually to present the volumes to the library of Yale University.

The French Government has seized the estate of Herr Jelinek, a German millionaire, consisting mostly of real estate in Paris and the Riviera, and valued at $40,000,000.

Baron von Bleichroeder, son of the famous German banker, was killed near Warsaw on Aug. 1, according to a report from Amsterdam. Five years ago, on the occasion of his departure from New York after a stay in this country, he said: "Talk of war between Germany and England is a figment of the imagination." While here he held a position with Kissel, Kinnicutt & Co. of 37 Wall Street. At one time he was secretly engaged to the Princess Sophia of Saxe-Weimar, who committed suicide in 1913 because her father refused his consent to her marriage with Baron von Bleichroeder.

Four thousand Italian reservists living in and about Pittsburgh have applied to the Italian Vice Consulate there for transportation to Italy, wishing to join the Italian Army.

SECOND THOUGHTS ON FIRST NIGHTS

Mr. Belasco Offers a Trifle---
War Correspondence Melodramatized.

THE theatrical year of 1915-16 has begun. The theatrical notes need no longer deal in futures. The time has passed for the managers to give forth statements as to what they are going to do. The time has come for them to do it. And the material for the faithful Sunday retrospect is already at hand.

Possibly as an instinctive and wistful protest at the loss of the long vacation of yesteryear the reviewers of dramatic entertainment in these parts were wont to observe annually that no season was really under way until the carriages rolled up to the Empire for the autumnal return of John Drew. But of what use is that tried and trusted remark in a year when an actor from overseas is opening the Empire? And, anyway, what must you say when the doors of the Belasco swing wide on a sweltering 10th of August? For it was on Tuesday night of the week just past that "The Boomerang" made its first New York appearance at that theatre, and straightway established itself as an exceedingly agreeable evening's entertainment.

"The Boomerang" is lots of fun. Across its sunny humor there falls but one shadow—the inevitable regret that Mr. Belasco should waste his precious stage and his precious time on such a trifle. It is less than merely simple, for "Prunella" and "Marie-Odile" and "The Man Who Married a Dumb Wife" were simple enough. It is elementary, commonplace, and would hardly merit a second thought were it not so delightfully played.

And this is from the man who has given us some of the finest things the American stage has known in recent years. He would be hardy who ventured to support the negative of the proposition that the Belasco has provided more solid enjoyment than any other single theatre in America since it was first opened to the public. Now that is his only theatre, and even those who like to use the word "wizard" oftenest in writing a piece about Mr. Belasco are under no delusion that he has an income of more than twenty-four hours a day. So for him to stage, however nicely, an ordinary farce is a sheer waste of time.

But it requires no inspired theatrical prophet to see that serious drama will not abound in New York this season. We shall be fairly deluged with farces. Furthermore, not every manuscript that comes to Mr. Belasco's hands is an "Easiest Way" or a "Marie-Odile," and it must also be remembered that some of his most marked artistic successes have not yielded him his biggest profits. "The Phantom Rival," for example, one of the finest, most subtle, and most penetrating comedies presented in this city in many a long year, scarcely rivaled "Chin-Chin" at the box office, and a little later died in the dust of the road, which was a particularly arid thoroughfare last season. So Mr. Belasco may be pardoned if, in these parlous times, he seeks merely to amuse. And certainly "The Boomerang" is amusing.

PASSING on a few doors to the west, you find that Roi Cooper Megrue has carried the war into the theatre. Many a playwright smelleth the battle from afar and crieth, "Ha! Ha! I will write me a war play." And of all who have obeyed that impulse so far Mr. Megrue has done best. His is no more a genuine dramatic picture of the war, to be sure, than "Life" at the Manhattan was a genuine dramatic picture of life in Manhattan. For "Under Fire," which is all excitement, is sheer melodrama.

This war has been baffling the dramatists. It has left the English playwrights in a sorry plight, for their most faithful pictures of life about them as it used to be a year and a month ago must now seem curiously unreal and lacking to them. As for the war itself as a subject, it is too big. That is why in London at present you cannot witness a single play by Galsworthy, Pinero, Jones, Barrie, Davies, Chambers, or Maugham. That is one reason why "Potash and Perlmutter" and "Peg o' My Heart" run on and on over there, and why the music halls are making most of the money. Andreyev, to be sure, has sung in a monotone the sorrows of Belgium, and Stephen Phillips has attempted a panoramic revue of the war; but the great conflict is too huge, too near, too overwhelming for the perspective of serious drama. Probably we shall not have the great war play until the Captains and the Kings depart. And in the meantime, if a man feels he just must write a war play, then melodrama, with its rush and its roar, and, above all, its easy optimism, is probably the happiest medium. War and crime—these are the human activities that are naturally melodramatic, and "Under Fire" is frankly melodrama. Written about valor to the strains of martial music, Mr. Megrue's latest is a standard war play which happens to use the present war as its background. Much of it has been cleverly done, and "Under Fire" has all the earmarks of a popular success.

With all of "Under Cover" and part of "It Pays to Advertise" to his credit there was a disposition last season to speak of Roi Megrue as "the boy with two plays on Broadway" and generally to give forth the impression that he woke up one morning to find himself a playwright. But such craftsmanship in the making of popular plays as he has already displayed is not learned overnight. R. C. Megrue is to be carefully distinguished from E. E. Reizenstein. "Under Fire" is the product of a long apprenticeship.

May Irwin's New Comedy.

May Irwin will return to Broadway a week from tomorrow in a new comedy entitled "No. 13 Washington Square," based on Leroy Scott's novel of that title. William Collier is staging the piece and the company he is rehearsing includes Ffolliet Paget, John Junior, Charles Abbe, Charlotte Carter, Clara Blandick, and Leonard Hollister.

MINUTE VISITS IN THE WINGS

RICHARD ORDYNSKI will make his American début as an actor tomorrow afternoon on the stage of the New Brighton Theatre, in the condensed version of Reinhardt's wordless play, "Sumurun," he has prepared for Gertrude Hoffman's use in vaudeville. While Mr. Ordynksi is primarily a stage director, during his years with Reinhardt in Berlin he was often called upon to assume rôles in emergencies. It was he who came to New York several years ago to stage in the Casino this only specimen of the German genius Reinhardt's work.

Mr. Ordynski is a Pole by birth, and a short time before the war began he had gone back to his native country to assume the direction of two playhouses in Warsaw. He was born and educated in Cracow, and after graduation from the Cracow University he taught in a college several years.

School life, however, did not offer a wide enough field for his energy. He was deeply interested in the theatre, and even during his years of professorship acted as dramatic critic for several journals. Another link which connected Ordynski with the theatre was his brother, who was an actor.

Uninfluenced by the bitter objections of his parents, he went at first to Moscow to study the work of Stanislavsky, the producing manager of the famous Art Theatre there. Stanislavsky suggested to the young Pole that he stay for a while with him, but Ordynski did not take advantage of the offer. The Art Theatre was devoting all its attention to realistic modern plays, and this did not give Ordynski the opportunity he wished to develop his imagination. The artistic pilgrim went on to Berlin, where he saw for the first time some productions by Max Reinhardt. These captivated him at once, and although he wandered from theatre to theatre throughout Germany, studying the work of all the best German producers, he finally went to the Reinhardt festival, held in Munich in the Summer of 1908.

Ordynski's meeting with Reinhardt was quite informal. Ordynski explained himself, his ideas and ambitions, to Reinhardt. The producer was apparently impressed, for all he said was "Very well. Stay with me and work with me."

JOE WEBER and Lew Fields were removing the whiskers and padding and checkered clothes—clothes almost as unreal as the sport shirts of Seventh Avenue—in their dressing room in the Palace, and as the metamorphosis gradually restored their personalities, they waxed reminiscent of Mike and Meyer and the golden days when they were youthful comedians.

"It happened just twenty years ago," began Mr. Fields. "We had 'arrived' in vaudeville, and were receiving the staggering salary of $500 a week, which at that time was considered a princely sum for performers. We were booked by Oscar Hammerstein to appear in the playhouse now known as the New York Theatre. At that time the foreign impersonator, Fregoli, was appearing on the bill at the New York and had created a great sensation with his lightning changes of costume and character.

"I don't remember which one of us hit on the idea of burlesquing Fregoli's act," continued Mr. Fields, "but it came to us that night at dinner, and we worked out our plans immediately. My brother Nat, who now tips the scales at two hundred odd, was at that time as slender as I, and Bobby Harris, my wife's brother, was exactly Weber's size. We picked them for our supporting company and began rehearsals the next morning, after we had been assured by Hammerstein that we could follow Fregoli on the bill.

"At the opening matinée, we stationed Nat in the wings at the right of the stage and Bobby Harris in the wings on the left. Both were made up in exact imitation of Weber and myself, so far as the faces were concerned, except that Nat was dressed like a woman, and wore a beautiful blonde wig. The pseudo Weber wore a policeman's uniform. As soon as I walked off the stage, Nat came on. It would have been physically impossible for any human being to have made a change so quickly, but the audience did not seem to realize that, and applauded wildly. Then Weber walked off, and no sooner had he disappeared than Harris came on. We kept it up for several minutes. The two imitations would walk off and Weber and I would come on in our regular make-ups, from opposite sides of the stage. We absolutely fooled them that Monday afternoon, until the end of our turn, when all four of us came on together. Then the house went wild."

PERCY RICHARDS is going to sing in the Strand Theatre this week. Don't know Percy? At least you've seen him, for he is the Adonis in white who has promenaded the avenue and tributary thoroughfares so persistently for several months. "When I was in Venice, where I studied singing," says Mr. Richards, "I saw a man wander about the streets and his attire attracted my attention. He wore no hat, coat, or collar. His shirt was made of silk with a large soft rolling collar, open in front. His trousers, shoes, socks, and belt, were pure white. As a matter of fact, he was dressed as you see me now. He looked so comfortable and sensible that I decided to copy his attire."

That describes tersely Mr. Richards's costume, a costume that has made him familiar to thousands of New Yorkers. Mr. Richards is a Lieutenant in the Swedish Army; also Mr. Richards is a tenor; likewise Mr. Richards has a flair for arousing curiosity, and if a third of those who have wondered who he was and what his unusual attire meant go to hear him sing, he will have to be kept at the Strand a year.

Yorkville Theatre Reopens.

The Yorkville Theatre began its new season last night. It will be operated the coming year as a burlesque house.

THE FIRST-NIGHT CALENDAR.

"ROLLING STONES," a new comedy by Edgar Selwyn, Tuesday night in the Harris Theatre.

"SOME BABY," a new farce by Zellah Covington and Jules Simónson, postponed from last week, tomorrow night in the Fulton Theatre.

"CHIN-CHIN," most popular of last season's musical comedies, in the Globe Theatre tomorrow night for a supplemental engagement of three weeks.

THE theatrical entrepreneurs no longer wait for Labor Day to begin the new season. By that date this year a large majority of the playhouses will be running, unless a spell of belated torrid weather or some other catastrophe should subdue the spirits of the managers. Two new plays and the return of an old one will this week add the brilliance of their signs to the incandescence of Broadway.

"Rolling Stones" is the title of a new comedy by Edgar Selwyn that Selwyn & Co. will present in the Harris Theatre Tuesday night. The last offering here of this author was the farce, "Nearly Married," which he wrote in conjunction with Margaret Mayo, his wife, and before that "The Country Boy" and "The Arab," both from Mr. Selwyn's pen, were acted in New York.

"Rolling Stones" tells the story of two young men who make a spectacular rise from an environment of poverty to a position of affluence. They fare forth to conquer the world on the theory that it owes them, and any one with the wit to demand it, a living. Their path is not always a primrose one, and it is from the difficulties they encounter that the author draws his comedy.

The cast chosen to interpret the piece includes Charles Ruggles, Harrison Ford, Arthur Aylesworth, Frank Kingdon, James Kearney, Bertha Mann, Marie Carroll, Rae Selwyn, and Beatrice Ingram. Mr. Selwyn staged the piece himself.

The first local performance of the new farce, "Some Baby!" originally announced for last week, will be given tomorrow night in the Fulton Theatre. This is the farce by Zellah Covington and Jules Simonson which the Henry B. Harris Estate has been preparing for production for some weeks. In it Emma Janvier will return to the stage after an absence of six years. Others in the cast will be Frank Lalor, Francine Larrimore, Ernest Stallard, Sam Edwards, John Arthur, Beth Franklyn, Sara Biala and Gilbert Clayton.

"Chin-Chin" will resume its engagement in the Globe Theatre tomorrow night, after a vacation of several weeks, during which time Eddie and Fred and Dave and the rest of the stars have been amusing themselves in various ways. This most popular of last year's musical comedies will remain at the Globe only three more weeks, after which it will go to Chicago.

CHANCE AND EDDINGER

CHANCE, which Mr. Conrad has so entertainingly and convincingly shown, is the determining factor of our lives, is largely responsible for the greatest success of Wallace Eddinger's career. For if the war had not come Mr. Eddinger in all probability would have given up his career as an actor and so would have missed the opportunity he realizes so fully of giving a capital characterization of Budd Woodbridge in "The Boomerang." Mr Eddinger was splitting French vichy with a reporter and infinitives with acceptances of congratulations from Brother Lambs in the taproom of the club the other day.

"I had fully intended giving up acting," he said, "had given it up, in fact, and was contemplating producing some plays I had in my possession when the war came and caused me to change my plans. Why should I quit the stage at my age? Well, beyond the opportunity it offers of making a good living I am not wild about it, that is, about the acting end. To begin with, the hours are such that when every one else is loafing the actor has to work. We took a big place at Port Washington for the Summer and now just at the time when it will be most enjoyable I only get to spend a few hours a day there. Then if we entertain at dinner, instead of being able to dine leisurely and go to the theatre with our guests I have to scamper away to the grease-paint and footlights.

"I am not what you might call an old man—I am 34—but I have been on the stage a good many years and it has lost a lot of the lure it might still have if I had not begun my career at a tender age. I made my first appearance when I was 6 years old. My father was on the stage, and when Charles T. Ellis wanted a little boy in a play I was that boy. I played until I was 12 and then I quit to go to school, returning at 20.

"It was before I retired that I played Lord Fauntleroy, yellow curls and all. I was one of the original eighteen Lord Fauntleroys, who were almost as numerous as the original Florodora girls, and I played the rôle two and a half years in every part of the United States.

"I suppose it was in those early years that I got fed up on adulation, for I am impervious to it now. I am not strong for the matinée hero thing, and I do not believe in up-stage art. You know in a scene between two people when one player wishes to monopolize the scene he gradually works his way up stage, thus spoiling the balance and putting the other player at a disadvantage. I have found that an effective cure for this is to turn my back to the audience and the up-stage one immediately grasps the significance of my move.

"Likewise I do not believe in the star system. The average theatre-goer never looks at his program unless someone on the stage interests him especially, so most of the players are nameless to him. I refuse to be starred because I do not care to go out of town, and a manager doesn't like to star an actor and identify him with a play unless he is willing to stay with it.

"So you see I have no great illusions about the stage. In its highest estate acting is an art, to be sure, an art worthy of the greatest respect and one that demands the greatest sacrifices from those who master it. For these sacrifices it pays handsomely. When I was married several years ago I decided I would retire as soon as I had made some money. I did that on 'Officer 666,' an interest in which I owned. I quit the stage and took up loafing, but one can't loaf in America. I went in for sports, but you can't make a very big production of a game of golf, and soon I found I was eating and sleeping and drinking too much and getting very nervous over doing nothing. Abroad it is different. In France, where I have spent considerable time, it is easy to play. There I used to get up in time to have petit dejeneur, get a hundred or so bad tips, go to the races, lose on every tip, back to the American bars with the gang till dinner time, then dinner and the theatre. Loafing is a fine art there, but it is different with us.

"So here I am, still acting, and I suppose I will keep at it till I get too old and bald and fat. I find this part unusually interesting because the character is more complex than the usual comedy character, and I spent considerable time and thought developing it. The play was several years in the process of incubation. It was when I was playing in 'The Only Son' that Winchell Smith conceived the idea of 'The Boomerang.' You know Mr. Smith and I have been closely associated for a long time. The first time he ever went to the theatre as a youth in his native Massachusetts town from the vantage point of the gallery he saw me on the stage, a boy actor. And now he is writing my best parts for me."

Columbia Resumes Next Week.

The Columbia Theatre will return to its regular policy of burlesque with weekly changes of bill a week from tomorrow afternoon. The Golden Crooks will be the first show, being a combination of extravaganza, burlesque, and vaudeville.

TOPPING THE VAUDEVILLE BILLS.

PALACE THEATRE—Weber and Fields, retained from last week because of their drawing power, in a sketch containing some of their most famous scenes; Harry Fox and Yansci Dolly in a program of songs and dances; "The Peace Cry," a dramatic playlet with peace as its theme, by Edwards Davis; Ruth Roye in songs, and Trovato.

NEW BRIGHTON THEATRE—A condensed version of Max Reinhardt's wordless play, "Sumurun," seen several years ago in the Casino Theatre, with a large cast, headed by Gertrude Hoffman and Richard Ordynski; Vaughn Comfort and John King in their blackface sketch, "Coontown Divorcons"; Will Oakland and Company in a singing novelty, "At the Club."

PROCTOR'S FIFTY-EIGHTH STREET—"The Impresario," a travesty on grand opera, with a cast including George Everett, Lotta Edwards, and Joseph Mathieu.

LOEW'S AMERICAN ROOF—Ford's Dance Revue; Little Hip, a performing Baby Elephant, and the Minstrel Four.

Open Every Day in the Year

The following unsurpassed, unparalleled, unprecedented attractions all on one bill this week:

JOE WEBER & LEW FIELDS

To accommodate the many thousands who were unable to secure seats last week, the engagement of Weber & Fields has been extended. The great success scored by the comedians upon their return to vaudeville after a period of nearly twenty years is one of the great events of the season.

EDWARDS DAVIS & CO

The distinguished author-actor has written a new play, "The Peace Cry," which he will present at the Palace, supported by Jule Power and a company of ten. "The Peace Cry" is a powerful drama and its stirring story is interwoven with a strong plea against war.

RUTH ROYE

Vaudeville's youngest singing comedienne returns to the scene of her first great success. She will sing a new repertoire of topical songs written exclusively for her.

TROVATO

The humorist-violinist, whose methods have been imitated by more persons than any artist in the world, will be seen here for the first time in several years.

GUS VAN & JOE SCHENCK

Billed as "The pennant winning battery of songland," Van & Schenck will present their entertaining song and piano special.

CHAS. AHEARN COMEDY COMPANY

Charles Ahearn's big comedy cycling company is another feature of next week's bill. In addition to their comedy cycling, they are presenting a thrilling race between an auto and motorcycle.

THE LA VARS

The La Vars are known as Dancing Whirlwinds, and their series of dances are remarkable for their originality and dexterity.

AMETA

The Parisian Music Hall favorite will be seen in a series of classic dances.

EXTRA FEATURE

HARRY FOX & YANCSI DOLLY

Harry Fox and Yancsi Dolly will make their last appearance in vaudeville at the Palace next week in nonsensical patter, songs, and dances. The stage has no more delightful pair than these two.

HOW TEACHING SHOULD BE DONE IN AMERICAN PREPARATORY SCHOOLS

University and College Presidents Send to The Times Their Opinions of Methods, Courses, Discipline, and Aims in Secondary Training

IN the fourth installment of letters from university and college Presidents about preparatory school conditions, published herewith, the writers express varied ideas as to how boys and girls should be taught.

This educational series will continue to be a feature of THE SUNDAY TIMES for several weeks. The object in asking the educators for their opinions was to present a discussion of secondary schooling from a wide range of viewpoints. It will be seen that the width of the range was not miscalculated; the prominent teachers of the country evidently represent all sorts of school theories, and most of them have exhaustive arguments ready to support their beliefs.

Fewer Subjects Well Taught.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The chief emphasis, in my judgment, should be laid on the thorough study of a few fundamental subjects. The subjects are now too numerous. Some of these subjects are not fundamental to a well-balanced education. Four or five great studies—an ancient language, a science, mathematics, English, and a modern foreign language represent, in both quantity and quality, a proper course for a pre-college school.

Such a course well fills the two primary needs of early education: (1) knowledge, and, (2,) more important, training in sound judgment. These two needs should be filled by identical forces or means. For knowledge should be acquired with accuracy, comprehensiveness, proportion, and a sense of relationship. Thus acquired the power of accurate, comprehensive, large, and well-proportioned thinking will be the inevitable and precious result.

CHARLES F. THWING,
President Western Reserve University.
Cleveland, Ohio.

More Time to Fewer Subjects.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The greatest lack in our American system of education is the lack of thoroughness. The change that we should make should be to devote more time to a fewer subjects. For instance, in our part of the country we devote only five hours a week to Latin during the four years of a high-school course. If a student is really to know anything about Latin it is necessary to give something like eight hours a week to it for these years.

A good hold on one ancient language and one modern language, on the fundamentals of mathematics, on one's mother tongue, and on one science could be secured by every one who goes through a high school. But in order to do this much more time would have to be devoted to these subjects, and this time could be secured by teaching fewer subjects than are now taught.

The best type of school for developing character and mental power is the school of the type of the old Latin school or classical academy of our fathers, and unless a student is exceptionally well situated at home the best school for him is the boarding school, where school life is the only life of the pupil with none of the distractions of the social life of the ordinary home.

I should like for every American boy to know how to shoot straight, as did the boys in the old South. But I hate militarism with such a perfect hatred that I hesitate to advise giving military training in the secondary schools. R. E. BLACKWELL,
President Randolph-Macon College.
Ashland, Va.

Importance of Good Teachers.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Christian character is the greatest need of our day, as proved in every walk in life. Such character is caught and not taught. It passes from personality to personality. The permanent, vital element in education is the influence of a strong, wise, good life upon other lives. We cannot guard too carefully lest we rob our children of that fundamental element. In our day the emphasis needs to be placed upon the importance of choosing teachers of the right type. This is the best and surest method of developing the class of citizens which our country and the world today sorely needs.

There are absolutely no short cuts to real education. The element of time must enter into the development intellectual as it does into the development physical. Much of that introduced into our preparatory schools in recent years will not bear the test of time. Small foundations permit only small superstructures. It is not meet that we lower educational standards in a period of the world's history which calls for greater, stronger, truer men than we have yet produced.

Create vocational schools for those who must enter life with little preparation, but do not permit the demand for such training to undermine the accepted standards of thorough education.

The best leaders of our day are those who have come by way of the old-fashioned classical course. No other gives such breadth of vision, such intellectual training as gathers in its grasp both efficiency and force. The wise Board of Education will not permit these time-honored studies to be crowded out of the curriculum, while the wise lads and lassies are those who choose them in preference to studies as less valuable as they are more immediately attractive. The mushroom and the squash have their place and their value, as have also the towering fir and the stalwart oak.

Strict military discipline, when given by men of sterling Christian character, would doubtless do for many of our boys and young men what strict discipline has little opportunity to do in our modern homes.

LEONARD W. RILEY,
President of McMinnville College.
McMinnville, Ore.

Too Many Fads Nowadays.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

My first thought is that every ideal school must really prepare for the next step in life, whatever that may be. Consequently, these schools must have courses varied to meet future demands. But, presumably, your questions relate specifically to the schools that prepare for the college and university life. However, on general principles, the work of every such school should first of all seek to develop character—good, strong will power to choose well and to do well in every avenue entered.

Today, in the midst of so much that distracts, in the presence of so many allurements, in the sight of so many evidences of wealth and extravagant living and in the great restlessness of the age, the average boy or girl who enters college needs to have that preliminary education that fits one to do hard work and to stick to the task unmoved by demoralizing outside influences. As it is, the present methods in preparatory schools in general are not conducive to the making of youth strong enough mentally or morally to meet and conquer college tasks, though the physical side may have been well developed.

The fact is, we have swung too far from the old methods and old ideas that have served to train many master minds long before we were so hard beset by so much of the new psychology which has made of our lower schools, especially, experiment stations and raised many new problems in education. We need a return to the development of both wish and will to do hard things simply because they are to be done, to get pleasure out of victories over difficult tasks, and to learn to enjoy the possession of a mind that should be growing into a kingdom for each boy and girl.

Our methods must place less stress upon interest and inclination, which have a place undoubtedly, but which with the present pre-eminence accorded them serve to produce youth who are not hardened to serious endeavor, and who crave constant novelty as the only stimulant to urge them on to high achievement. Nothing can take the place of inner power developed; and just now our methods are leaning too much to the substitution of the active propelling force of the teacher for this vital power. The trouble is that too great a number of instructors in preparatory schools are inoculated with the craze for the new, following every fad and will-o'-the-wisp in education. They are not thoroughly enough trained in a subject where the most thorough training is needed. They are not able to value properly these new theories and have not judgment to see that these schools are not the place for experimentation. They fail to know youth as youth, but view their pupils as adolescents to be analyzed like a bug or plant and treated with this or that formula simply to see if stimulated or the contrary. They are often too obsessed by college methods to be able or willing to adjust themselves to the work demanded of preparatory students and so fail in obtaining proper results.

Among the things we are overemphasizing in our preparatory work for college we find the industrial idea and sports. We cannot do too many things and do them well. If the pupil is preparing for college we must see that he is not enticed from his aim, and notwithstanding the advantages some industrial training may have for him, it too often takes too much of his time. As for sports, the preparatory school is just the place where the proper relation of work and play should be learned and become habit. Just now, both here and in college, the student gets an exaggerated idea of the value of sports under the misleading title of "athletics" or "physical training."

In the studies pursued I am sure we are leaning too far to the material side in preparing the student for college. Science with its wonderfully attractive work is pushing aside the humanities and philosophical study. But we must hold hard to these—to the cultural side or the outlook upon life narrows and our youth are not made into men and women with strong mental calibre and moral fibre. The spiritual development is absolutely necessary to prepare every girl or boy at this impressible stage for all that comes after, in college or after life—to meet and solve problems and to endure heroically what life brings of trouble or disaster. All that the world holds of the best in literature of all ages and nations is needed to help learn to live life well, which, after all is said and done, is the thing we wish to prepare our youth to do.

As to military training in these schools, there are distinct advantages in it as long as we do not let the purely military idea predominate. The training is an invaluable aid to proper carriage of body, to habits of prompt obedience, to manly ideals, to courage, and to patriotism. The preparatory schools have largely in their hands the making of the great body of ideal future American citizens.

W. S. SCARBOROUGH,
President Wilberforce University.
Wilberforce, Ohio.

Too Much Manual Training.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The great weakness, it seems to me, of the present preparatory education is too great insistence on vocational training and manual arts, with a corresponding lack of insistence on the fundamental things that have always and must always constitute the great body of valuable preparatory education. Whatever may be said on behalf of vocational training and specialization in colleges and universities, no clamor of the bread-and-butterists should ever be permitted to overrun the fundamental educational needs of the expanding mind. Let us remember that our preparatory schools are not apprentice shops, and let us also remember that in this country every man is first a man and then an artisan or wealth producer in whatever realm, and with these two principles firmly established let us maintain an educational system in our preparatory schools at least that will make men first and practical workers thereafter.

W. A. HARPER,
President Elon College.
Elon College, N. C.

High Schools' Weak Points.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Formerly the preparatory schools of the Middle West were dominated almost entirely by the colleges and so failed to serve the needs of the majority of the people.

In an effort to correct this condition we are, in American fashion, going to the opposite extreme. The high school is becoming a sort of elementary university, trying to teach a little of everything, but often failing to produce the discipline desired as preparation for a rigorous college course. If the high school still continues to advance along these lines our colleges will either be forced to make radical changes in their curricula or suffer extermination by the secondary schools, on the one hand, and professional and technical institutions on the other.

Of course, the high schools cannot afford to revert to the old curriculum, but they should not neglect disciplinary subjects altogether. It is very foolish to suppose that a student can and will select subjects best fitted to his needs. The thing uppermost in the student's mind is securing the maximum credit for the minimum work.

If the high schools would see to it that the same amount of work is required in each course, there would be wiser choosing on the part of students.

From the college point of view we conclude that our preparatory schools are beginning to give us too many vocational units and not enough of the kind that represent mental discipline and produce studious habits.

Another point about high school instruction needs to be mentioned. It is the fact that in many of them inferior instruction is given in the fourth year. Senior privileges and the burden of "outside studies" contrive to make the student neglect his school work so that his preparation is weakened at the very point his college work begins. R. R. FLEET,
Professor of Mathematics, William Jewell College.
Liberty, Mo.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am sending you a brief article by Dr. R. R. Fleet, Professor of Mathematics in this college, who classifies students for college work and understands the preparatory school work better than I do. I notice that he has said nothing about military training in the secondary schools. I myself believe in it. I think it would be an advantage to the student to have this training, and that it would be a great thing for our country. It would prepare our citizens, to some extent, against a surprise war. A little over a year ago I thought we had got along in the road of civilization a little too far for another great war, but I have changed my mind. I am still in favor of peace, but I have less faith in national agreements. It seems to me now that the best policy for us is to be as peaceable as we ever were, but ready for war if necessary. J. P. GREENE,
President William Jewell College.
Liberty, Mo.

Public Schools Not Approved.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The best type of preparatory school for boys and girls, in my opinion, is found in the typical New England academy. Such schools have the following decided advantages in preparing young people for college entrance:

1. Rural environment characterized by simplicity, democracy, inexpensive social functions, and normal athletics.

2. Emphasis upon the classical and cultural courses of study, with vocational subjects incidental and optional.

3. A sane but pronounced moral and religious atmosphere. It is very important that this part of the life of young people should have careful direction before college entrance.

4. A Faculty of expert teachers of highest Christian character. The comparatively small enrollment, small classes, and the democratic simplicity of the social life make the most intimate association between Faculty and students possible and usual.

5. Coeducation—As in the home the sexes meet on an equality, so in the period of college preparation. After nearly twenty-five years of familiarity with co-educational schools in various sections of the country I am stronger than ever in my advocacy of this plan of education as the best possible for preparation for college or for life.

The West depends largely upon the high school for its college freshmen. The typical high school course is a poor preparation for college entrance. Undue emphasis upon vocational subjects, a large range of electives, and a disposition in many quarters to curtail or eliminate the ancient languages and other cultural subjects render the average high school graduates' preparation entirely inadequate for college entrance.

I do not believe in military training in the secondary schools or colleges. I have seen it tried in a Western academy and college, I do not object to it on account of the tendency to create a spirit of militarism. I believe it works the other way. The average student does not care for it. Whatever place military training may have, if any, I do not consider it a legitimate part of the work for college preparation. All opinions on such a theme as this must necessarily be explained, qualified, and limited.

HARRY ANDREWS KING,
President Moore's Hill College.
Moore's Hill, Ind.

Emphasis on Study of English.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Southern California, because of the high-grade, well-equipped high schools, needs only more of the strongest kind of preparatory schools. There is no need for other than the stiffest curriculum. That curriculum should cover all prerequisites ordinarily required of high-grade colleges and universities. There is still need of English being emphasized and a larger place for the elementary natural sciences. I do not see the especial advantage in military training in secondary schools.

JOHN WILLIS BAER,
President Occidental College.
Los Angeles, Cal.

Importance of the Sciences.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is my impression that we are still somewhat mediaeval in our preparatory work. I might add that the same is largely true of our college curricula. We are the slaves of custom in these respects, holding to educational traditions as tenaciously as to the wearing of buttons on the backs of our coats. What we need, it seems to me, is to awake to the importance of the sciences and to realise that Latin and Greek are not the only subjects necessary for entrance to the educational heaven. Spencer urged this long ago, and if we think back through the last hundred years of our history we shall find that the great achievements have been the result of scientific endeavor. We must recognize individual differences in pupils—that all cannot enter the professions—and that a legitimate field for the secondary school is the preparation for other modes of earning a living. In short, we must emphasize the manual arts—girls must learn to cook, to sew, and to keep house; boys must learn to farm, to build, to make.

The truly educated man is the one who is able to handle his job, whether that be running a motor or a college. Each renders his service to his fellows, and the school is modern which recognizes this.

As to the military training, I am slow to hazard an opinion. I believe, however, that in our present stage of development we should give not a little of attention to this matter. The struggle for existence sometimes takes on the form of war, and that nation will survive which is best prepared to meet the vicissitudes of the environment.

Age for College Entrance.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

To parents endeavoring to find out whether their sons are "old enough" to go to college and "ready" for college work a few suggestions born of long experience may be helpful.

First: A boy is "old enough" to go to college when he is mature enough to control his own actions and spend wisely his own money. Ordinarily this age is reached at about 18, sometimes at 17, not often earlier than the latter age, and frequently not till the young man is 20 or 21. A boy who must be "made" to go to bed and to get up in time for breakfast, "made" to go to school each morning and to prepare his lessons each evening, and who cannot be trusted to spend his own pocket money, is not "old enough" to go to college, whatever may be his age, height, weight, and company manners.

Second: A boy is "ready" to undertake the difficulty of college studies when he has learned to study his daily lessons resolutely without any compulsion and has successfully completed a good high-school course consisting of four years of study after finishing the regular lower grammar or graded school.

Of course, a boy of unusual ability, maturity, and resolute determination, who cannot have access to a four-year high school, might wisely go on to college and enter the race with inadequate preparation. Difficulties to such men are a stimulus rather than a discouragement. But the ordinary high-school student has no conception of the difficulty of college courses. His attempt to "save" a year may involve a vain and hopeless effort to keep up, then the despairing relinquishment of further useless labor, and the idleness which is so often the open gateway to moral deterioration.

Thorough preparation makes university study congenial, successful, and inspirational; allows leisure for athletics, social life, and outside literary work, and gives that sureness and self-confidence so necessary to success in life. When to intellectual preparation are added vigorous health, correct habits, and a strong personality a young man's success in his college course is practically assured.

How to Beautify a Summer Soiled Face

It's really a simple matter to renovate a face soiled by sun, winds or dirt. Ordinary mercolized wax, used like cold cream, will transform the worst old complexion into one of snowy whiteness and velvety softness. It literally peels off the outer veil of surface skin, but so gently, gradually, there's no discomfort. The wornout skin comes off, not in patches, but evenly, in tiny particles, leaving no evidence of the treatment. The younger, healthier underskin forming the new complexion, is one of captivating loveliness. One ounce of mercolized wax, to be had at any druggstore, is enough to remove any tanned, reddened, pimpled, freckled or blotchy skin. Apply before retiring, washing it off mornings.

EDITORIAL

Mr. Arthur Brisbane Has This to Say:

"Doubtless you have seen salespeople at work—women standing on their feet all day in suit and dress departments bringing out garment after garment, trying patiently to find what the customer wants. With them every sale is a serious matter—meaning not only an immediate commission but future advancement. To employ the best efforts of such people, knowing that in all likelihood the goods ordered will be sent back the next day, is very much like ordering a contractor to build you a house which you will pay for if you like its looks after it is built, and on the further condition that you happen to have the money."

Mr. Brisbane is not a merchant, but he has a very keen insight into things commercial. He also has that rare faculty of placing himself in another's position. What he says about selecting goods one day and returning them the next—or, worse still, the next week—is absolutely and undeniably true.

We have published several articles on the use and abuse of the return privilege. We have not made any arbitrary rules, neither have nagged or whined. What we have said has been educational in character.

We have frankly taken the public into our confidence and the public has responded. We knew it would. An appeal to reason never fails to commend itself to REASONABLE PEOPLE.

Won't you co-operate with us? Won't you return what you have to return within a reasonable period, say, two or three days, or even a week? Won't you try to make more of your selections in our store rather than in your home?

Unless you know the intimate, innermost workings of a store you cannot begin to realize what a tremendous help this would be to us.

"Talk it over with your friends."

FASHION DECREES SKIRTS TWO INCHES LONGER THAN BEFORE

Soft, Clinging Material, and Plenty of It, Goes Into the Making of the Early Fall Models for Well-Dressed Women—Long-Waisted Coats, Coming to Point Either in Front or Rear, Seem to be Forecast for Winter.

MODEL BY LAFERRIERE OF PARIS.
Louis XVI. tea gown of biscuit colored satin with long coat of black chiffon.

WHEN the weather became hot in Paris the Frenchwoman lowered her skirt a few inches because she did not care for the expanse of ankles left by the adoption of slippers and pumps with high heels in place of high shoes. It is claimed by those who should know that this length will prevail with our women when the 1st of October brings in the boot. But why?

The shorter the skirt the better has been the motto ever since the first day of April, at the very season when the low shoe came into its own. It is true that the majority of women recognized the ungracefulness of that obvious expanse of ankle between the shoe rim and the skirt hem, and therefore adopted the high boot of soft leather during months that call for the comfort of the slipper.

Not all women, however, yielded to the call of beauty and abandoned the low shoe. Many there were who looked as though they were wearing bathing suits in the streets. Never has there been so much freedom tolerated by respectable people in this respect. Soon after the fashion started the stares ceased. Comment died. Stockinged legs that showed between the edges of a pump and a skirt that cleared the ground by ten inches or more became commonplace. One thought of the sarcasm of the cabman of London.

Possibly it was in rivalry with these streets and dance skirts that the newest bathing suits became merely a glistening chemise hung from the shoulders over a pair of silk trunks, a feature of the beaches that caused gasps from even those who were supposed to be proof against surprise from the audacity that has ruled dress recently.

When one knows that Paris has decreed a skirt that retains its fullness, but increases its length, there is a feeling of panic. Are we to be burdened again with those hideous skirts of other days that hampered our movements and ruined any prospect of grace? The only redemption to a short skirt is in its fullness, and the only redemption to a full skirt is in its shortness. Are we to have this axiom of grace turned topsy-turvy as it was when we thought the world knew no better?

Of course, we can stand the present exaggerated skirt lengthened by a few inches and not feel that any sacrifice of beauty is made, but this preliminary lengthening of the hem suggests more striking experiments in the near future in the name of novelty, or, rather, a change for the late Autumn fashions; so if, to a full long skirt we add a long full redingote, and a high, brimless hat, what, oh, what shall we do?

There will be no balm in Gilead for any kind of woman but the type that adores to look like a poster done by Georges Lepape. Well, there is no use mourning so early in the season. Always there has been found a way out of a startling dilemma in fashions by those who must have the public back of them, and by a public that will not be coerced into something definitely dowdy.

After years of dashing, if provocative, styles, one would hate to lapse into anything dowdy, and such is the adjective one may use for the threatened combination. Nothing would be gained by it, for the majority of women have accustomed themselves to wearing a different type of costume, and I should think they would resent being hurled back into a period when macrame lambrequins, ornamented kettles, ribboned frying pans, and bedizened milk stools were regarded as suitable drawing-room furniture.

If we attempt this ugly, commonplace, and unspirited costume let us pray for another William Morris to come among us and sweep all of such dowdiness into the dust heap as he did with the aforementioned articles of household things in England.

We pay homage daily to Paul Poiret as an apostle of good line and brilliant color in dress, but the world does not half know or praise what William Morris did in interior decoration. Working as did Poiret, he banished the superficial, artificial, superfluous adornment of personal belongings. Down went the spurious, up came the genuine, under his teachings. And yet, the most that the many know of him is that he gave his name to a reclining chair. The very phrase "Nottingham curtains" would discourage him in the same way as it pains Poiret to see a woman wearing a string of pearls with a tailored suit, as so many hundreds of American women, unfortunately, have a habit of doing.

Full Skirts Must Cling.

It is pleasanter to look on the optimistic side of fashions, however, than upon the gloomy side, and there is no reason to borrow trouble for the morrow when the world seems to have its share right now.

Many good and acceptable things are heralded and there are scores of them already incorporated in the fashions of the hour. To begin with, there is no perceptible movement now to compel the hem of the skirt to stand out about the ankles as though it were crinolined. There is still, in most fashionable places, a movement to broaden the circle about the hips by means of the introduction of haircloth so that the material will swing away from the figure.

When well done, this fashion is not alarming. It has many points of merit. It accentuates the narrowness at the ankles, which is always attractive, and tends to reduce the extraordinary amount of fullness, used in any smart skirt, to a graceful moderation.

No one cares how much fabric is employed in the make-up of a skirt, provided it is supple, not heavy, and that it is so well hung it clings to the figure. In these essentials to grace, a cutter and fitter must be well trained or the material becomes bulky, unwieldy, and contributes to an awkward appearance.

The narrow skirt had equal drawbacks when in the hands of the unskilled. It seemed almost impossible to cut a tight-fitting skirt without displaying the figure in a most ungraceful manner, a manner that can never be equaled by a full skirt, as it has no such immodest possibilities.

If one attempts to have a Winter suit made of any of the heavy suitings in the new style, then one's appearance is doomed. Possibly one's health may also be menaced, for the carrying of yards of fabric swung from the waist is a man's job; it is not fit for a woman. For this reason alone the buyer of new clothes this Autumn must insist upon soft, clinging materials. The shops offer them, fashion indorses them and them only, and the best effect in the new silhouette is obtained through them.

Cheruit is insisting upon tulle and chiffon in her new evening frocks, and no one can find fault with such billowy fabrics, voluminously used. Some of Doucet's best models are exaggerations of those he introduced in the late Spring, which are made of tulle with short bolero effects in metal embroidery done on the fabric, and he got an immensely attractive line to his skirts by using then, as he does now, a quantity of ruchings and pleatings put on at opposite angles. This studied irregularity gives the skirt an elfin quality, somewhat of that wind-blown effect that Pavlowa's skirts have when she dances in "Paul and Virginia" and to the music of Mendelssohn's "Spring Song."

Colored Tulle Gowns.

Cheruit is using colored tulle, such as dahlia and Egyptian blue and rose, with broad sashes of an opposing color. Doucet is also doing this same effect. Both of these distinguished creators, who never strive for the sensational or the conspicuous in apparel, are giving to the silhouette a gypsy-like line through the introduction of these wrapped sashes that extend from the bust almost to the hips.

STILL THE SMALL HAT IS SMART.
A new shape in black velvet, with three points, one tipped far down over the eyes.

There is no attempt there to make the waist appear small. The figure is left to a certain naturalness that is exceedingly pretty and sensuous when one happens to be slenderly well-formed.

The opposing colors in these gowns are well-managed and delight the eye. Take, for instance, a blue tulle by Cheruit with an old rose girdle, and one of dahlia-colored tulle with a rose satin belt.

Attractive ideas, don't you think? In each of the skirts of Doucet there must be twelve yards of wide tulle used, possibly more, yet there is no undue width given to the silhouette by this mass of material, which floats closely to the ankle; it is only when one is walking or dancing that the sheer ruchings and pleatings swirl out from the figure.

Long-Waisted Coats.

The average woman is more interested in her Autumn coat suit than she is in evening frocks, although the changes in fashions for the latter should enable her to alter whatever she has, if that is possible, in order that they may meet the social life of the early Fall, when people come together in town again and one wants informal evening clothes, if no other kind.

Nothing is settled over here in the way of any clothes until the August models are received from Paris so far as the Winter is concerned, but the men and women who went over early in the Summer for advance styles to sell to the trade that supplies a vast amount of people in clothes before the season really opens have ushered in many styles that will be worn undoubtedly in the weeks before Thanksgiving.

Some of these are belted exactly at the waist line, as they were in the late Spring; others have an exaggerated point in the front, somewhat after the manner of an Elizabethan bodice with a flaring peplum attached, and running high at the sides. This is a novelty, and whether or not it will be repeated frequently one cannot tell. There are many women to whom it will be very becoming. At least, it is a decided change from what we have had, and there are rumors that it will usher in a variety of coats that run down to a point either in the front or back, with high side lines. For the woman who is over 50 and whose hips have broadened, the point will be good, and the side shaping can be managed according to her requirements.

The belted coat has not proved an entirely satisfactory model to the multitude, because it suggested a waist line, which is not always a pleasing effect on a figure that has become thick with the years and lack of exercise. The short coat was not always a success, for the same reason, and, therefore, this pointed one, with its irregular peplum, may fill a long-felt want.

What Will We Do About Hats?

There is apprehension in the air, also, about the new millinery. There is no longer any doubt that the autumn hats will be almost brimless and unusually high. Neither one of these features recommends itself to the average woman. She does not possess the face to wear such a hat. Youth, glorious, insolent youth, which in these recent days has been able to take unto itself any of the sartorial bravados of the hour, will, probably, adopt these hats that savor, unpleasantly, of the reign of Louis XI, whose era was enlivened by the wit of Francois Villon and by the hennin which brought its obdurate wearers a stern rebuke from the church.

Any and all kinds of high, brimless hats seem to be on the milliners' shelves. The silk top hat, worn by the schoolboy at Eton, is among the number and has already been worn over here, much to the amusement of the bystanders, who thought it was merely a theatrical trick. It appears now that it was a genuine forerunner of a new fashion.

It goes with the broad Eton collar of stiffened linen which the shops have been trying to make popular since April. When a young woman adds the hat and the collar to a short Eton jacket of velveteen, it is a pity that the excessively narrow skirt has ceased to be, for its addition as a final touch to the costume would be an excellent mimicry of British boyhood.

The Eton jacket, by the way, is not at all amiss in the fashions of the day. It has an Oriental counterpart in the loose bolero that the French are putting on their newest evening frocks, boleros of beaded embroidery, of tulle embroidered, of crystal net, under which shine the colors of a soft sash.

Another point about the new hats—to get back to the subject—is the promised use of flowers. This is done in Paris to give plentiful work to the thousands of flowermakers among the women and girls, and it may spread over here. Everywhere one sees evidence now of the employment of available and needy human material by the French fashion creators.

Everything is in style that helps the destitute of France. Surely America will be only too glad to do her best by choosing one fashion instead of another that will put coin into the hands of the women workers of France. We have shown no niggardly attitude in that respect since Aug. 1, and it is well that every one should realize that creating fashions in Paris today is not a matter of prestige; it is a question of staving off starvation from women and babies.

TWO SIDES, TWO STYLES.
Unusual black-and-white checked coat, belted and yoked on one side.

FASHION HINTS FOR MID-SUMMER DAYS

PLAIN felt hats, untrimmed, are worn for sports. They are made in bright yellow, green, blue, and pink, and also in white.

Smocks are now made of jersey cloth, and are delightfully soft and supple, in spite of their fullness.

Buttons seem an odd hat trimming, yet three big white pearl buttons are fastened on the twilled ribbon band that encircles the crown of a broad-brimmed black velvet hat.

Beads are embroidered in a design that incrusts the ends of some of the new black silk and satin handbags. They are mounted in silver, and have strap handles of ribbon or stitched silk.

Cretonne flowers are cut out and glued on the crowns and brims of white hats. They make effective trimming, and, of course, when they fade or become tiresome, they can easily be removed with the aid of a little water.

A white silk Tam o' Shanter hat shows a worsted cord and tassel as its only decoration.

The new skirts in black and white stripes, of cloth and silk, are made so that the black stripe overlaps the white, and at the hips only the black shows. Lower, where the stripes open out, the white is visible.

Wide awning-striped ribbons are formed into belts, with buckles of silver or brass, to wear with white skirts and blouses.

Crepe de chine hats are not a novelty, but there are some especially pretty midsummer models of this fabric. Sometimes a soft ruching of the fabric encircles the crown, and sometimes a little frill of it is laid around the brim.

Jersey scarfs, in wide stripes, are used about the neck as girdles with white morning frocks.

A band of straw braid is used to encircle the crown of a figured crepe de chine hat.

Pockets that apparently or really button over the belt are much used on frocks and coats for both children and grown-ups.

A hat with the wide brim slashed at each side and curled upward in two little points is a novelty.

Buttons are to be largely used as dress trimmings, present indications predict.

Big Quaker collars are made in many materials. First of organdie or other plain, sheer white fabric, they are now made of white or colored mull, and even of lace or all-over embroidery.

Velvet parasols have followed velvet hats into popularity. One is made of black velvet, with a plain bright green silk centre.

Scotch plaids in silk will be used to trim the returned petticoats which women find necessary with the fashionable full skirt.

There are to be some petticoats with jersey tops, and these, of course, wear far better than the petticoat that is all taffeta, for a new flounce can easily be put in place of the first one when that becomes worn.

Sleeves on some of the new evening frocks are no more than little ruffles, sometimes of tulle edged with beads, and sometimes held out with a flexible wire at the lower edge.

Silk Jersey suits are worn for sports. There is a sweater jacket and skirt, usually a sash or scarf to match, and often a jaunty little cap, made with a point on each side, one ending in a tassel, the other fastened down with a silk-covered button.

Points are much used in the new frocks—there are pointed tunics, and skirts cut in deep points at the bottom and points in some form appear on many bodices.

Still many sports skirts are fastened from belt to hem with buttons straight down the front. This fashion came in in the day of scant skirts, when it was a great convenience to have a sports skirt that could be unbuttoned for a foot or two at the hem.

Prediction is made that for Autumn wear voile and etamine in heavy, coarse weave are to be featured. These are both desirable fabrics, for they have an element of durability that makes them economical.

Lacings appear in some of the new frocks and blouses. Sleeves are sometimes laced from the elbow to the wrist, sometimes from the shoulder to the elbow. Lacings appear down the front of blouses and at the collar. The lacings are contrasting color, usually.

Wool embroidery is still used on Summer frocks. It usually shows crude, bright colors that remind us of the days when the Balkan war stood sponsor for so many vivid colors in our frocks.

Fur-trimmed sweater coats, too, are gaining in fashion. Made in pink and blue and pale yellow and white silk, with hems and collars and cuffs of white fox, they are admirable for wear with afternoon and even evening frocks at the seashore and in the mountains.

Contrasting linings in coats for day and evening wear are usual. Often figures are used for the linings, and some smart coats are lined with two-colored checked silk.

A hem of tulle is used on some evening frocks of taffeta for young girls. The skirts are exceedingly short and full and the tulle hem extends about two inches below the taffeta.

Parasols trimmed in the inside are one of the features of the Summer. The trimming takes the form of embroidery, frills of tulle and chiffon, and applied flowers or birds of silk.

CURRENT NEWS AND NOTES OF THE AUTOMOBILE WORLD

GOLDEN OPPORTUNITY OF OUR CARS IN ENGLAND

Care and Foresight in Establishing Business Now Should Mean Big Permanent Market, Says Perry—Tire Chance Also.

Now is the golden opportunity for the American manufacturer of automobiles, tires, and all things that appertain to motoring to take so firm a hold on the British market that even the reaction after the war will not be able to break his grip, according to P. L. D. Perry, Managing Director of the English branch of the Ford Motor Company and President of the Motor Trade Association of England, who is in this country for a short stay. It is an opportunity, Mr. Perry thinks, which should be grasped with an eye to the long future rather than a mere desire to fill the needs created by the war.

"We have been fighting for many years," said he last week, "to overcome the prejudice against American cars which was created in England by some unfortunate methods used when they were first put on the market over there. The idea seemed to be to sell whatever one could and then forget any just claims that the purchaser might have for service or attention. It was often impossible for the buyer of one of the little old cars to get parts or any attention whatever. This naturally did not make for the good reputation of American cars in general.

"It would be the greatest mistake in the world, in my judgment, for American manufacturers to let their desire to meet the enormous demand created by the war induce them to put anything on the British market of which they are not sure. The natural desire to buy British goods and the real prejudice against American goods which are always strongly felt in England should not be given any stimulus by the failure or unsatisfactory performance of the cars or their fittings which are being exported at this time.

"If care is used and only first quality cars in the various price ranges put on the market in England and, especially, if the business is handled there directly through branches or rigidly selected agents only, the reputation of American motoring products can be enormously enhanced and American cars can establish a firm and important place in my country."

Although Mr. Perry did not specifically point to any one instance, it is known that some Americans and not a few Englishmen with small reputation to lose in their own country have used the war demand for cars—not for the Government but for private service—to establish business of the "catch-penny" variety, plainly intended to last only for the duration of the war. These men have employed agents in this country to send them anything with four wheels that they could lay their hands on, regardless of quality or durability, and have not hesitated to harm the chances of the ultimate British market for American cars by selling machines either not tried sufficiently in this country or tried and found wanting. It was this undesirable type of business to which Mr. Perry evidently referred.

"The present market, the market during the war, is very large," he continued. "You see the Government is taking the output of every motor works in Great Britain, either in the form of motor cars or munitions. The demand for machines for private use, both cars and lorries, (trucks,) is far greater than the supply. Why, if one excludes the little cycle cars, I am sure that not 1,000 British-made automobiles have been sold in England to the private trade since the war broke out. It is a wonderful opportunity for the American car of worth, up to and including the medium-priced class, which has sold very little in England heretofore.

"It is the same with tires. Do you know that before the war more than 50 per cent. of the tires on the British market were made on the Continent? Of course the German supply is cut off, and the French and Russians are too busy taking care of their own demands for military purposes to have any to spare for export. It is a fact that cars are laid up and other new cars cannot be sold because tires cannot be obtained for them. It is impossible to buy some sizes at all, in spite of the fact that our big tire companies before the war had a far greater number of tires in the form of distributed stock than it is the custom to carry over here. Both the Dunlop and Continental had at least $5,000,000 worth of tires out with stockists or dealers. Very few of the American tires are represented at all on our market, and this should be a wonderful chance to secure a firm hold on the tire market for American-made goods."

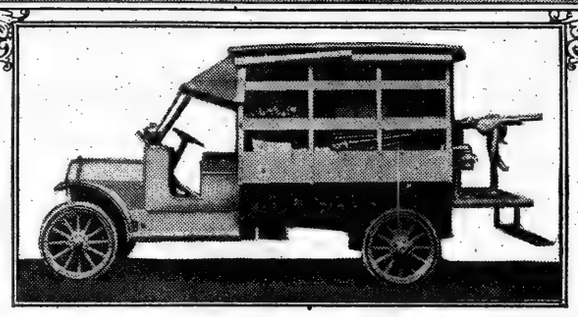
OLD TRAILS ROUTE POSTED.

Between Kansas City and Los Angeles 2,500 Signs Have Been Placed.

The last of the 2,500 sign posts installed along 2,900 miles of the National Old Trails route, between Los Angeles and Kansas City, is in place. This finishes the largest single undertaking of the Automobile Club of Southern California and means that all the difficult portions of this highway now have been supplied with direct instructions and road markers. A tremendous increase in transcontinental auto traffic is resulting from this work, which was delayed several months owing to unexpected difficulties.

Estimates made of the California travel over the Old Trails route through Nebraska indicate that during 1915 there will be thirty-seven cars to one that came West in 1914. At Holbrook, where the count was kept, 194 machines on transcontinental tours passed last year. During the month of May, 1915, 216 cars, 85 per cent. of which were westbound, passed through. June showed an increase over May, so that the estimate for the year indicates that hundreds of touring parties will appreciate the sign-posting of the route.

MOTOR TRUCKS USED BY THE ARMY AND THE NATIONAL GUARD IN PRACTICE WORK.



At the top is shown one of the Mack trucks which the Government is using at the United States Army School of Instruction at Plattsburg, N. Y. It is a three and one-half-ton model with a trailer consisting of a standard U. S. 3-inch field piece with limber. The truck carries removable armor plating which can be used as a temporary barrier behind which two machine guns, carried by the truck, can be operated. For these guns 15,000 rounds of ammunition and 800 rounds for the field piece are also carried. Below is a special Garford truck carrying a machine gun, which is also used to transport ammunition, men and supplies. It has shelves at the side on which nine bodies can be carried from the battlefield.

WANT MORE TRAFFIC, NOT LESS, ON AVENUE

A. H. Ball Gives Merchants' Point of View in Discussing Present Police Experiment.

Traffic regulation is a subject in which the merchants with stores on Fifth Avenue are taking a vital interest. Just at present they are watching the experiment being conducted by the Police Department with a semaphore system north of Thirty-fourth Street. By this system north and south traffic and east and west traffic are released alternately, for a continuous flow over an area of several blocks at a time. Many of the store owners and lessees in the neighborhood do not find the plan to their liking. A. H. Ball of Best & Co., Chairman of the recently formed Traffic Committee of the Fifth Avenue Association, discussed the question from several angles last week.

"What the merchants want on Fifth Avenue," he said, "is not less traffic, but more traffic. If we could devise a system whereby the avenue could take care of one-third or one-half again as much traffic as it carries now we should be glad. The present experimental plan is to expedite the movement of vehicular traffic as much as possible, and rush it by two or three blocks at a time. This seems to me the wrong theory to apply to Fifth Avenue. It is not a place for haste. People choose Fifth Avenue to drive in because they like to look about them, to see other people, the store windows, and the whole unique panorama which it presents.

"If a man is in a hurry to get uptown or downtown he can readily get his car over to Madison Avenue or Park Avenue. Fifth Avenue has an atmosphere all its own, it is a place where many people like to congregate, just to be part of it all. It is this factor, in my opinion, which gives the greatest value to real estate along the avenue for the purposes of retail trade. It is a factor which we do not want to impair.

"We are the ones who pay the taxes and whose interests are involved, and I think we have properly something to say about desirable traffic conditions.

"One of the most important kinds of traffic, from our point of view, is pedestrian traffic. I think it is safe to say that it means more to us than vehicular traffic. We want the pedestrian on Fifth Avenue properly taken care of. The committee of which I happen to be head has not worked out any specific recommendations as yet, but I believe it might prove a good solution of a difficult problem if aisles of safety were placed at frequent intervals along the centre line of the roadway, dividing the traffic into two streams, and also if the so-called 'rotary' system, which has worked well in other cities, should be tried. This should take care of more traffic, and do it safely. A return to the block system would be preferable, it seems to me, to the present plan, with its semaphore operating several blocks at once.

"Of course, there are some elements in the vehicular traffic which might well be removed. The cruising hack does not belong on the avenue. It serves a useful purpose, but should be stationed in the side streets. The empty taxicab which has delivered its 'fare' should also be sent off the avenue as soon as possible. It is a dead unit in the traffic stream.

"Fifth Avenue is not the place where the street accidents occur. It is not a place for great speed or fast driving. Half its charm to the individual, whether he be in an automobile or walking, and an important part of its value to property owners would be lost if its crowds should be reduced."

TOLL CHARGES REDUCED.

Lower Rates After Sept. 1 on Valley Turnpike in Virginia.

Beginning Sept. 1 the following reduced rates will prevail for toll on the Valley Turnpike near Winchester, Va.:

Touring cars..15c per gate each way.
Runabouts...10c per gate each way.
Motor cycles. 5c per gate each way.

These rates will take the place of the rate that now prevails of 25c for touring cars with the privilege of return the same day, and 20c for runabouts with the same privilege. This change will operate, it is believed, greatly to the advantage of tourists from other States.

CONVICT ROAD WORK PAID IN THE SOUTH

Report from West Virginia Showed Earning of 25 Per Cent. Over Contractors' Bids.

Does convict road work pay? The continuance of the work in most of the States will depend on its economic value. The National Committee on Prisons and Prison Labor has been investigating this side of the convict road question and has received an encouraging report from A. D. Williams, Chief Road Engineer of the State of West Virginia.

The report covers the work at Dana, Kanawha County, and has been conducted under the supervision of M. P. Walsh for a period of ten months, half of which was through the Winter. From November, 1914, to June, 1915, the measured quantities on the Malden Road constructed by the convicts from the Dana Camp were:

207	cu. yds. rubble masonry in cement.
115	cu. yds. rubble masonry in dry.
245	cu. yds. reinforced concrete.
22	lin. ft. 24 reinforced vitrified pipe.
220	lin. ft. 18 reinforced vitrified pipe.
408	lin. ft. 12 reinforced vitrified pipe.
895	cu. yds. foundation excavation.
22,386	cu. yds. unclassified excavation.

The total cost of this work amounted to $11,589.92, while the lowest of four bids received from private contractors for this same work amounted to $15,418.05, or $3,819.13 more than the work actually cost when constructed by the prisoners. Twenty-five per cent. of the total cost of the work was, therefore, saved by the use of the prisoners.

The success in this work is pointed out by the committee to be due to the fact that the men in charge were efficient and desirous of success, and also had the welfare of the prisoners at heart, so that they secured interest and good-will in the work.

NEW ZEALAND OFFERS AMERICAN CAR MARKET

Shortage of British Product and Local Demand for War Machines Opens Field for Export, Says Consul at Auckland.

The motor trade in New Zealand is feeling the effects of the commandeering of British factories by the War Office. Large motor cars and lorries of British make are practically unprocurable and all business is subject to delay, according to United States Consul General J. S. Brittain, stationed at Auckland.

"A very great number of the factories are engaged on war material," he reports, "though in certain cases the motor-car department is not affected, at least so far as small horse-power cars are concerned. Many of the works have sent a large number of men to the war and labor is scarce. A well-known motor-car importer stated that there had been delays in shipments from England owing to shortage of labor in the docks, the paucity of ships, and to the difficulty of securing rail transportation, as the great majority of trains were declared to be used for the movement of troops. So great was the dock difficulty that some of the ships had to come away only loaded up to half their capacity. It looked as though New Zealand and other dominions would for a time have to do without English cars, except those in stock or on order.

"There would be no difficulty with reference to small cars and runabouts, but no touring cars could be expected owing to the action of the War Office. One company did not expect to be able to forward further cars until toward the end of the year. An idea of the state of affairs in England was given by the fact that one company had not sent a single car to its clients in 1915. Dozens of firms were in the same position. The shortage of British and Continental cars meant an enhanced market for the Americans. There seemed to be no way of preventing this position.

"Naturally it was expected that there would be much less motor-car business than formerly. Some people would not purchase American goods for patriotic reasons, but it had to be remembered that the Americans were making capital out of the existing state of affairs and would unquestionably increase their turnover. A certain number of English cars were available still, and more were coming forward. Another importer confirmed the shortage, particularly in regard to commercial vehicles, which were required for war purposes. A large number of cars had undoubtedly been sold in Auckland, but in his opinion many more would have been disposed of had the war not occurred. He contended that the American cars on the whole were better for such a country as New Zealand, and were the cheapest on the market. Sales of American cars were largely increasing.

"Heavy vehicles, remarked one importer, when questioned, were being delayed, as well as all classes suitable for army purposes. He agreed that the Americans had stepped in and he did not see what could be done to prevent it. He recognized that an increased tariff would be unsatisfactory. On the question of manufacturing in New Zealand, he stated that the labor difficulty was the cause of the nonactivity in that direction. He believed in helping those who helped us. There were large motor firms in Canada, and we should give their productions every opportunity and thus keep out the foreigner. The manager of another Auckland firm agreed that sales of British and Continental cars had fallen of necessity, but his American sales had enormously increased. In his opinion the American business was bound to grow.

"There are also difficulties in the supply of lamp glasses for motor cars. In the course of a letter a British firm says:

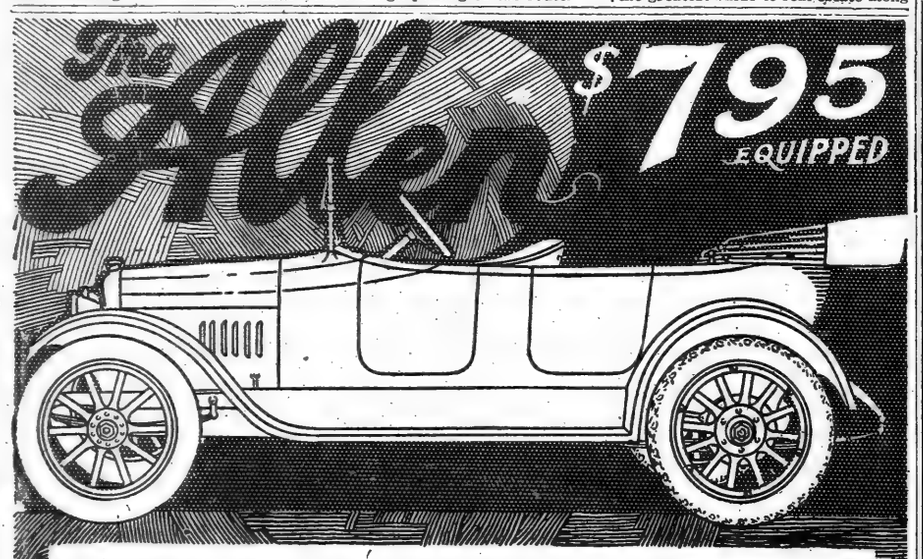
"'In the past the majority of the lamp glasses has been made in Germany, and the English stocks are now exhausted. Unfortunately, although we have scoured the trade, we have been unable to find any firm which is in a position to supply at prices anywhere near the German figures. We know of one firm in Birmingham which is able to supply convex glasses, but its price is practically 300 per cent. more than the German.'"

PASSPORTS NEEDLESS.

Rumors of Touring Difficulties in Dominion Are Set at Rest.

Many members of the Automobile Club of America are touring this year over routes that are drawn up to take them into Canadian territory, and considerable doubt has been expressed as to the necessity of carrying passports. Persistent rumors regarding the difficulties American motorists would meet with on trying to enter Canada without passports have been disturbing to many who were contemplating a trip over the international border. An authoritative statement, therefore, has been obtained by the A. C. A. from the Automobile Club of Canada on the subject.

George A. McNamee, the genial Secretary of the Canadian club, says that rumors of difficulty are quite unfounded. No American citizen wishing to enter Canada with his car for touring purposes is obliged to carry a passport. It is advisable, however, to possess some means of identification in case, for any reason, it should be necessary to prove one's identity. This is, of course, no more than a wise precaution at all times when traveling outside one's own country, and, so far as Canada is concerned, American visitors are assured of a ready welcome, as usual.



A Better Car, With More Power For $100 Less

A larger car, with more room, but less weight

A tripled output to meet the demand

In announcing the new Allen Models for 1916 we have absolute confidence that exceptional merit and genuine value will speak for themselves.

In this new car is concentrated all the best ideas and skill of experienced engineers who are among the best in the country. You will quickly recognize it as a truly remarkable achievement in automobile manufacturing.

The Allen car is built by a reliable company, strongly financed and permanently established—an important point in purchasing a car. There are two models; 5 passenger touring car, and roadster.

HERE are a few Allen features: Unit Power Plant, with Long Stroke Allen-Sommer Motor, Full 37 H. P. 3½ inch bore x 5 inch stroke; Westinghouse Electric Equipment—Starting, Lighting, Ignition; Full-Floating Rear Axle with pressed steel housing; 55 inch under-slung rear springs; 112 inch wheel-base; Stewart-Warner vacuum fuel feed system; easy operating yet positive Clutch and Brake; One-man top. In fact, all the latest refinements and best equipment; beautiful and durable finish.

To describe the comfort and easy riding qualities of the Allen is impossible, but the delightful sensation when riding quickly proves the wonderful balance and correct manufacturing principles. Let us show you the new Allen and take you for a spin.

Six and Twelve Cylinder Cars

Our First "Highway" Model is Here

Many of these Highway models—Six and Twelve cylinder cars—were bought "sight unseen" because car owners know that the name National is a sufficient guarantee. The first Highway Six is now here.

National was the first American factory to build sixes, and motors produced by the National factory, have won world-wide fame. The National twelve cylinder motor is built in their own plant and by the same organization that has produced all previous National successes.

Highway Six $1690

These new cars named themselves "Highway" because of their capacity to conquer all distances, and do so with ease and comfort.

The bodies are long, low and gracefully designed. National aisleway front seats. Movable driver's seat. Special axle design permits narrow turning radius. 128 inch wheel-base; National cantilever springs, six cylinder, 3½ x 5¼. Twelve cylinder, 2¾ x 4¾.

Highway Twelve $1990

It may safely be said that the National is the best possible car immediately before you cross the line into the extravagant class.

TRAVEL OVER LINCOLN HIGHWAY FAST INCREASING

H. C. Ostermann, Who Is Taking Moving Pictures Along Route, Tells of Pleased Surprise of Those on Tour—Conditions Good.

H. C. Ostermann, in his capacity of Consul at Large for the Lincoln Highway Association, has been constantly driving back and forth over this route for the past two years, both Winter and Summer. He is probably better qualified to note the improvement of the road and the increase in tourist travel than any other individual. He is now directing the taking of the 7,000-foot Lincoln Highway transcontinental feature film. In a statement of conditions, issued last week, he said:

"It becomes more evident each day that overland touring is fast gaining a tremendous headway. The Lincoln Highway is opening the beauties of America to those who have never considered anything but Europe worth while, to those who have been accustomed to spend their Summers at the seaside or mountain resorts.

"Statements from tourists, hundreds of whom have been interviewed by me, show the general astonishment which exists at the untold beauties of America along the Lincoln Highway. The almost uniformly good condition of the Lincoln Highway in fair weather is also a matter of surprise to nine out of ten transcontinental tourists. S. Y. Heebnor, a retired banker of Philadelphia, met the other day en route to the coast, accompanied by his wife and two daughters, said:

"'I never expected to find roads such as we have experienced on the Lincoln Highway during the past few days. People in the East know nothing of the magnificent roads in Illinois and Iowa.'

"The dirt roads of which Mr. Heebnor spoke are one of the most pleasant surprises which await the tourists from other States. They are perfectly crowned, dragged, scraped, rolled, and in many cases oiled. Some of them are 50 feet in width. Mr. Heebnor again expressed the general sentiment very well when he said:

"'My family and I have toured throughout beautiful Southern France, but we are all agreed that there is nothing in rural France that can compare with the great, rolling country of Iowa for real beauty.'

"Mr. Heebnor said he had started from Philadelphia with a full load of planks, shovels, etc., but had kept the express companies busy shipping things back, until, upon reaching Nebraska, he was down to the proper touring weight.

"These statements are simply typical of tourist sentiment. There are no disappointed tourists traveling over the Lincoln Highway. As a matter of fact, they cannot adequately express their delight in the new vistas that each day is unfolding to them. A trip over the highway is necessary to appreciate the importance placed upon it by all the towns situated on the route. Hotels and garages are beginning to improve and enlarge in order to attract and take care of the increasing traffic.

"At the hotel in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, twelve separate touring parties from the East, heading for points west of Omaha, registered after 6 o'clock in one evening. This is simply an instance of the momentum which is being given to transcontinental touring. At desert points such as Fish Springs, Utah, where every passing car can be easily noted, the increase in tourist volume in the past two years has exceeded 500 per cent., from two cars a day in 1913 to eight, nine and ten cars a day on the average in 1915.

"The experience of the Lincoln Highway motion picture film caravan on the coast-to-coast trip should be sufficient to set at ease any mind which is holding back. Almost every class of car is represented and there is yet to occur any mechanical trouble of even minor importance."

How to Reach the Yellowstone.

The Department of the Interior has announced that under certain stringent regulations automobiles will be allowed access to the Yellowstone National Park, beginning Aug. 1. The park, which has been closed so long to the motoring enthusiast, can be most easily reached by the majority of tourists by following the Lincoln Highway as far as Rawlings or Granger, Wyo. From both points it is reported that fair roads run north to the park.

NEWS AND NOTES OF THE AUTOMOBILE TRADE

One of the most interesting announcements which has been made on "Automobile Row" for some time was the news last week of the resignation of Milton J. Budlong as President of the Packard Motor Car Company of New York to become Vice President of the export firm of Gaston, Williams & Wigmore. Mr. Budlong has expressed great regret over severing relations which have been extremely pleasant from every point of view. This regret was shared by all members of the Packard organization, from Henry B. Joy, President of the company, down. Mr. Budlong said he would never have considered the change had it not been that he strongly believed in the ultimate dominance of the United States in many branches of international trade, and felt the opportunity the best one of his career to try his capacity in a field of unlimited activity. He will be succeeded in New York by E. B. Jackson, who, under his supervision, has been manager of the Packard Motor Car Company of Philadelphia, and in Chicago by H. M. Allison, who has held a similar position there for a number of years.

With the announcement of a "six" at $1,145, the Overland has completed a trio of models which, to all intents and purposes, practically blankets the moderate-price market. The roomy body, with its two extra seats, can easily accommodate seven adults. The upholstery throughout is of the finest grade of genuine leather. The wheel base is 125 inches. The cylinders of the motor are cast en bloc. With a bore of 3½ inches and a stroke of 5¼ inches, the motor will easily develop 45 horse power at normal engine speeds. The price includes full equipment.

The $50 profit-sharing check will be mailed in August to 300,000 and more buyers of Ford cars during the last year, and it is not in the nature of a bonus or price reduction, but is reciprocal evidence of good-will.

Features of the Kissel Kar announcements are a new 32 "four" at $1,050; reduction in price of the 36 "four" from $1,450 to $1,250; a new touring model of the 42 "six" at $1,485; a new four-passenger roadster for mounting on all chassis; a new detachable coupe top and improvements in construction of the all-year car.

The Anderson Electric Car Company announced Aug. 12 that the new prices on its 1916 models would range from $1,975 to $2,275. For 1916 these Detroit electric cars embody a number of refinements typifying the latest practices in automobile engineering. Another noteworthy change in the policy of the company for 1916 is the adoption of the one-chassis basis production. Production has been doubled.

L. J. Ollier, sales manager, was recently elected a Director of the Studebaker Corporation of America.

Specifications of the Sun Light Six, which was recently announced, have just been made public. The motor is of L-head design, with six cylinders, 3 by 5 inches. It is of the high speed, high compression type, guaranteed to develop fifty horse power on the block test. The cars will be finished in only one color—Brewster green body, hood, and fenders, with black running gear. A roadster and a five-passenger touring car will be furnished on the same chassis. The price will be considerably less than $1,000.

Ralph H. Upson of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, winner of the International Balloon Trophy in the race that started at Paris in October, 1913, has been selected a member of the special committee to cooperate with the Naval Advisory Board in its consideration of the application of aircraft to warfare. F. A. Seiberling, President of the company, also has been made a Director of the American Society of Aeronautic Engineers, organized at the suggestion of Thomas A. Edison, to act with the Naval Advisory Board, of which Mr. Edison is Chairman.

General Manager Churchill announces the appointment of Orlan F. Baughman as sales manager of the Winton Company.

The Stewart Motor Company is showing the new 1916 Allen car, which has just arrived. It has a full five-passenger body, wide doors, unit power plant of 37 horse power, 3¾-inch bore by 5-inch stroke, Westinghouse electric system for starting, lighting, and ignition; 55-inch long underslung rear springs, 112-inch wheelbase, and weighs 2,300 pounds complete. The price is $795.

The withdrawal of the Maxwell Motor Sales Corporation from racing has made possible the transfer of Paul Hale Brunka, contest manager, to a factory position in which he will have charge of the newspaper work of the company, with headquarters in Detroit.

Crossing the continent from Du Bois, Penn., to San Francisco over the Lincoln Highway in exactly twenty-one days of continuous driving is the record just made by H. L. Kriner and D. A. Yingling in a Saxon roadster. With a total mileage of 3,600 miles, Kriner and Yingling used only 158 gallons of gasoline and 10¾ gallons of oil, at a total cost of $34.96.

The Chalmers Motor Company has just announced that Helène Dutrieu, the famous French aviatrice, has been appointed Chalmers distributer for all of France.

Comment on the lines of the new Dodge Brothers' roadster has brought forth the information that this latest model of the big Detroit concern was first modeled in clay, after which patterns were made for the regulation steel bodies.

The 600-foot four-story addition to the plant of the Paige Motor Car Company is rapidly nearing completion. The new building will be used exclusively for the warehousing of surplus stock. The mechanical conveyor system of assembling will soon be in operation. When this is ready the plant will have a capacity of 125 cars a day.

Amos F. White of New York City has been appointed Far Eastern representative for the Detroiter. His territory includes Burma and Ceylon, India, Federated Malay States, Straits Settlement, China, Japan, and Philippine Islands.

SOUNDS WARNING NOTE.

America Taking Lead in Motor Car Design, Says London Autocar.

Americans who have been loyal to American motor cars and trucks may read with interest the following excerpt from an editorial in the Autocar of London, which says, in part:

"What we have to bear in mind all the time is that hitherto Europe led in design. At the present time, owing to the war, Europe has done comparatively little new designing for 1915. On the other hand, America has very largely redesigned its cars, and is showing an activity in the designing department which is greater than anything it has exhibited before in this way. It is therefore obvious that if Europe wishes to retain its share of its home markets, not to mention those beyond the seas, it must keep in mind that one of its valuable assets has been that it has led in design; and although the makers may imagine that the 1914 models which they had when the war began are good enough to sell when it ends, they will find themselves hopelessly outdistanced by the Americans, who will have had new designs once, at least, and, if the war lasts many months longer, twice, during a period when European automobile design has hardly changed at all."

While this editorial refers primarily to touring car types, it is equally true of the design of motor trucks. Before the end of the current year, and consequently before new English truck models are brought out, there will have been a widespread adoption of the internal gear driven rear axle on motor trucks in this country. Added to this is the fact that American-made motor trucks of this type are now being shipped into England in considerable quantities and have been adopted for use on one of the large bus lines.

TO PRINT NEWS OF GEARS.

Association of Axle and Truck Makers Will Issue Booklet.

The Internal Gear Drive Association of Detroit has begun the publication of a booklet that bears the name of the Internal Gear News and is intended for circulation among engineers, motor truck company executives, dealers in motor trucks, &c. The booklet will be issued at intervals of a few weeks and will cover matters of interest in connection with the internal gear drive for motor trucks that do not come within the field of news and trade papers.

It is significant that since Winter every one of the axle and motor truck manufacturing members of the association has increased its facilities to double its former capacity. Other increases which will still further add to the output of the association members before the Summer is over are in progress.

By A. JACKSON MARSHALL,
Secretary Electric Vehicle Association of America.

That anything as distinctly modern and prosaic as an industrial truck could have an interesting history seems rather unlikely, yet it is recorded that even the Egyptians and Assyrians had their industrial trucks—of a very primitive type, to be sure—but efficient enough to carry some of the great blocks of stone used in building the pyramids. These early conveyances were nothing more than sledges, which were dragged along roads smoothed and hardened especially to lessen the friction. Sometimes merely a forked tree limb with boards placed across it for a platform was used as a drag. Later friction was lessened by small rollers used on the sledge runners which in time developed into the wheel and axle—one of man's greatest contributions to world progress. This greatest of all mechanical devices was first used on one of these small vehicles by the Assyrians and soon developed the wheelbarrow and cart.

In America the genesis of the modern electric industrial truck is found in the necessity for an automatic device efficient enough to cope with the ever-increasing transportation of baggage and freight and with growing commercial industries. As terminals became larger and baggage rooms, Post Offices, and express depots became longer, a quicker and more capacious truck was demanded, and so one railroad—the Pennsylvania—engaged a mechanical engineer to design an electric hand truck, as it was then called. So successful was this application of the first "electric stevedore" that it was shortly applied to other operations.

When any mechanical device proves itself a labor and a time saver, combining both efficiency and economy, it is only a short time before it becomes popularized, and beginning with 1911—only four years ago—various developments of the electric industrial truck followed each other very rapidly. Today over 1,000 of these modern carriers are used in the United States and Canada. The average layman has but a small conception of the tremendous amount of work being done on piers, in railroad terminals, in industrial plants by these powerful little storage battery trucks.

It is estimated that in the United States alone there is a grand total of 720,000,000 tons of goods every year which pass through the railroad freight and transfer stations. The present lack of system in handling this freight and the tremendous amount of lost time involved represent a yearly loss of more than $80,000,000. With the existing antiquated and inefficient methods there are constant confusion and delay where thousands of conveyances endeavor to get served within a few hours. This causes the transfer mediums to be held for several hours inactive with resulting losses. As the use of the "electric stevedore" increases it is to be hoped that this will influence a further systematized manner of delivery. As their work becomes more thoroughly unified, the freight sheds and docks in many cases will operate on a twenty-four-hour schedule.

With the virtual freedom of city streets great electric commercial vehicles operating silently will transport the goods by night to well-located centres, from which goods may be distributed the following day and delivered when business houses are prepared for their receipt. This seems to be the only way to solve the problem of congested freight piers in cities where increase in size of the terminals is rendered impracticable for physical reasons, the cities in most cases having steadily built up around them. Today the only hope for decreased congestion is increased efficiency such as will enable street vehicles to discharge or receive their loads with celerity, and this must be effected by speeding up the movement of freight over the platforms, in using more efficient transfer means between the vessel holds or freight cars and the vehicle tailboards, and in organizing a system of distributing centres to supplement the cramped terminals.

In railway terminals alone where these modern electric carriers have supplanted the hand trucks it is estimated that there is a total saving of 66 per cent. The electrically propelled baggage truck has proved itself a fixed necessity. We have ceased to marvel at the speed, ease, and efficiency with which these trucks piled high with trunks, bags and boxes deftly wind their way along congested station platforms from train to baggage room, doing the work that formerly required four times as much labor and twice as many trucks. In fact, we have almost forgotten the antiquated old hand truck clumsily pushing its way about congested areas with more strength than system or efficiency.

A short description of the operation of an electric industrial truck will show its simplicity and safety. The controller is inclosed and an automatic cut-off switch minimizes accidents. One handle is used as a controller lever, and the other handle for steering. The controller returns to neutral as the hand is removed from the lever. The cut-off switch cuts off the power when the foot is removed from the brake pedal. In other words, the driver applies the brake simply by releasing the pedal with his foot, and as he releases the pedal the power is cut off automatically.

The driver, standing erect on the end of the truck, with hands on the controller and steering lever, respectively, and foot on the brake pedal, is in the best possible position to guide and control his load. The simplicity of operation does away with the necessity for having expensive operators, the average freight handler being taught to successfully operate a truck, even in congested plants or terminals, in about forty-eight hours. The ordinary baggage truck has a capacity of 2,000 pounds and is used for carrying both baggage and mail.

Time studies made in manufacturing plants and at the great piers in seaport cities indicate beyond a question that "electric stevedores" will supplant the hand truck wherever operating conditions warrant. More than this, the shipping platforms and piers of the future will be designed especially for the more efficient operation of these electrics. They already have a tremendous influence on the short haul. Down in Savannah you may see cotton moved across great piers by "electric stevedores" equipped with hoists and cranes, carrying it directly into the holds of the steamers which bring it north. Two of these little electrics would handle more cotton in one day that twenty freight handlers. At the Bush Docks in Brooklyn you can see the same cotton placed in cars by battery truck cranes, the cars first being "spotted" by the electric. It is taken out of the cars at the mill by the industrial trucks and moved to storage and then to the spinning room by them. Later the bobbins, dye tubs, and beams are moved from mill to mill by small electric shop trucks.

The Commercial Vehicle in a recent issue cites an excellent example indicative of the economy of operating these trucks.

In testimony submitted for the information of the Interstate Commerce Commission, a report of the operation of an electric industrial truck at the Cunard pier, New York City, showed that in handling macaroni in boxes, six electric industrial trucks did the work in nine hours that would have required twenty-four hand trucks. The cost of labor with the electric vehicles was $21, while at current longshoremen's rates it would have cost for labor $87.60 if hand trucks had been relied upon. In handling grapes in barrels at the same dock two industrial trucks did the work of twenty-one hand trucks. In handling mackerel in barrels, two electric industrial trucks did the work of nineteen hand trucks. In handling casks of wine, seven electric industrial vehicles with thirteen men did the work of thirty-six men rolling the casks from one man to the other.

Under the old method of hand-truck operation the cost per ton of handling freight at railroad terminals and steamship piers was 25c, while the cost per ton for performing the same work with electric industrial trucks is but 10 1-3c. Under the old plan the men received a wage of $2 per day, while under the truck-operating system, where men are paid on a tonnage basis, their compensation amounted to $2.40 per day, or an increase of 20 per cent. While the largest field for the "electric stevedore" is in handling baggage and freight at terminals and piers, they are being used to a great extent, however, in factories and industrial plants, and more and larger installations are being made continually.

A valuable application of the "electric stevedore," equipped with a crane, is in laying street curb stones. In warehouses they are used for hoisting, in packing motors, &c. Motor car and other manufacturers are beginning to regard the electric shop truck as indispensable. Warehouses and mills are constantly finding new uses for them as the number of different types increases. The Government has adopted them for its arsenals and a recent special application is found in the new buildings of the Boston Children's Hospital. It is being employed to do the work formerly performed by four men. "During its nine months of service not a dollar has been spent for repairs on this useful vehicle," states The Electrical World. "The truck is used for the transportation of food from the kitchen to the elevators, for collecting and distributing washing, and for other odd jobs, and is operated in all about 20 miles per day. It is geared to run at 6 miles per hour and is charged every other day with energy supplied from the central power plant of the Harvard Medical School.

Various types of these trucks have been developed. They are made small enough to operate in the aisles of factories and storage warehouses, to run on elevators and into freight cars, motor trucks, and horse wagons, yet they carry from one to two tons, the latter being standard capacity. They possess sufficient power to haul trains of trailers, and they can climb grades that would tax the power of mules and would be impracticable for hand trucks. Elevating transfer trucks have been developed by which it is possible to pick up, carry away, and set down interchangeable false platforms with piles of goods on them by automatic means, thus eliminating the last item of hand labor, the loading and unloading of the trucks.

It is obviously too early to determine to the last cent just how much can be saved by the adoption and use of these small trucks. The labor item is the most important one, and it has been found that, where the trucks can be kept busy and the hauls average 200 to 800 feet, each truck will displace at least four, and often five and six men. They can make from 20 to 30 miles on a single charge, while boosting during noon hour will increase this mileage one-third. Although the initial cost of the electric industrial truck, which is $1,000 to $3,000, looms large when compared to the cost of hand-powered equipment, it will save its first cost in four and one-half months with careful operation.

THE "ELECTRIC STEVEDORE" IS DOING GOOD SERVICE IN INDUSTRIAL CAPACITIES

Some drop-frame electric baggage trucks are here shown. These industrial vehicles, usually of 2,000-pound capacity, are being used with much economy on docks and piers and in factories, mills, and warehouses.

MOTOR CYCLE WITH SIDECAR IS GAINING IN POPULARITY

Type Which Carries One or More Extra Persons Seen Frequently on the Roads—It Is Highly Thought of in Great Britain.

Motor cycles with side car outfits are becoming common units in the traffic hereabout, but they have not reached a popularity as yet approaching that which they enjoy in Great Britain. The Motor Cycle of London has the following to say about side cars in a recent issue:

"When the cycle car was boomed a couple of years or so ago there were some people who rashly predicted the end of the side car. Many thought that, at any rate, trade in such machines would fall off considerably, the argument being put forward that every side-carist who could do so would replace his outfit by a cycle car.

"There is no doubt that many men who now run light cars were a year or two ago owners of side-car outfits, but the fact remains that, instead of diminishing, the number of side-car combinations now on the road is greater than ever. Further, there is every indication of the side car retaining and increasing its great popularity. Especially is this popularity noticeable among married people who require an inexpensive type of conveyance, both as regards first cost and running charges.

"During the Summer months, and, to a lesser extent, throughout the Winter, the majority of the side cars one encounters on the road are occupied by the rider's wife or sweetheart, and in many cases a second passenger is carried. The second passenger is probably a youngster, who may be accommodated on the carrier of the motor cycle or in the front of the side car.

"In this connection it may be noted that there are a number of special two-seated side-car bodies on the market which are ideal for taking one grown-up person and a child; in fact, some claim to provide comfortable accommodation for two grown-up persons. En passant, we are not here referring to the double-seated or 'sociable' side cars which were the subject of a recent article.

"The popularity of the modern side car is not far to seek. Moderate in first cost and upkeep and perfected by constant and successful participation in long distance trials and hill-climbing events, it provides the cheapest and at the same time most enjoyable form of motoring extant. The advent of detachable wheels has also benefited the side car and brought it many converts who previously were deterred from purchasing by reason of the fear of being held up with tire troubles. In particular, the detachable wheel is attracting elderly men to the side car. A change of wheels occupies a few minutes only and can be accomplished by a lady if need be."

Detroit Electric

Doubled output for 1916 reduces prices as low as $1975

Last year the Detroit Electric led any enclosed car—either gasoline or electric—in volume of sales. Clearly it won this preference among motor car buyers solely because of its greater value—for many enclosed cars ranked lower in price.

August 15 we reduce the price $600 to $725 per car

Remember—these are the same high quality cars as our 1915 models plus a score or more of 1916 refinements. Even while lowering the price, we bettered the car. In the 1916 Detroit Electric, you will find—we believe—the top place car of its type. We urge you to match it—if you can—in elegance, quality, utility, or value in the entire closed car field—gasoline or electric. This price reduction is possible only because of doubled output.

You get these savings

Our doubled production leads to many economies in all overhead expenses, in purchasing, in advertising, in sales cost, in engineering. All the savings effected by our larger operations we hand on to you—and take our benefit from doubled volume,

Here are the 1916 prices

Model 61 4-Passenger Brougham (Formerly $2,600) — Now $1,975
Model 60 5-Pass. Duplex Drive Brougham (Formerly $3,000) — Now $2,275
Model 59 5-Pass. Rear Drive Brougham (Formerly $2,950) — Now $2,225
Model 58 5-Pass. Front Drive Brougham (Formerly $2,950) — Now $2,250

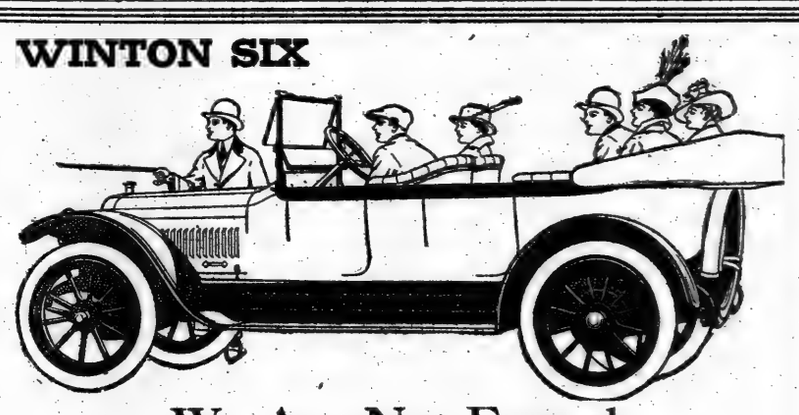
WINTON SIX



We Are Not Forced to Explain

Makers who have lately cut their prices are beginning to explain that the quality of their cars has not also been cut. Car buyers may well demand such an explanation—and doubt it, if it isn't convincing.

Manufacturers in other lines know that prices can't be slashed without the serious likelihood of leaving some quality out of the goods that ought to be in them. Common business sense teaches that.

And you can be sure of the quality of Winton Six cars, for we have not cut our prices, and have no intention of cutting them. We are now manufacturing and throughout the year shall continue to manufacture the 33 H. P. Winton Six without change at $2285. No new model of the $3250 48 H. P. Winton Six will be announced until winter. The price of that car will not be lowered; it would be impossible to maintain its quality at a lower price.

So you can buy a Winton Six and have peace of mind as to both quality and price. And, equally important, you can have your Winton Six finished in your own personal color scheme, so that the car you drive is a distinctly personal possession—not a commonplace vehicle that needs a license plate to distinguish it from your neighbor's car. INTERESTING HAPPENINGS IN MOTORDOM DURING THE WEEK

ROADS TO WATER GAP HAVE NUMEROUS DETOURS

Longest Way Round, Through Tuxedo and Port Jervis, Is Shortest Way There at Present—

Conditions on Various Routes.

The most direct route to the Delaware Water Gap via Morristown and Hackettstown presents certain difficulties at the present time, according to the Journal of the Automobile Club of America. Springfield Avenue, between Newark and Springfield, is rather badly worn and a better route will be found by running west on Central Avenue to East Orange, where turn left into Harrison Street, and then right into South Orange Avenue, through South Orange and the South Mountain Reservation straight into Morristown.

Between Morristown and Chester the road is badly in need of resurfacing, so that it is advisable to use the alternate route via Bernardsville, Far Hills, and Peapack to Chester. The whole route may be materially shortened by turning left into Ridgewood Road in South Orange, and following the route through Milburn, Summit, and Far Hills, turning right at an athletic field about half a mile before reaching the centre of Bedminister, and running north to the end of the road at Chester, where connection is made with the main route by turning left.

The road over Schooley Mountain, between Chester and Hackettstown, is now in fairly good condition, but west of Hackettstown a stretch of several miles along the Pequest River is under construction, and the detour which is provided is not particularly good. On this account it is probably preferable to follow the longer route to the Water Gap via Tarrytown, Suffern, Tuxedo, Goshen, and Port Jervis. Although the road between Harriman and Monroe is closed and a short detour is necessary through Central Valley and Highland Mills, no difficulty will be encountered, as this is all macadam.

The route by way of Tarrytown and Nyack is longer than the route through Hackensack and Ridgewood, but preferable at present, as the road from Arcola to Ridgewood is rough.

The route to Dingmans via Hackensack, Paterson, Pompton, Newfoundland, Franklin Furnace and Branchville offers a very fair average of roads, except a stretch of about three miles between Layton and Dingmans, which is badly in need of repair. In running from Hackensack to Paterson it is best to follow Essex street, as this is both better and shorter than the old route via Arcola.

Good roads will likewise be found on the alternate route to Dingmans through Montclair, Parsippany, Dover Plains, past the northern end of Greenwood Lake to Sparta, and thence through Branchville to Layton.

The alternate route from Dover to Branchville via Netcong, Dover and Newton is not available at present writing, as the road between Newton and Branchville is closed. In short, the Tuxedo-Goshen-Port Jervis route appears to be the preferable one to follow at the present time, even though much longer than any of the other alternate routes to the Gap.

The road from Netcong to Hackettstown through Waterloo is in good condition and thus acts as a useful link between the route to the Water Gap which runs via Lake Hopatcong and then through Morristown and Hackettstown. This road is not practical in the spring or in the fall, however, as it is then used by heavy wagons and badly cut up. It is possible to run from Netcong to Hackettstown by way of Budds Lake, but not in the reverse direction, as the long steep grade and the numerous water-bars make it a hard climb for any except rather high-powered, low-geared cars.

'SCENIC MOTORWAY' COVERS FINE SECTION

Booklet on Tour of the Berkshires, Adirondacks and White Mountains Now Available.

What is said to be one of the most beautiful tours in America is described in a little book called "The Scenic Motorway," the second edition of which has just been issued for distribution on request, by Henry MacNair at 334 Fifth Avenue. This tour touches the most famous resorts in the country and affords the tourist a wide scope of scenic attractions within the compass of a two-week journey.

While in a circular trip such as this one may start at any point with equal facility, the description begins at New York. Following the Hudson River to Poughkeepsie one passes many magnificent estates, and points of historic interest. An alternative is offered at Ossining by way of Bronxville and the Westchester Hills, passing Briarcliff en route. After reaching Peekskill one may take the old river road through Beacon and Cold Spring with its hairpin curves, or go by way of the new State road to Wappingers Falls.

At Poughkeepsie the route leaves the river and goes direct to the famous Berkshire Hills. From this point the main trip goes over the Taconic Range into New York, passes through Albany, and on to Saratoga Springs. Thence a fine State road is followed to Elizabethtown at the eastern gateway of the Adirondacks. Here one may visit Lake Placid, Loon Lake, and Saranac Lake, or go direct to Plattsburg on Lake Champlain. A delightful side trip is offered into Montreal, with its memories of past glories and present commercial activity. Crossing a ferry to the Islands of Lake Champlain a wonderful road is followed all the way into Burlington.

The direct route from the Berkshires to Burlington through the heart of the Green Mountains can be made in a day over excellent gravel roads and is recommended for those whose time is limited. It reaches the famous Ekwanok golf links at Manchester after passing through the Northern Berkshires, whose centre is Williamstown.

From Burlington two ways are offered through the White Mountains. The shorter and to many the more attractive route is through Newport on Lake Memphremagog, and on to Dixville Notch; a remarkable bit of natural scenery, with diminutive Lake Gloriette to complete the picture. Thence one may go direct to Bethel, Me., joining the other route, which goes through the heart of the White Mountains, touching at Bethlehem, Profile, Bretton Woods, and Crawford Notch, all with splendid hostelries and fine views of the Presidential Range. The grandeur and charm of this section is fully brought out in the swing down through Crawford Notch and up through Pinkham Notch, which practically encircles the range.

At Bethel another option is offered to those who wish to explore Maine with its many charming resorts of lake, river, and hill, but the present incomplete system of State highways in that section acts as a bar to many who want to keep on macadam and improved roads. From Portland the road runs well back from the shore until Portsmouth is reached and then the run is made to Newcastle Island, where the Russo-Japanese Peace Commissioners had headquarters. The route now follows the famous North Shore with its fine estates and picturesque land and sea scapes. Among the charming resorts passed are Rye Beach, York Beach, Swampscott, and Revere Beach.

Leaving the "Hub City" the route now runs through the Fens on a winding parkway, and beyond Mattapan passes through a stretch of almost wild country with few villages of importance. At Fall River the route to Cape Cod points turns to the left and the route continues into Rhode Island to Newport. At Newport a double ferry is crossed to the mainland and in a short drive Narragansett Pier is reached, second only to Newport in social importance.

The Shore Road is of little scenic interest to New London, but there one finds much to see. The last day's run is made along the Connecticut shore through New Haven, the seat of Yale University, and thence to New York.

LAMPS' GLARE ANALYZED.

Secretary Hugo Says Better Rear Lights Would Alleviate Evil.

The dazzling effect exercised by the powerful headlights which are required at night by a motor car on country roads is an undoubted nuisance to other users on the road, according to Francis H. Hugo, Secretary of State, and as motorists are among the sufferers from it they would welcome an effective remedy as cordially as other sections of the community.

"The functions of a headlight are twofold," said he last week. "To enable the driver to see the course of the road and to reveal to him the presence of other vehicles upon it. Of those the second is probably the more important, and the possibility of relying on less powerful lamps would be distinctly increased if all the vehicles on the road could be rendered as it were self-evident.

"Vehicles commonly carry a light showing the direction in which they are proceeding, but only recently a law required them to exhibit a rear light. Consequently a motor car has to carry head lamps sufficiently powerful to reveal vehicles it is overtaking, for the present 'lights on all vehicles' requirement is not effectively enforced. Thus, the glare from headlights is the penalty which the community has to pay for refusing to make all vehicles take proper measures for their own protection."

TO PARK ELECTRICS FREE.

Plans Completed for Much-Desired Service to Owners in Chicago.

A long desired service for the users of electric vehicles in Chicago has recently been put into effect through the efforts of the Electric Vehicle Association of America. It is a system of parking waiting electrics in the shopping district of Chicago. As many cities have laws denying the privilege of cars standing stationary for any length of time at the curb in city streets, there is sometimes considerable hardship if one does not have a chauffeur.

That an electric obviates the necessity of employing a chauffeur is considered one of its greatest advantages. However, women who run their own cars have realized for some time how difficult it is to use them for shopping purposes in the loop. Appreciating this difficulty, several garages have established, under the auspices of the association, a downtown parking service for their customers, enabling them to leave their cars at the electric shop of the Commonwealth Edison Company, where a licensed chauffeur drives it to the park and returns it again whenever ordered.

NEW TOUR BOOK OUT.

Three Attractive Trails Through Empire State Are Outlined.

A new book issued by the Empire Tours Association, with maps and running directions, covers an attractive scenic section of the eastern United States. Three trails are mapped, the Onondaga, the Iroquois, and the Adirondack, all of which lead the tourist to spots famed in the history of the Empire State.

The Onondaga trail begins in New York City and follows the Hudson to Albany, leading indirectly to the Berkshires, which lie east of the Hudson Valley. En route the motorist may visit Bronxville, White Plains, Briarcliff Manor, Lake Mahopac, Pawling, Mount Beacon, Waterbury, Millbrook, Pittsfield, and West Lebanon, while on the direct route there is Poughkeepsie and the other Hudson River towns. From Albany the trail continues through the Mohawk Valley as far as Buffalo, through Schenectady, Amsterdam, Little Falls, Utica, Syracuse, Auburn, Canandaigua, Avon, Le Roy, Batavia, and other cities.

From Buffalo a choice of return routes is offered. If one prefers to continue on the Onondaga trail, the road leads to Dansville, Watkins Glen, Elmira, Owen, Binghamton, Cooperstown, Oneonta, from which Highmount in the Catskills is reached, as is also Cortland and Middleburg. The tourist now begins to enter the famous Catskill Mountains, the trial taking in Kaaterskill, Catskill, Kingston, Newburg, Goshen, Monroe, Nyack, and Hastings.

The Adirondack trail may be followed from Buffalo if one intends to visit the St. Lawrence River and the Lake Ontario regions, and Chazy, Plattsburg, Bluff Point, Ausable Chasm, Cascade Lakes, Wilmington, Westport, Lake Placid, Port Henry, Schroon Lake, Chestertown, Lake George, Marion, Lake Luzerne, Glens Falls, and Troy, with side trips to Rutland, Manchester, Williamstown, and Newtonville.

The Iroquois trail covers another section of the State, and enables the motorist to reach Bemus Point, Jamestown, and other points in the western part of the Empire State. This book, with complete running directions and maps, may be had from the Secretary of the association, E. N. Bain, Newburg, N. Y., or from any other member of the association.

COLE 8

The Standardized Car

The Forward Step in Motoring

The multiple cylinder principle marks a new era in motor car building. It is accepted as the greatest improvement in automobiling history. It has made a firm place for itself by increasing power efficiency to a point never known before.

If you'll try out a Cole Eight, you'll know the new satisfaction in this great power under instant control at any speed, without gear shifting. You'll know equal confidence on good roads and bad. You'll take the difficult hills on high with ease only possible with the multiple cylinder engine.

Character marks Cole Eight construction. It includes the Cole direct drive, helical bevelled gears and the convenient instrument board. The top is easily and quickly adjusted. The deep comfortable seats give ample room for seven adults. In refinement of appearance and finish no detail has been left out.

CHANDLER SIX
$1295

A Plain Talk About Automobile Values

PEOPLE are asking their friends a lot of questions about the relative values of the best known automobiles.

Interest centers chiefly, of course, in the light-weight sixes, because the light-weight six is the most popular type of car, and much of the interest centers in the Chandler.

The Chandler cannot supply the entire demand for light-weight sixes, but for thorough, careful purchasers who want to be very sure of relative values, there are some interesting facts well worth considering.

Such a purchaser will not forget that the Chandler was the first high-grade six selling for less than $2000 and weighing less than 3000 pounds. He will not forget that the Chandler pioneered the way for light-six domination and established the Light-Six Era. That was three years ago. The price was $1785.

The popularity of the Chandler Idea has grown by leaps and bounds ever since.

Other light-sixes quickly followed into the market but the Chandler has occupied a position of leadership all the way. A leadership in quality and price. And now Chandler is building Ten Thousand cars a year and still unable to fill the Chandler demand.

A vital element in the history of Chandler success—and the secret of Chandler high quality and low price this year—is the fact that essentially the Chandler car of this season is the Chandler car of the first season.

There has never been any reason for bringing out a radically new model. The original Chandler, in all its principles of design and construction, was final. From season to season we have refined it and beautified it and added the newest standard features of equipment. And this season we have brought out the really wonderful new seven-passenger body. But, from the mechanical standpoint, the car is practically unchanged. That marvelous Chandler motor—the foundations of Chandler supremacy—has remained untouched.

Standing pat on a model that was, and is, right, we have avoided costly experimentation that must attend the production of new models. We have lowered our overhead to a minimum. We have been enabled to make sensational price reductions from season to season and still give better value.

The world's greatest manufacturer of low-priced cars has built his tremendous success on this policy, and the public knows—you know—it is the policy that gives the purchaser "most for his money."

That is why no other car of like size and character has caught up with the Chandler price.

From $1785 this price last year went down to $1595. And this year down to $1295. In practical effect, Chandler offers you a $1785 car for $1295. And we ask you to try to match its value in any other car.

Look them over, all well-known makes. Study them carefully. Compare them part by part with the Chandler. Compare them with the Chandler for comfort and power and snap and finish and style. Then you will realize how much it means to you as a purchaser that the Chandler was right in the first place and that the Chandler manufacturing policy has been a policy of devotion to this one model.

DODGE BROTHERS
ROADSTER

A roadster designed to be all that a roadster should be.

A car capable of carrying two people in continuous comfort.

You can see, better than we can tell, how beautiful it is.

Modeled in clay, when it was first conceived, it was re-modeled, again and again, till the last harsh line was eliminated.

The body is built of steel, with the usual useless framework entirely eliminated.

As a result there is extraordinary storage space at the rear—more than sufficient for all the luggage two might take on a long tour.

A light car, with all the advantage which that lightness adds to the powerful motor—but a stout, staunch, strong car, and a steady one as well.

QUERIES FROM READERS AND ANSWERS TO THEM

Readers of The Times are particularly requested to read the following before sending queries to the Query Department:

No answers can be given regarding legal or medical matters, card problems, propriety in dress, correctness of English sentences, and values of stamps and coins, nor to questions of a trivial character or of concern only to the questioner.

To receive attention every question must bear the name and address of the person sending it. This does not necessarily mean that the name will be published when the question is answered; only the initials will be used if the questioner so desires. No attention will be paid to queries to which the name and address of the sender are not appended.

Hundreds of letters are received by this department, so that it is obviously impossible to answer all of them immediately. In many cases there must be a certain amount of unavoidable delay.

Submarine Warfare.

WILLIAM M. CARTER.—Did the German Government officially declare that they would stop submarine war on merchant vessels if the English Government allowed food to be shipped to German people? On what date did Germany declare war on France? Where can I get copies of French, Russian, Turkish, and German newspapers?

The following is taken from THE TIMES of May 12:

"In Germany's reply to the American protest against certain features of the war zone order, which was received in Washington Feb. 15, occurred this expression: 'If the United States * * * should succeed at the last moment in removing the grounds which makes that procedure (submarine warfare on merchant vessels) an obligatory duty for Germany, * * * and thereby make possible for Germany legitimate importation of the necessaries of life and industrial raw materials, then the German Government * * * would gladly draw conclusions from the new situation.'

"In the German note to the American Government justifying the sinking of the Lusitania received in this country last Monday night (May 11,) appears this clause: 'In spite of the German offer to stop submarine war in case the starvation plan was given up.'

"These two expressions are referred to in the British official statement in these words: 'It was not understood from the reply of the German Government (of Feb. 14) that they were prepared to abandon the principle of sinking British vessels by submarine. Whether this may be regarded as an opening for the renewal of the German offer in explicit terms, with the implication that England might accept it, is not explained.'"

Germany declared war on France on Aug. 3, 1914.

Copies of the French and German papers may be seen at the Public Library, Forty-second Street, in the newspaper room. Turkish papers are to be seen in the Oriental room, 219, and Russian in Room 216. Names and addresses could be procured in this way, and then you might write direct to the papers, enclosing a small sum to cover postage.

Charles Chaplin.

MAE SCHEELER.—Charles Chaplin is an Englishman.

Killed in War.

L. B. S.—Can you give me the number of soldiers killed in each warring nation?

According to some recent figures, it was as follows up to June 1: Russia, 1,250,000; France, 400,000; England, 181,000; Germany, 1,630,000; Austria, 1,610,000; Belgium, 49,000; Serbia, 64,000; Turkey, 110,000; Japan, 300. These figures were compiled from official sources of estimates and published July 8. Other estimates vary greatly from this.

Irish Volunteers.

B. P. W.—Will you give the dates of departure of the first Irish volunteers from Ireland for the present war? How many enlisted? Did they enlist as district parties? What was the understanding in reference to the Home Rule bill at the time King George signed the bill?

The men enlisted for service in the present war from Ireland number 120,741. The date of departure of the first volunteers has not been found recorded; 24,000 enrolled as National Volunteers; 70,000 Catholics joined different regiments.

The Home Rule bill passed its third reading on May 25, 1914. It was then rejected by the House of Lords. On June 23 Mr. Asquith introduced his compromise to exclude Ulster if, after the poll was taken, the majority favored that province's exclusion. Representatives from Ulster would be sent to Westminster. The Lords radically amended this before the third reading on July 14. The King then called a conference on the subject and the Ulster men prepared for civil war. There were four compromise meetings, but the conference was unable to agree. The Government was determined to put the bill on the statute book, and the Ulster Unionists were as determined to fight sooner than yield.

Then Great Britain was drawn into the great war, and a truce was called in the battle for Home Rule. On Sept. 15 Mr. Asquith gave a pledge in the House of Commons that the bill should not come into effect until an arrangement should be made to secure the general consent in Ireland and in Great Britain. He said that it was unthinkable to employ force in Ulster. With these provisions the bill received the final assent of the King on Sept. 18.

Captain of the Emden.

MARGARET ALDEN BIDDLE.—The Captain of the Emden was Karl von Mueller. After the destruction of his ship off Cocos Island by the Australian cruiser Sydney he was sent as a prisoner of war to England, where he has remained.

New York Curb Market.

E. B. HOLLINGSWORTH.—The New York Curb was closed July 31, 1914, and reopened Nov. 16, 1914.

Shrapnel Fuse.

RALPH R. WHITEHEAD.—What is a shrapnel fuse and why does it take so long to make?

The projectile itself comprises a forged shell that carries lead bullets and a bursting charge. Screwed into the front end is the combination timing and percussion fuse, which can be set so as to explode the shell at any desired point and from which the flame for exploding the bursting charge is conveyed through a powder timing train and a tube filled with powder pellets down through the diaphragm of the powder pocket. The fuse is an extremely accurate piece of mechanism, largely produced from screw machine parts, some of which are forged previous to machining. An American factory takes ten hours to complete an entire shell, fuse and all. The British factories take from twelve to fifteen hours.

Eighteenth Century Pastels.

Mrs. CHARLES H. GORDON.—What artist in the eighteenth century between 1700-50 used pastel as a medium for portraits? Can you give me the name of one or more private collectors of art treasures?

Quentin Latour is called the king of pastel. He executed portraits in this medium of sovereigns, queens of beauty, actresses, military chiefs, writers, dancers, &c. Other well-known pastelists of this period were La Rosalba and Perronean, while Chardin, Greuze, and Boucher also used the medium.

Mrs. John Gardner of Boston has a celebrated collection of Italian art. Henry C. Frick of New York is a noted collector, who recently added the Fragonard panels to his gallery.

Bulwark and Princess Irene.

E. H. G.—Kindly give dates and position of the two British ships sunk by internal explosions.

The Bulwark, 15,250 tons, sank on Nov. 25 off Sheerness. The Princess Irene, a liner serving as an auxiliary cruiser, of 6,000 tons, sank May 27, also off Sheerness.

Moon's Phases.

L. S.—When does the moon go into its different phases, for instance scorpio, capricorn, &c.?

The phases of the moon usually mean the moon's completion of a revolution in 27 days 7 hours and 43.1-5 minutes, which compose a lunar month, and during which the moon passes from the new moon to the first quarter, full moon, and last quarter. The sun is usually spoken of as being in the constellation of Sagittarius, Capricornus, &c. In January the constellation is Sagittarius, and the new moon appeared Jan. 15. February is Capricornus, new moon Feb. 13; March, Aquarius, new moon March 15; April, Pisces, new moon April 14; May, Aries, new moon May 13; June, Taurus, new moon June 12; July, Gemini, new moon, July 11; August, Cancer, new moon Aug. 10; September, Leo, new moon Sept. 9; October, Virgo, new moon Oct. 8; November, Libra, new moon Nov. 7; December Scorpio, new moon Dec. 6.

Acid Reaction on Metal.

O. J. PHELPS.—Can you give me the names of a standard text-book on acids and their action on metals?

There are special works on the action of particular acids, but no general text-book upon the action of acids on metals. A standard text-book on chemistry will give the action of each particular acid upon particular metals. "A General Chemistry for Colleges," by Alexander Smith, published by the Century Company is such a work. Volume II. "The Metals," by Thorpe and Schlemmer's "Treatise on Chemistry" might be useful. Both books may be consulted in the Science Room of the Public Library.

Bluestocking.

READER.—Is the term "bluestocking" applied to a literary pedant, or to a member of the aristocracy to denote blue blood?

The term "bluestocking" was originally applied to the wearers of blue or gray home-made worsted stockings, as opposed to those who wore the silk of court or ceremonial dress. It was so applied to the Sixth Parliament of 1653.

About 1750 it came to be used in connection with those London assemblies where learned or literary conversation took the place of cards and gossip, characterized by studied plainness of dress on the part of some of the guests. At first it was used for both sexes, later only for ladies. At first it meant only a member of the Bluestocking Club, but later a woman of learning, or a literary woman.

Originally a term of contempt, implying neglect on the part of such women of their duty and departure from their proper sphere, it is now hardly used except historically or humorously.

Caroline Islands.

A.—Did Japan or England seize the Caroline Islands from Germany? Is Florida listed among the prohibition States?

Japan seized the Caroline Islands and a number of other small islands in the Pacific formerly belonging to Germany. Florida has local option, fee $1,000.

Peace Treaties.

M. A. G.—Did Bryan make treaties with different countries to the effect that if trouble arose between the United States and another country, war should not be declared until the question had been discussed for one year? Please give a brief outline of such a treaty and state which countries did not sign it.

The President's peace proposal was to submit all disputes between the United States and a foreign country, when diplomatic efforts fail, to investigation and report by an international commission, the composition of which was to be agreed upon. The two countries were not to declare hostilities until the investigation had been made, and the report of the commission was to be submitted within the time agreed upon between them. A supplementary memorandum by ex-Secretary of State Bryan proposed that the commission should be composed of five members, one from each of the contracting parties chosen by their Governments, and one chosen by each party from some other country, the fifth to be agreed upon by both Governments.

He suggested that one year should be the time within which the investigation should be made and the report submitted. Also that the United States Government was prepared to consider the question of maintaining the status quo as to military and naval preparation during the period of investigation. In substantially this form, thirty treaties had been approved by the Senate up to December, 1914, except that between the Dominican Republic and Panama, and the U. S. treaties with Guatemala, Great Britain, Costa Rica, Norway and Portugal have become effective by the exchange of ratifications.

The following countries, besides these, have signed the treaty: Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua, Netherlands, Bolivia, Persia, Denmark, Switzerland, Venezuela, Italy, Greece, Sweden, Peru, Uruguay, Argentina, Brazil, Chile, France, Paraguay, Spain, China, Russia, Ecuador.

Prisoners Taken by Allies.

E. HELMBOLD.—No complete official figures of the number of prisoners taken by the Allies have been issued. Italy stated on July 12 that she had 7,000 Austrian prisoners, and Serbia took 60,000 Austrians at the beginning of the war.

Verdun Forts.

ALEX. A. WINETT.—Berlin has made no official announcement of the capture of Verdun forts. Her troops are still some distance from Verdun.

Chautauqua Lectures.

ROSE JACKSON.—We suggest that you write to Frank Chapin Bray, 23 Union Square, New York, for information concerning the Chautauqua Society lectures.

Great Britain and the Colonies.

A. W. HAYNES.—Have you statistics showing the number of men Great Britain, Canada and Australia have under arms, exclusive of the navy, in comparison with the male population of military age who are fit for military service? Also give killed and wounded.

No such statistics are available. Great Britain is said to have 8,000,000 men fit for military duty, 3,000,000 of whom are now under arms. Australia is said to have offered 100,000 men to the mother country. She has three brigades at the Dardanelles. The number of Canadians under arms is estimated at 175,000, 50,000 of these are at the front.

In 1912 the total male population of Australia was 2,466,968; how many available for active service not stated. The total male population of Canada in 1911 was 3,821,936, and of Great Britain 22,016,661.

On July 8 the total British casualties were estimated at 428,000, of which 116,000 were killed. It is said that the enormous casualties are due to the British method of computing the wounded. In France and Germany only those who are put hors de combat are counted; in Great Britain even the slightly wounded.

Australian casualties are not stated. On June 7 Canadian casualties were estimated at 1,213 killed, 5,230 wounded and 1,565 missing.

Venus of Milo.

A. B.—Are the proportions of the Venus of Milo generally accepted as a standard of feminine beauty? What are the they? Where is the original of the statue?

The proportions of the Venus of Milo, which are accepted as the artistic standard, are as follows:

Height	5.4	Calf	13.2
Weight	122	Ankle	7.4
Neck	12.5	Upper arm	12.6
Chest	33.0	Forearm	9.6
Chest, full	35.1	Wrist	5.9
Waist	26.0	Shoulder	34.6
Hips	38.0	Foot (length)	8.9
Thigh	25.5	Arms (outstretched)	68.0
Knee	13.8

The original is in the Louvre at Paris.

Rain and European War.

J. S. REID.—The recorded rainfall for this country has not yet equaled records of other years when no European conflict took place.

Citizenship of Children.

J. S.—Your minor children become citizens when you are naturalized.

Teutonic Armies.

M. FEHNAS.—The Austro-Hungarian Army is usually included in the term "Teutonic armies."

Meaning of Foreign Phrases.

C. NOBLE.—Will you please give the meaning of the following words and phrases: Rapprochement, communiqué, horribili dictu?

Rapprochement means the bringing together or drawing nearer of things. Its secondary meaning is reconciliation. Communiqué means a communication. It is usually applied to an official announcement or notice, especially when made to newspapers by the Government, or by Generals in warfare. Horribili dictu means horrible to relate.

Quotations.

Z. Y. X.—Is it considered right to take the exact words from a well-known poem or an author who has been dead for some time and use them as part of the text for a play on the same topic as the poem?

It is usually better to place the quotation marks in order to give the credit where it belongs. If, however, it is sufficiently well known to be generally recognized, they may quite properly be omitted.

National Anthems.

L. U.—Which is considered our national anthem, "The Star-Spangled Banner" or "America"? At which song do the people stand?

"The Star-Spangled Banner" is recognized in the navy as the official national hymn. Neither song has been officially declared our national anthem, and people are apt to stand at the playing of either.

Declarations of War.

H. FOLKERS.—Austria declared war on Serbia on July 28, Germany on France Aug. 3, England on Germany Aug. 4, Japan on Germany Aug. 23, Italy on Austria May 23, 1915, to take effect May 24.

Pierre de Coulevain.

AUGUSTA CHOATE.—Will you kindly give me any information you can about the Frenchwoman who writes under the name of Pierre de Coulevain and her standing as an author.

Pierre de Coulevain was the pen name of Mme. Favre de Coulevain, who died Aug. 21, 1913. Her novels take a high place, although they are more read abroad than in her home country. They are perhaps too cosmopolitan for the average French person to enjoy. Nevertheless, the French Academy crowned her "Eve Victorieuse." Her books are remarkable for their vivid impressions and for the keen observation of life and interest in national characters for which she is known.

Her life was a varied one, and she passed much time among the different societies which she describes. Her principal works are "Noblesse Americaine," "Eve Victorieuse," "Sur la Branche," "L'Ile Inconnue," and "Au Coeur de la Vie."

Art Schools.

IRENE MARKS.—Please give me information concerning schools of art and designing, day and night, pay and non-pay, located in the city.

The Art Students' League, 215 West Fifty-seventh Street. Tuition, $90; Summer school, $20.

Cooper Union, Third Avenue and Eighth Street, with Woman's Art School, which is free.

National Academy of Design, 109th Street and Amsterdam Avenue. Free; entrance fee, $10.

New York School of Applied Design for Women, 160 Lexington Avenue; $75.

New York School of Fine and Applied Arts, 2,237 Broadway; $100.

Independent School of Art, 1,947 Broadway; fee, $120.

Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, evening classes; $40 for eight months.

Pratt Institute, Brooklyn; normal course, $75; other courses, $60.

Sculptor Named Razzi.

READER.—No mention of a sculptor named Razzi has been found. There is a sculptor, not at all well known, named Mario Raggi. Razzi, correctly spelled Bazzi, was a painter, called Il Sodoma, born 1477, died 1547, in Siena, Italy. He belonged to the Florentine school and was celebrated for his frescoes. His works are mostly preserved in churches and in private collections.

Problems of Citizenship.

D. DRUMMOND.—What is the nationality of a boy born in the United States of unnaturalized parents? Can he be naturalized to become a citizen of the United States? Can a man born of United States citizens living abroad become President of the United States? What name would you give to a man born of English parents in China? To one born in the United States of parents still giving allegiance to the English flag?

Both Great Britain and the United States claim as citizens all children born within their respective borders, whether their parents are naturalized or not. A child born of United States citizens living abroad is considered to be native born. A child born of English parents in China is considered an English subject. In the case of your last question, both England and the United States might claim his citizenship. The child is considered by the United States to be a citizen of the country.

National Banks.

S. A. S.—Would you please be kind enough to tell me the difference between national, savings, State, and private banks?

The American system of national banks owes its existence to necessities following the civil war. On Feb. 25, 1863, an act was passed providing for the establishment of a national currency and offering privileges to banks organized under Federal charters, which would issue circulating notes only when secured by the deposit of Government bonds.

National banks are thus those banks which are organized with Federal charters. State banks have State charters. Only national banks can issue notes. Private banks and trust companies have developed greatly of late years, have won, however, certain other privileges. Savings banks pay interest on deposits, and moneys thus deposited are not usually subject to immediate checking account. Various changes in the country's banking system have of course taken place with the Currency act and the establishment of the reserve banks, and a notable innovation was Secretary McAdoo's decree in time of financial uncertainty recently that national banks might issue notes without the actual deposit of Government bonds, other securities being accepted instead.

The Custom House Statues.

A. S. CHALMERS.—Please inform me through your valuable Query Department what the four groups of statuary at the main entrance of the United States Custom House, Bowling Green, New York City, represent.

The four statuary groups at the entrance to the New York Custom House represent the continents. They are the work of Daniel Chester French.

A French Commissioner.

JAY E. SEE.—Toward the end of the Revolution the French Government sent over a Commissioner, who was in Virginia at the time of the raids conducted by Tarleton, and was instrumental in warning Jefferson at Monticello of the approach of the British. What was his name?

In 1781 a M. Jouitte was at Monticello. Learning of the approach of Tarleton he "jumped on a fleet horse and rode into Charlotte, where the Assembly was meeting, thus warning them and allowing the members to escape."

Two Actresses.

JAY E. SEE.—Miss Julia Arthur is Mrs. Benjamin P. Cheney, and Miss Julia Neilson is the wife of Frederick Terry.

Benedict Arnold.

J. Z.—Benedict Arnold was buried in England. He died in London, June 14, 1801.

Colonel Astor.

T. A. F.—Can you tell me where I can get a file of The Sunday Mercury, the publication of which ceased thirty years ago? It is not in the Public Library. Also can you give me the military record of John Jacob Astor during the civil war?

The Query Column cannot supply names and addresses, and cannot, therefore, take up your first question. The late Colonel John Jacob Astor was born in 1864 and served in the Spanish-American war. He was made Lieutenant Colonel of United States Volunteers in May, 1898. He assisted Major General Breckinridge, Inspector General of the United States Army, in his inspection of camp and troops at Chickamauga Park, was assigned to duty on the staff of Major General Shafter, and served in Cuba in the operations ending in the surrender of Santiago. He was a Colonel on the staff of Governor Levi P. Morton of New York.

New York Questions.

AN OLD-TIMER.—Will you kindly answer three questions for an old-timer who has returned to New York after thirty years' absence? (1) When was the Metropolitan Opera House opened, and with what opera? German? (2) When was the big arch of St. John the Divine erected? (3) When was work started on the Steinway tunnel?

The present building of the Metropolitan Opera House, at Broadway and Fortieth Street, was opened Aug. 22, 1883, under the management of Henry Abbey, with "Faust" in Italian; Christine Nilsson and Campanini sang the principal rôles.

The cornerstone of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine was laid on St. John's Day, Dec. 17, 1892, Bishop Potter officiating.

Work was started on the Steinway tunnel in 1905.

Bellevue Hospital.

J. B. McA.—Please tell me how Bellevue Hospital was acquired by the City of New York. Some say a French gentleman gave it as a present, others that it was a secular home for incurables. If a man who is pensioned by the Street Cleaning Department for twenty-one years' service and disability should die, would his widow receive any pension from the same source?

Bellevue Hospital, as it is now known, began as an almshouse in 1807, under the direction of the Department of Public Charities and Corrections of New York City. It had no hospital connected with it at that time. In 1816 a new building was erected on the East River shore at the Bellevue Farm. Your second question does not come within the scope of the Query Column, but we would refer you to the Street Cleaning Department direct.

Belgian Neutrality.

L. H. L.—Is the treaty of 1839 the one Great Britain was living up to when she went to the aid of Belgium in the present war? Did more than three nations—Great Britain, Germany, and France—sign this treaty, and is there any signed agreement to which the United States was a party which would make it her duty to protest to Germany against her occupation of Belgium?

The treaty of 1839, upon which Great Britain was acting when she declared war against Germany for the latter's violation of Belgian neutrality, was signed by Great Britain, France, Prussia, Austria, and Russia in guarantee of a treaty entered upon by the rulers of Belgium and Holland to protect forever the independence and neutrality of Belgium. The United States signed no such treaty, but was a signatory to the general provision in The Hague Conference that declared the territory of neutral nations inviolable.

Irishmen in New York.

AN IRISHMAN.—Will you please tell me whether there is in New York City a club, league, or organization for the general welfare and interests of the Irish people in New York? I would like to know whether there is an organization which is trying to bring all the Irish together under one banner for the general good of the Irish in New York.

The Query Column cannot publish names and addresses. There are in New York the Irish Industrial League of America, the Irish Emigrant Society, the Irish Immigrant Society, the Society of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, the American-Irish Historical Society, the Ancient Order of Hibernians of America, the Irish Catholic Benevolent Union, the Loyal Orange Institution.

Wines.

"COUNTRY SCHOOLMARM."—Please give me the earliest known reference to alcoholism or drunkenness or the use of wines. Please tell me what countries in the war have abolished drink, and what their national drinks are.

The history of Noah offers the classic first instance of the use and abuse of wines. Noah was the first to cultivate the vine and to experience the consequences of overindulgence in its products. Vine culture in the East dates back almost as far as we have any historical records of any kind. In Egypt and Greece the first wine making was ascribed to the gods. The Hebrews ascribe their first wine to Noah. The earliest examples of specific wines are the Chalybon wine, produced near Damascus, in which the Phoenicians traded in the time of Ezekiel, and the wines from the Greek Islands of Chios, Lesbos, and Cos. Ever since man in some distant age first discovered the process by which sugar in the grape could be converted into alcohol and carbonic acid, there has been a "temperance question." Records of Oriental civilizations contain many references to it in most ancient times, and from remote ages priests and lawgivers in India, Persia, Palestine, Egypt, Greece, and Carthage made efforts to combat the vice of intemperance. Similar records are known in the civilizations of ancient Peru and Mexico. Since the outbreak of the war France has prohibited the sale of absinthe and Russia of vodka, these being, respectively, the "national drinks" of those countries. England has passed laws controlling the sale of alcoholic liquors in certain localities, so as to minimize the use of spirits in and near the army training camps.

American Hospital Ship.

W. A. AVERILL.—A friend in Europe has been told that an American physician has command of a hospital ship in the United States Navy for a portion of each year and that during the remaining months of the year he pursues his private practice. Could you tell me whether or not this is the practice in the United States Navy? The question is to settle whether such a program would be possible, alternating marine duty and private work.

There is no program of alternation from private practice to service under the Navy Department. The United States Hospital Ship, "Solace," is commanded by a regularly commissioned officer of the Medical Corps of the United States Navy.

German Ships.

M. ALLEN.—Please tell me when the last vessel under German colors left New York or any other American port. Also the number of German vessels now interned in American ports, and the number of British vessels interned in the harbors of the world because of the war between England and Germany.

Vessels sailing from the Port of New York and other American ports during the last two days of July were recalled to harbor Aug. 1, and German sailings of that day were canceled. A German merchant cruiser slipped out of New York Harbor early in the course of the war. The number of German vessels now interned in American ports is fifty-six. British ships have still "the freedom of the seas," and are sailing from their home ports almost regularly.

The Revenue Cutter Service.

A. J. K.—I should like to have detailed information in regard to the United States Revenue Cutter Service, now, I believe, incorporated in the Coast Guard Service. I am especially interested in the cadet system of this service, wishing to learn the method of appointment and examination, length of service at training school, &c.

The United States Revenue Cutter Service is a military arm of the Government, and, organized in 1790, constituted the original naval force of the country. It was placed under the direction of the Treasury Department because there was no Navy Department at that time, which accounts for the rather anomalous condition of the Treasury Department directing and controlling a part of the national system of military defense.

The Revenue Cutter Service is specifically charged with the enforcement of the navigation and customs laws of the United States, the assistance of vessels in distress, the protection of the sealing industry in Alaska, the enforcement of the quarantine laws, the destruction of derelicts and other floating dangers to navigation, and has besides numerous other duties appropriate to its class of vessels. Every Winter, by the direction of the President, several cutters patrol the coasts for the purpose of assisting vessels in distress.

When directed by the President the service co-operates with the navy, and this co-operation has taken place in every war in which the United States has been engaged. There are now in the service 228 commissioned officers and cadets on the active list and 1,500 petty officers and enlisted men. The officers are 1 Captain Commandant, 6 Senior Captains, 31 Captains, 37 First Lieutenants, 42 Second Lieutenants, 34 Third Lieutenants, 8 Cadets of the Line, 1 Engineer in Chief, 6 Captains of Engineers, 28 First Lieutenants of Engineers, 22 Second Lieutenants of Engineers, 17 Third Lieutenants of Engineers, 4 Cadet Engineers, and 2 Constructors. Commissioned officers of the line are appointed from cadet graduates of the Revenue Cutter Academy at New London, Conn.

The cadet course covers three years and embraces professional and academic subjects. Cadets are appointed after competitive examinations, conducted by boards of commissioned officers of the Revenue Cutter Service. Candidates must not be less than eighteen nor more than twenty-four years of age. Appointments to the Engineer Corps are made after competitive examination, and successful candidates are appointed Cadet Engineers for a period of not less than one year prior to being commissioned Third Lieutenants of Engineers. Candidates for the engineering branch of the service must be not less than twenty-one nor more than twenty-six years of age. Further details may be inquired of the school direct.

Bradlaugh and Disraeli.

M. A.—When Charles Bradlaugh entered the British Parliament did he accept the Christian Bible as the instrument of his oath, or, if not, by what means was his oath accepted? Please tell me, also, what happened in that respect in the case of the installation of Benjamin Disraeli as Prime Minister of England.

The legality of Charles Bradlaugh's oath was a moot question during the stormy early years of his career, when he was constantly appearing in the law courts. It was finally declared that he should not be allowed to take the oath, but he claimed that under the Parliamentary Oaths act he should be allowed to take office and give testimony by "affirming," and, after a long struggle, he was victorious in this claim. Benjamin Disraeli was a communicant of the Church or England and, naturally, took the oath on the Christian Bible. His father, Isaac Disraeli, formally withdrew from the Jewish Church after the death of young Benjamin's grandfather, in 1816, Benjamin Disraeli was baptized in the English Church, July 31, 1817, at the age of 13.

Forts in Old New York.

B. FRANK CARPENTER.—I desire information as to the blockhouses, or traces of fortifications, still existing between the Hudson River and Hell Gate on a line approximating to 110th, 123d and 125th Streets.

At Hell gate is a trace of what I find called "Fort Horn." At 110th Street, at the extreme northern verge of Central Park, is a blockhouse called in the Park Department books "Fort Fish." At the intersection of Amsterdam Avenue and 123d Street is a remnant of a blockhouse (walls about knee high, and alleged to have been reduced to that height by the depredations of builders in that vicinity, who helped themselves to its material until arrested in their proceedings by the Park Department,) which I find on some old maps of the city as "Fort Laight" and elsewhere as "Battery No. 3."

On a tablet at the corner of Amsterdam Avenue and 117th Street—set into the wall of a building of Columbia University—the inscription is "To commemorate the defense of the City of New York in the War of 1812. Forts Fish, Clinton and Haight." Possibly "Haight" is error for "Laight," as I cannot find that any fort ever erected by the defenders of the city was ever called "Fort Haight," nor can I find the name "Haight" anywhere in the history of the City of New York. Fort Clinton I think, may have been opposite Fort Fish, but I am by no means sure. I would also like to ask if at the date of the Battle of Harlem Heights there was any blockhouse at "Breakneck Hill," the abrupt escarpment which is today crowned by the buildings of the College of the City of New York. Scarcely any two authorities agree as to the placing of these blockhouses or traces of fortifications.

It is a curious commentary upon the smallness of things 100 years ago that the defense of the city should have been intrusted to little toy forts like "Fort Fish" or "Fort Laight."

"Fort Haight" is "Fort Laight," named in honor of Edward W. Laight, commander of the regiment of City Infantry in New York in 1814. The tablet on the southeast corner of Fayerweather Hall, Columbia University, was erected by the Empire State Society of the Daughters of 1812, Feb. 22, 1900, to commemorate the defenses of New York during the war of 1812. Fort Clinton is opposite, or was opposite, Fort Fish.

In the wall of the Historical Museum of New York City College is a tablet erected by the Sons of the Revolution to record the occupation of the Heights by the American Army after the battle of Harlem Heights.

The Sale of Munitions.

NEUTRAL INQUIRER.—In the April issue of "American Notes in Munich," I found the following statement: "In Bulgaria, Denmark, Greece, Holland, Italy, Norway, Rumania, Spain, Sweden, and Switzerland the sale of arms and munitions of war by private firms is prohibited. That is, no country in Europe allows the sale of munitions to belligerents." Will you kindly tell me if this is true, or to what extent it is true? Will you kindly inform me also whether, or to what extent the British blockade of German ports is an effective blockade?

It is practically impossible at the present time to make any definite statement as to what practices with regard to wartime procedure exist at any given moment in any European country. Italy, for instance, has ceased to be a neutral since the April number of "American Notes in Munch" was published!

Your question has been referred for the most detailed and accurate information possible to an official whose knowledge is as nearly authoritative as may be at this time, and he answers:

"Your inquiry is very difficult if not impossible to answer under present conditions. All customs, laws and traditions seem to have been thrown to the winds, so far as international relations are concerned, and it would be almost impossible to ascertain what agreements are in force from month to month between the countries named. I think it is a good speculation to state that none of them is selling arms or munitions to the belligerents, for it is quite clear that not one of the countries named could spare anything at this critical juncture.

"The fact is that most of them are endeavoring to purchase supplies from the other countries, particularly from the United States. It is quite fair to presume that the sale of arms and munitions of war by private parties is prohibited by the countries named, but if that is so, it is principally for the same reason that countries prevent the exporting of gold or wheat or other commodities which may be needed at home, and Government steps in at this point to protect the nation concerned."

It is not possible to state just how effective the British blockade of German ports has been.

"Galumphing."

L. H. B.—Will you kindly tell me the meaning of the word "Galumphing" in one of your editorials. I have looked at all the dictionaries available and cannot even find the word.

"Galumphing" was invented by Lewis Carroll and used in his celebrated poem "The Jabberwock" in "Alice Through the Looking Glass." Another word coined by him in the same poem, "chortle," is also in common use.

Edwin Booth.

EUGENE HILL.—I have seen it stated in an article that Edwin Booth is buried in Baltimore. Can you tell me when his body was removed from Boston to Baltimore?

Edwin Booth is buried in Mount Auburn Cemetery, Boston, in the same plot with his first wife, Mary Devlin, and their infant son, Edgar. The Booth family plot is in Greenmount Cemetery, Baltimore. Edwin Booth's father, mother, sisters, brothers, and grandfather are buried there.

The Beginning of the War.

JAMES BLAKE.—To settle a dispute, would you kindly inform me whether England declared war on Germany or vice versa, and on what date?

Great Britain declared war on Germany Aug. 4, 1914, following Germany's invasion of Belgium, a country the neutrality of which Great Britain had bound herself by the treaty of 1839 to protect. German troops invaded Belgian territory Aug. 3.

The Harbor of Cherbourg.

EDMOND PETIT.—Kindly let me know if the harbor of Cherbourg, France, is deep enough to dock—landing—a ship of 25,000 tons.

The harbor of Cherbourg is not deep enough to dock a ship of the size you mention. Passengers from ocean-going vessels are landed in tenders.

U. S. Admirals.

D. FOLEY.—Please tell me how many full Admirals there are in the United States Navy.

The "Admiral of the Navy" of the United States is Admiral George Dewey, who is President of the General Board of the Navy and is stationed at Washington. There are twenty-six Rear Admirals on active duty in the navy.

Mine Sweepers.

K. C.—Kindly tell me just what goes to make up a mine sweeper, and how they are protected.

A mine sweeper is a boat the duty of which is to pick up the moored and floating contact mines. The mines are planted in "fields," close together. The "sweepers" either drags a cable, one cable being dragged between two ships, to catch the chain or cable by which the mines are moored beneath the surface, or one sweeper extends a long boom out to one side and a float, and drags with that. Once the mines have been picked up and brought to the surface, it is a simple enough matter to destroy them. Aeroplanes are often used to destroy the mines.

The mine sweeper has no special protection, and of course great care is needed in its work. It is interesting to recall that during our civil war the Mississippi River was full of mines, and the river boats carried long poles with grosspieces, which were attached to the front of the steamers so as to strike and explode the mines before the boats themselves reached the mines. The present-day mines, however, are too powerful for such treatment.

Our Population.

G. M. B.—Will you kindly tell me the population of the United States after the Revolution and of the Colonies before it?

The population of the United States of America by the census of 1800 was 5,308,483. The population of the thirteen Colonies before the outbreak of the Revolution was about 2,500,000.

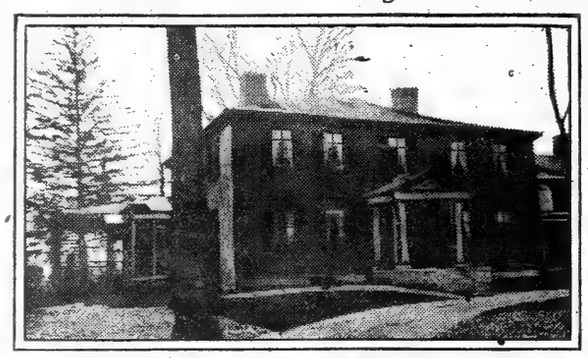
SEWING IN HISTORIC MANSION

Summer Colonists of Stockbridge Aiding War Sufferers at Old Sedgwick Home.



The Old Sedgwick Mansion.

WHEN Mrs. Henry McBurney, the daughter of Colonel Lionel Montague of England, organized in Stockbridge a whirlwind sewing club for the purpose of making supplies for the French Emergency Hospital, she looked about for a convenient meeting place for the body of Stockbridge society women who form the membership. Mrs. Alexander Sedgwick offered the use of the drawing room in the old Sedgwick Mansion on Main Street, which has been the home of the Sedgwicks for one hundred and forty-one years.

The Sedgwick Mansion, on the broad, level, elm-shaded, main street of "Old Stockbridge on the Plain," was built by Theodore Sedgwick, the loved and esteemed friend of George Washington, and a prominent figure in the "Republican Court," which the first President drew about himself. One of these levees was the subject of a painting by the artist Huntington, who executed it in Pittsfield.

At his home in the Berkshires, Judge Sedgwick was for many years the most eminent citizen. He was born in Hartford in 1757, and was educated at Yale College. Having had much experience in law and politics, and having proved himself a true, but extremely conservative patriot in Sheffield and Great Barrington, he removed to Stockbridge in 1758, and built this mansion just in time to have it plundered by Shay's rebels, whom he had opposed with all his might.

The story of the house and its successive owners and occupants is crowded with romantic and historic interest.

Miss Catherine Sedgwick, his daughter, one of the earliest of American women novelists, gave to this house more fame and did much to elevate and refine the people of Berkshire. When she began to write her novels, that dealt with the life of the Americans of the middle class, she created a distinct form of national literature. This was at once recognized in England. Leading reviews devoted much editorial comment to her work. While Miss Sedgwick had little dramatic ability or skill in the making of plots, she depicted human character with a rare fidelity of comprehension, and could make from simple domestic life a charming series of pictures and experiences.

The Westminster Review of London said that Miss Sedgwick had demonstrated that literature could flourish in a democratic republic where there was no leisure class. Another critic said that she had in no way imitated English literature, but had created one that was entirely American.

Nothing, perhaps, shows more clearly the place that Catherine Sedgwick held in the world than her list of friends. Her home in Stockbridge was the rendezvous for many men and women of note in this country and those who came from abroad.

For twenty years she and Mrs. Anna Jameson corresponded. Miss Sedgwick visited Mrs. Jameson in London, and till her death there hung on the wall of Mrs. Jameson's room in her London house a little picture of the Stockbridge house with the lovely view across the hills.

Miss Sedgwick was born in the old homestead in 1791, and her earlier as well as many of her later years were passed in it. Here she wrote "The New England Tale," "Redwood," "Hope Leslie," and many shorter tales and articles for magazines, in the days when Irving, Cooper, Dana, Halleck, Drake and Bryant were also writing. In this mansion Judge Sedgwick, his daughter, and his sons, received as guests some of the most eminent men and women of this country and of Europe. If they could speak, its walls would report much of high converse. William Ellery Channing visited here, also Orville Dewey, who often preached in the mansion's parlors on a Summer Sunday afternoon. Charles Sumner, Frances Ann Kemble, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Henry W. Longfellow, also were here.

The Sedgwick mansion stands between the broad and beautiful Main Street of Stockbridge and the Housatonic River. Bryant passed it on his first visit to Southern Berkshire, made on foot in 1816. He wrote of it:

"It was on the 3d of October—the woods were in all the glory of Autumn, and I well remember as I passed through Stockbridge how much I was struck by the beauty of the smooth green meadows on the banks of that lovely river, the Housatonic, which winds near the Sedgwick mansion, and whose gently flowing waters seemed tinged with the gold and crimson of the trees that overhung them. I admired no less the contrast between this soft scene and the steep, craggy hills that overlooked it, clothed with many colored forests."

Miss Sedgwick's study of Italian had put her in close touch and sympathy with the people of Italy, and in 1848, when many Italian refugees came to this country she showed them kindness, sympathy, and hospitality. She translated one of Sismondi's essays, and sent the translation to him, together with a copy of her novel, "Hope Leslie." They corresponded until his death.

Catherine Sedgwick had a fine sense of humor, and, among her experiences abroad, delighted to recall a dinner in England where a lady asked her if there were any large old trees in America. Before Miss Sedgwick could reply, she added quickly and graciously:

"Oh, I beg your pardon; your country has not been settled long enough for that."

NEWPORT'S SUMMER DOINGS

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 14.—Tonight brings to a close the busiest week of the social season at Newport—what with the marriage of Miss Margaret F. Andrews and Morgan Belmont, the opening of the polo season, the Newport Dog Show, and the Newport Garden Club and Newport Horticultural Society's beautiful Flower and Fruit Show. Mrs. Frederick Hoffman, Mrs. Pembroke Jones, and Mrs. Lawrence L. Gillespie were the prime factors in the latter, which was held on three successive days.

Next Monday will usher in the first invitation tournament at the Newport Casino, which will replace the national lawn tennis tournament of other years. The entries include many of the leading tennis players of the country. Numerous entertainments have been arranged for the tennis week.

Narragansett Pier, Jamestown, Watch Hill, Saunderstown, and other places near Newport will be well represented at the tennis tournament, and many house parties will be given here.

Next Friday will be another gay day and night in the Summer colony, as the afternoon will be devoted to the musicale which Mrs. Oliver H. P. Belmont is giving at Marble House. Two noted artists will be heard, Fritz Kreisler, violinist, and Vernon d'Arnalie of Paris, baritone.

In the evening Mrs. George D. Widener will give a dance at her new residence as a housewarming. Mrs. Widener will receive with her daughter, Mrs. Fritz Eugene Dixon. Previous to the dance Mr. and Mrs. Pembroke Jones will give a large dinner for Mrs. Widener at Sherwood, one of the largest of the Summer.

Men were scarce in Newport this week, since so many of the young bachelors are in training at the business men's camp in Plattsburg, where they will remain until early in September.

Officers of the navy, especially those of the Atlantic fleet, some of whom are among the best dancers in Newport this season, are much in demand, and their presence has added much to the dinners and dances held here.

Many beautiful garden and landscape effects are to be noted here this Summer. The best effects are those about the lawn of The Elms, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Berwind on Bellevue Avenue, where the white marble terrace, tea houses, and sunken garden, with at least 60,000 begonias, are showing up beautifully. This new addition is near the Spring Street end of the lawn and faces the white marble terrace of the house. The marble terrace walk is 150 feet long with two rows of steps and a hidden fountain of marble in the centre and the pretty sunken garden at the foot of the fountain. At either end of the new terrace is a tea house of white marble. Many pretty pieces of statuary, wonderful trees, shrubs, flowers, and lily ponds add to the effect.

The last week of the exhibition of paintings by the Messrs. William H. Cotton and Charles Biesel of Newport came to a close this afternoon at the studio of the Newport Art Association. Each afternoon the ladies of the association poured tea, among them being Mrs. Alfred Tuckerman, Mrs. Walter C. Cabell, and Mrs. Charles C. Marsh of Washington.

The Misses Julia Berwind and Margaret Dunlap of Philadelphia are spending August with Edward J. Berwind at The Elms, where the latter will give a series of dinners, and probably a few informal dances.

From reports at hand there will be a later season than ever in Newport, as so many of the Summer residents are now decided upon remaining here until the late Fall.

Bishop James H. Darlington of Harrisburg, Penn., owing to the recent operation upon Mrs. Darlington in New York, has canceled his plans for a Summer on the west coast and will probably occupy his estate, The Corners, during September and October.

Mrs. Joseph E. Widener is giving a dinner tomorrow night, and another on the 22d, for her son, Joseph E. Widener, Jr., at Stoneacre.

Chalmers Clifton of Boston, a composer of note, has been the guest of Mrs. Thomas J. Emery at Mariemount.

Mr. and Mrs. I. Townsend Burden of New York are spending August with Mrs. Burden at Fair Lawn.

Mrs. Joe R. Morrison is entertaining Miss Martha Guthrie of Pittsburgh, daughter of the United States Ambassador to Japan, over the tennis week. Miss Guthrie is a clever tennis player.

Mrs. Morrison, who was joined by her husband, Lieutenant Morrison of the submarine flotilla staff, tonight gave a dinner for Miss Guthrie.

Mrs. Chandler P. Anderson of Washington will arrive next week to visit her brother-in-law and sister, the Spanish Ambassador and Mme. Riaño.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Minott of New York have concluded a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Henry J. Whitehouse at Eastbourne Lodge.

S. B. Elkins of West Virginia has been the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Widener.

Miss A. R. Walker of Washington, and her brother, John G. Walker of Richmond, Va., are here and expect to remain for the tennis tournament.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Dallas Bache Pratt have concluded a visit with Mrs. George S. Scott at Belmead.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Sedgwick and the Messrs. Henry R. Sedgwick and Robert Sedgwick, Jr., are here for a stay.

Mrs. Hugh D. Auchincloss, her daughter, Miss Anna B. Auchincloss, and her son, Mr. Hugh D. Auchincloss, Jr., have returned from British Columbia.

Polo begins this afternoon at the Westchester Polo Club, and will continue for several weeks.

Mr. S. Montgomery Roosevelt of New York is here for an extended visit.

Mrs. Frederick W. Goodman, who is spending a few days with General and Mrs. J. Frederick Pierson before starting West with her husband, gave a tea at Gray Craig on Wednesday.

Mrs. William Watts Sherman is giving a dinner on Aug. 17.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph S. Sampson will give a dinner, followed by dancing, on Aug. 26.

Mrs. John Jacob Astor has completed a visit with Mrs Joseph E. Widener.

Mr. and Mrs. Stuart Duncan will entertain Mr. and Mrs. Matthew D. Niles of New York, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick T. Frelinghuysen of Long Island, and Mr. and Mrs. Whitewright Watson of Tuxedo over the tennis tournament of next week. Miss Marion Stoddard, sister of Mrs. Duncan, has been at Bonnie Crest for several weeks.

WRITTEN ON THE SCREEN

VITAGRAPH THEATRE—"The Tigress."

THE STRAND—"The Marriage of Kitty."

BROADWAY THEATRE—"Nearly a Lady."

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET—"A Royal Family."

"THE TIGRESS" is the title of a melodramatic picture that will be shown in the Vitagraph Theatre this week as the feature of the new program. The scenario was written by William Addison Lathrop, and the cast includes Julia Swayne Gordon, Zena Keefe, Garry McGarry and Leo Delaney. "The Goddess" is in its fifteenth chapter, which brings the adventures of Celestia and Tommy Barclay to an end. "The Romance of a Handkerchief," a one-part comedy, with Maurice Costello and Leah Baird; "The Good in the Worst of Us," and "A City Rube" are other films that will be shown.

Film fans will have their first opportunity of seeing Fannie Ward in the movies in a picturization of the comedy, "The Marriage of Kitty," in the Strand Theatre this week. Miss Ward is well known as a comedienne on the legitimate stage. Her last appearance here was in "Madame President" several seasons ago in the Garrick Theatre. The picture is from the studios of the Lasky Company. Jack Dean, Cleo Ridgeley, Mrs. Lewis McCord and Richard Morris acted with Miss Ward for the picture. New tropical, travel and scientific pictures will be shown.

One of the films Elsie Janis wrote and acted for Bosworth, Inc., will be projected in the Broadway Theatre this week. It is called "Nearly a Lady," and takes Miss Janis through such diverse scenes as a Montana ranch and a ballroom. "The Bank" is the title of the two-reel comedy film in which Charles Chaplin will be seen. Then there will be South American travel pictures and topical films from all sections.

Ann Murdock, who is to appear shortly in the Lyceum Theatre in a revival of "The Duke of Killicrankie," is the star of a picture version of "A Royal Family," which will be the feature of the Eighty-first Street Theatre's program this week. The last half of the week an adaptation by Lois Weber of Clara Louise Burnham's novel, "Jewel," will be shown, with Elsie Hall in the principal rôle.

Arnold Daly is flitting from the legitimate to the movie stage. Just now he is at work on a group of pictures for Pathé that will be known as the Arnold Daly Series, in which his rôle is that of Ashton Kirk, a new type of detective. Recently Mr. Daly needed a ballroom for a scene in one of his pictures, so with his accustomed cleverness he prevailed upon Mrs. George Gould to allow him the use of the ballroom in her town house at 857 Fifth Avenue. If there was any one abroad on Fifth Avenue on the hot Summer day on which the Daly hosts stormed the Gould mansion, which seems unlikely from the deserted state of the avenue these dog days, the pedestrian must have marveled at the party of men and women in evening dress alighting from motors and disappearing within.

The Famous Players Company is preparing another feature with Marie Doro as the star. It is entitled "The White Pearl," and is by Edith Barnard Delano. Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford are the directors in charge of the picture.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is going to answer "The Birth of a Nation," in its own coin. When this film, based on Thomas Dixon's story of the South, was first produced the association carried on an agitation against it, which resulted in the elimination of some scenes considered objectionable, but which failed to accomplish its aim, since the picture was not placed under the censorial ban.

Elaine Sterne, who has won fame as a writer of scenarios, conceived the idea of answering "The Birth of a Nation" with a film in which the development of the colored race should be set forth. After interesting the association in her scheme, Miss Sterne went South to study the subject. "Lincoln's Dream" is the title she has given the scenario based on the material gathered. The Universal Film Company has arranged to produce the picture, which will be sent wherever the film responsible for the protest is exhibited.

Jesse L. Lasky is enthusiastic over the opportunities awaiting American moving-picture manufacturers at the close of the war. Says Mr. Lasky:

"I do not think the importance of the European market to American manufacturers can be overestimated. When the war is over, millions of persons will swerve as one away from thoughts of strife to thoughts of peace and reconstruction. History has proved that great popular forms of amusement form a very vital part of the lives of people in such conditions. The motion picture, the photoplay—particularly the American product, from which has been removed all taint of war and sordidness—will be received with the greatest enthusiasm.

"A great audience of tens of millions awaits the moderate-priced entertainment as soon as the war is over. Here is a field so great and in which so much good can be accomplished by the proper kind of productions that the very size of the opportunity is a tax on the imagination."

The Importance of Correct Methods of Education of Children

Next Sunday, Aug. 22, in The New York Times

Read what twelve college Presidents have to say regarding the pre-College education of children. Twelve more of the leading educators of this country will contribute valuable letters to parents and readers of this paper on the needs of the preparatory schools, suggesting improvements in present methods and pointing out some of the present-day errors.

WAR MOVES OF THE WEEK

Confused Reports from Eastern Front as Russians Retreat Toward New Line—Little Change on Other Fronts—Analysis of Losses.

By a Military Expert.

THE close of last week saw Warsaw in German hands and Russia, fighting rear-guard actions steadily to protect the retreat of the main army, falling back to the Grodno-Brest-Litovsk line. The operations from this point have been somewhat confused and it does not appear yet just what point the Russian Army has reached in its retreat.

It is a singular fact, however, that since Warsaw was evacuated, reports from Berlin and Vienna have not mentioned the capture either of any large amount of military stores or any large number of Russian troops. The indications are, therefore, that Grand Duke Nicholas had timed things to a nicety and that he has not only made good his retreat, but that the Teutons, as at Przemysl and Lemberg, captured an empty city.

The danger of the sharp salient in the Russian line caused by the retention of Novogeorgievsk was pointed out last week. It became evident on Monday that it was not the intention of the Russians to hold this fortress, but to retire and leave it to stand a siege. This seems to be opposed to the usual methods of the Russian commander, and, in general, would be questionable strategy.

The French followed it in 1870 and shut up their various armies in great fortresses, thereby completely destroying their usefulness as mobile field forces and presenting Germany with the opportunity—which she was not slow to grasp—of shutting them up and eventually, by siege operations, forcing them to surrender. The futility of the French strategy was amply demonstrated at Metz, where Marshal Bazaine was finally forced to surrender with his command of considerably over a hundred thousand men.

In the present war the Austrians suffered a similar experience at Przemysl, the surrender of which involved the removal of 120,000 men from the war theatre. Novogeorgievsk, however, is somewhat different in that there is no city to protect, and consequently no civilian population to feed, and, therefore, no drain on the supplies intended for the consumption of the military garrison. The fortress is a very strong one, conspicuous for the absence of concrete, and should be able to hold out for some time—the extent of its resistance being, naturally, dependent on the amount of ammunition the Russians were able to leave behind for its defense.

Beginning in Courland, the German operations which involved the port of Riga were early in the week assuming dangerous proportions. Von Bülow had reached almost the outer defenses of the town when the Russians assumed the offensive and drove him back from the region between the Dvina, the Ekau, and the Aa. This move has temporarily, so far as we can judge from the reports, put a stop to the German offense in the immediate vicinity. The attack then shifted south to Kovno, where the Germans are close to and besieging the city.

This is one of the great danger points for the Russians at the present time. Its importance lies not only in it being the capital of the province and an important railroad junction, but it is one of the fortresses through which runs what is expected to be the main line of the Russian defense. Its importance is realized by the Germans, who have concentrated before it guns of all calibres, including the 42-cm. which was so successful in reducing the forts at Namur and Antwerp.

Along the Narew the Russians have maintained their defensive positions with fair success as far south as Lomza. This latter city, however, has been taken, which means that the Russian line of the Narew from Lomza to the junction of the Narew and the Bug has practically been given up.

In the immediate Warsaw salient, between the Bug and the Wieprz, the fighting is very confused, and it is practically impossible to delineate with accuracy the present positions. It is evident, however, that the Germans are closing in and that the Russians still occupying this salient are in extreme danger. From the Narew in the vicinity of Ostrolenka the Germans have moved forward on a line generally parallel to the Ostrolenka-Novo Minsk railroad. The town of Ostrow has been reached, though possibly not yet occupied, by German troops.

Southeast of Ostrow the Germans have accomplished what they have been fighting for for at least eight months—they have reached the line of the Warsaw-Petrograd railroad where it is crossed by the road from Ostrolenka to Lukow. The latter town has also been taken by the Teutons. As it is the junction of the road last mentioned and the road from Brest-Litovsk to Warsaw, two of the three railroads from Warsaw east are now in German hands, leaving open for Russian use only the road from Novo Minsk through Siedlce. The situation of the Russians in the angle appears almost hopeless.

The fears for the garrison of the fortress of Ivangorod seem justified. It is not apparent how these troops can escape a siege and ultimate capture. Not only are the tips of the circle with which the Germans have been trying to inclose the fortress but a short distance apart, but of the two railroads running north from Ivangorod, over which the retreat must be conducted, one is in German hands and the other, which generally parallels the Vistula from Ivangorod to Novo Minsk, is but a short distance from the positions last taken by the German lines.

Novo Minsk still appears to be in Russian hands, but by the time this review appears it, too, may have fallen. If so, the Ivangorod garrison will be completely cut off. If not, this one avenue of retreat is still open to them. It is extremely probable, however, that the fall of Lukow will force the evacuation of Ivangorod, unless, for reasons that will presently be given, the Grand Duke Nicholas may deem it advisable to allow it to stand a siege, as in the case of Novogeorgievsk.

It is true that, except immediately east of Warsaw, the line of the Vistula guarding the Ivangorod-Novo Minsk railroad is still in Russian hands, and to this extent the railroad is secure. But not only are the Germans who crossed the Vistula working their way east, but little by little the Vistula line to the south of Warsaw is giving way, so that each day increases the danger. In addition, Lukow is only fifteen miles south of Siedlce, which is on the road from Novo Minsk to Warsaw. The capture of this town would not only isolate the Ivangorod garrison but would cut the only line of retreat from the Warsaw angle east that still remains open.

It is apparent from this, then, that from any viewpoint the Russians in the angle are in a rather desperate plight. The mass of the Russian Army has in all probability passed beyond the line of danger. But there are nevertheless a great many troops left in the angle, and their loss will be a hard blow to Russian arms.

Now as to method (if method there is rather than absolute necessity) in the Grand Duke Nicholas's apparent madness in permitting the fortresses at Novogeorgievsk and Ivangorod to be cut off and besieged rather than to keep all his army mobile by withdrawing the garrisons in time to make good their retreat. The area inclosed by the triangle of Novogeorgievsk, Ivangorod, and Brest-Litovsk will be difficult for the Germans to occupy effectively until one or more of the three fortresses is taken. If the Germans attack from any one side of this angle or from all three sides at once, their lines of communications will be threatened not only by the forces in the fortresses, but by the Russian mobile army operating outside the triangle. Moreover, their flanks would be exposed to the attacks of the forts, which are in no case more than 100 miles from each other.

If Germany, instead of attacking, elects to mask the forts and settle down to siege operations, three large armies will be immediately immobilized just as surely as the troops are shut up in the forts. These, then, may be the objects of the Russian commander in leaving behind, as he withdrew, the troops in Novogeorgievsk and Ivangorod. These objects will be largely frustrated, however, if either through structural weakness or shortage of ammunition these fortresses prove incapable of prolonged resistance, or if the garrisons are not sufficiently strong numerically to sortie against the German lines of communications or flanks.

Nothing that has happened since the fall of Warsaw gives any clue to the German plan after the Russians are cleared from the Warsaw angle and driven behind the Vistula and the Bug. All German efforts so far have been directed toward the capture or destruction of the Russian forces that have not yet made good their retreat to the Brest-Litovsk-Grodno line. When this angle is finally cleared the subsequent German plan will take shape. It is entirely possible, indeed probable, that for the reasons pointed out in last week's review Germany will not detach any great numbers of troops for operations in other theatres, but will still keep pounding at the Russian lines as they take one position after the other. The object would be, of course, to crush Russia and force a separate peace while the Russian Army is still in its rather demoralized state. To assume the defensive in the east and turn attention to the west would give Russia time to reorganize and remunition—in which case, with all her territorial gains, Germany would be worse off than ever.

There has been much talk of peace since the success in Poland, yet no word has come from Petrograd giving any indication that the subject is really being thought of. It must be remembered that, in so far as the Allies are concerned, this is Russia's war. Russia went to war to protect Serbia. France because she was Russia's ally, England because of the invasion of Belgium. It is extremely unlikely, therefore, that Russia will make peace without her allies. Peace talk of this nature is undoubtedly premature and is founded more on desire than on probabilities.

Russia, as well as her allies, knows that German wastage is going on at a rate far beyond her resources to repair, and if they can keep up the fight long enough the German Pyrrhean victories will be Germany's undoing. Even Bernhardi has stated that Russia can never be defeated. Her troops may be driven back, vast territories occupied, but her resources are too stupendous to admit of defeat.

In the other war theatres there is but little new on which to comment. In order to counteract to some extent the influence on the Balkan States, which are all in a frenzy of diplomatic discussion with each other as well as with both of the belligerents, the forces on Gallipoli have been recently materially strengthened and the Allies' offense more strongly pushed. Additional gains have been recorded, but they bear a striking resemblance to such gains as are reported from the western front—they do not seem to mean anything. Bulgaria is the hope of the Allies and in her participation lies the immediate fate of Constantinople.

Italy has consistently maintained her offensive, moving further up into the passes and valleys about Trent and in the Carnic Alps, but finds the way to Gorizia extremely hard going. She is, however, taking, one after another, all the approaches and the heights commanding it, while her troops are advancing over the plateau. Yet the situation is not materially changed from last week.

On the western front the Crown Prince has kept up his attack in the Argonne, but apparently without result. As far as is known this attack is not a serious matter and is not intended to be, as it is made only over a front of six miles and with not more than 25,000 troops.

The British have been somewhat active during the week and in the vicinity of Hooge have taken the first line of German trenches over a front of nearly three-quarters of a mile. The depth by which they have penetrated, however, has been negligible.

An Analysis of Losses.

During the last ten days some very interesting statements of estimated losses have come to us from British and French sources. An analysis of these figures and a comparison with the Teuton lists so far published will give an approximate idea of what losses the Germanic allies have sustained. In view of the oft-repeated statement that the object of the Allies, particularly in the west, is the "attrition" or wastage of the German forces at a rate greater than their rate of supply, the German losses mean a gradual wearing down to the breaking point.

Excluding the operations at the Dardanelles, which, so far as we know, have not involved the line of either Germany or Austria, although some German officers have been engaged, the British loss to July 20 has been 255,649 in killed, wounded, and missing, exclusive of officers. Of this number, 48,372, or approximately 19 per cent. have been killed; 156,308, or 61 per cent., have been wounded, and 50,969, or about 20 per cent., are missing. The estimate of British losses up to May 31 as made by the French Ministry of War is somewhat in excess of these numbers, but includes the Dardanelles operations. In the French estimate, however, the percentage of killed is entirely too great, unless, as is not stated, the number of wounded who have died is included.

Considering only the British report, which is an accurate total compiled by the War Office from the casualty lists, if all the British wounded recover, the total permanent loss is 39 per cent. Of the wounded, however, at least 20 per cent. will be unfit for further service, either because of permanent physical disability or through subsequent death, so that the certain permanent loss of British effectives is not less than 51 per cent. of the total casualties. Just how many British have actually been on the firing line is, of course, not known, but it has not been more than 800,000 men. Considering that most of the British losses occurred during a period when the expeditionary army had not reached its maximum strength, (and there are only 750,000 British now on the Continent,) it is an error of conservation to place the total casualties at a minimum of 30 per cent. of the men engaged.

The German loss on the western front has certainly not been less in proportion and has probably been greater. Both the Germans and British are hard fighters and are equally slow to surrender. It will not be an error, therefore, to use the same percentages in figuring the German loss on this front.

The French and British together hold approximately 250,000 German prisoners, and the Russians, excluding the later operations in Galicia and Poland, about the same number. The total German casualties, therefore, are, figuring the prisoners at 20 per cent of the total, not less than 2,500,000 men, excluding the more recent eastern operations. Of this number 19 per cent., or 475,000, have been killed, 61 per cent., or 1,525,000, wounded, and 500,000 made prisoners. The permanent loss, therefore, is not less than 1,275,000 men.

These figures, as a result of recent eastern operations, will be considerably increased, probably by half a million in the total. It is no exaggeration, therefore, to figure the total German loss at at least 3,000,000 men.

Austria has lost in greater proportion. The Galician disasters of the earlier days of the war, the loss of Przemysl with 120,000 men, the battles in the Carpathians, the later operations in Galicia and Poland have all been enormously expensive in men. The Austrian prisoners in Russian hands amount to something over a million. The same ratios between prisoners and total casualties do not, of course, hold. But because of the severity of the fighting in which they have been engaged it is safe to figure their losses in killed and wounded at not less than those of their ally. Thus, including prisoners, the Austrian total loss is at least 3,500,000 men.

Combining the Teuton losses, then, the killed number 950,000, the wounded 3,050,000, and the prisoners 1,500,000.

These estimates are not altogether in accord with the estimates of the French Ministry of War made May 31 and withheld from publication until Aug. 4, but are much less. In the latter case the proportion of killed to total casualties averages 36 per cent., which, from the reports received from other sources, is much too high. At the same time, conservative as they are, the figures given are staggering—almost inconceivable. Yet it is but a question of arithmetic.

Attached to them is a deep significance which is also in part a question of arithmetic and is in part imparted by German military writers whose books were published before the war. As to the first, it must be evident that a continuance of the rate of wastage, without a gain of a decision in one war theatre or the other, must inevitably result in the defeat of the power whose resources in men are least. Sooner or later the reduction of the number of men per mile of line will reach a point where the thinness of the line will cause it to crack and break.

It is this that is meant by Joffre's so-called "nibbling" tactics. This is the policy of "attrition." That this would be the vital danger to Germany in case of a Continental war in which bungling diplomacy might cause the formation of a powerful coalition against German arms was recognized by all German military writers, and, if recollection serves aright, it was Bernhardi himself who, inferentially it is true, but none the less plainly, prophesied disaster to Germany unless her army could destroy or render hors de combat one power before the other struck.

Germany cannot continue to fight the present coalition. It is not within the bounds of possibility. Therefore, to win, either France, England, or Russia must be forced to make a separate peace. Germany's life blood is slowly ebbing—only this can stop the flow.

DOINGS AND SAYINGS IN THE REAL ESTATE WORLD

LATEST DEALINGS IN THE REALTY FIELD

Active Week Closes Quietly with Bronx Deals as Feature of the Day.

TENEMENTS AS INVESTMENT

Saddle River Farm Purchase—Builder Buys Jamaica Lots —Business Leases.

The realty week, which, in the sale of the Wilson corner at Fifth Avenue and Forty-third Street for a sixteen-story building and the leasing of a Park Avenue block front from the New York Central interests for another large apartment house, was characterized by considerable activity for this season of the year, closed yesterday in a quiet manner.

The Borough of the Bronx furnished a few good deals, of which the most important was the purchase by Mrs. Elizabeth Klein of the new eighteen-family apartment house on the southeast corner of Decatur Avenue and 197th Street, 40.4 by 100. The building contains two stores and was recently built by Miltner Brothers, for whom it was sold by Richard H. Scobie. It was held at $60,000 and was a cash transaction.

The two-family dwelling at 1,376 Leland Avenue, on lot 25 by 100, was sold by Richard Dickson for William Krug to an investor.

Bronx Tenements in Trade.

The five-story tenement 419 St. Ann's Avenue, near 144th Street, on a plot 24.11 by 97, has been sold by Herman Wiebke to Elizabeth Little. In exchange the latter gave the four-story tenement 1,115 Washington Avenue, near 166th Street, on plot 16 by 93.

Brooklyn.

The Bulkley & Horton Company has sold three plots on the west side of Underhill Avenue, 25 feet south of Sterling Place, to the G. & M. Improvement Company. The plots are 75 by 100, 25 by 157, and 75 by 126, respectively. The new owners will erect apartments and stores on the property.

The Alco Building Company has sold the residence at 2,143 Sixty-seventh Street to William G. Smith.

E. P. Dalmasse of Elwood M. Townsend & Co. has sold the two-family house at 1,153 Sterling Place to an investor.

Builder Buys in Jamaica.

Max Gross, a Jamaica builder, has purchased forty-seven lots on West Street, at Wells Avenue, in the Fulton Heights section of Jamaica, for $22,000. He has filed plans for thirty single-family houses. Their selling price will be from $3,500 to $4,000 each.

Newark Houses in Trade.

Louis Schlesinger has sold for Duncan MacKinnon the two-and-one-half-story two-family dwelling at 165 Woodside Avenue, on a plot 28 by 125, in the Forest Hill section of Newark, to John M. Lambert. Mr. MacKinnon took in part payment the two-and-one-half-story one-family dwelling at 349 Woodside Avenue, on plot 31 by 115.

New Jersey.

A farm of ninety acres on the upper Saddle River has been sold for Mrs. M. G. Scott by S. S. Walstrum-Gordon & Forman to Walter Carl Elze of New York City.

The Frank Hughes-Taylor Company of Montclair has sold eight acres on the heights of Verona, just over the Montclair line, for Clifford W. Gould to Abel I. Culver. The property is on an elevation of about 550 feet. It was held at $2,500 per acre.

Westchester County.

George Gleichert has sold his residence on Gard Avenue, Armour Villa Park, Yonkers, to Ersley V. Thompson. The firm of Burke Stone was the broker, and the latter has sold for Oliver T. Oakes his residence on Janvrin Avenue, Cedar Knolls, Bronxville, to Thomas M. Ambler.

Commercial Leases.

Wm. D. Bloodgood & Co., Inc., has leased the store at 68 West Forty-fifth Street for Brickman Bros. to Joseph Manna.

Edward S. Foley & Co. have leased the store at 208 West Fourteenth Street for Miss Ellen Maloney to J. A. Thomas.

The Real Estate Management Company has leased for M. E. Loew the store at 2,628 Broadway to Mme. Meyer.

M. & L. Hess, Inc., have leased for the estate of Edward P. Slevin the store and basement at 9 West Twentieth Street to the National Sales Company, Inc., dealers in hospital furniture and supplies.

The Morris Plan Company has leased large offices in the Equitable Building, comprising 9,000 square feet, at the Broadway and Cedar Street corner of the third floor.

Realty Note.

The M. Morgenthau Jr. Company has been appointed sales agent for the Bronx holdings of the Safeguard Realty Company, controlled by Einstein & Wolff. The property consists chiefly of a plot at the southeast corner of Jerome Avenue and 196th Street, running through to Morris Avenue, containing over thirty-five lots. It will be sold for improvement.

SECOND AVENUE CHANGES.

Passing of Cafe Boulevard Leaves Few Landmarks in Old Centre.

With the passing of that once popular resort known as the Café Boulevard few of the old landmarks which made the lower section of Second Avenue interesting to the student of old New York will be left. For years the Café Boulevard possessed certain unique features which, with good food and a moderate atmosphere of Bohemianism, gave the place a reputation far beyond its immediate locality. About two years ago, however, the proprietor moved the name up to Broadway and Forty-first Street, but New Yorkers only knew one Café Boulevard, and when it ceased to exist on Second Avenue it was virtually numbered among the many other good things which had passed away due to changing conditions.

The main building of the old café, the house at 156 Second Avenue, adjoining the Tenth Street corner, was half a century ago the Ransom house, one of the fine private residences when the district around St. Mark's Church was a fashionable centre. Early next month the café and adjoining buildings on the southeast corner of Second Avenue and Tenth Street will be torn down for a six-story elevator apartment house, to be erected by the new owners of the property, the Volkian Realty Company.

Two blocks below, on the northwest corner of Eighth Street, stood until two or three years ago the old Keteltas house, the last survivor of early fashionable days, which continued to be occupied until it gave way to business interests by members of that well-known Knickerbocker family. The old home of the Historical Society, long a Second Avenue institution, may still be seen on the southeast corner of Eleventh Street, but since the society moved to its west side home it has been the quarters of a newsboys' club.

In addition to St. Mark's Church, which continues to impart a quaint flavor of aristocratic New York days to the vicinity, practically the only other landmark of interest remaining is the large Rutherfurd house on the northwest corner of Eleventh Street, converted several years ago into apartments.

GREENHUT REALTY SALE.

Property of Bankrupt to be Sold by Joseph P. Day.

Joseph P. Day has been designated as auctioneer to sell at public auction on Tuesday, Aug. 17, the real estate; both freehold and leasehold; merchandise, and other assets of the bankrupt firm of J. B. Greenhut & Co.

The sale will be held in the firm's building, Sixth Avenue and Eighteenth Street, and the court order provides that the company's property be offered first in various parcels and then in one lot.

The real estate to be sold consists of a number of valuable parcels scattered throughout Greater New York and New Jersey. Among the largest and most important of the properties are the two block fronts in Sixth Avenue, from Eighteenth to Nineteenth Street, with parcels in the side streets, both east and west, of Sixth Avenue; real property known as 249-255 West Seventeenth Street and 236-242 West Eighteenth Street; land and buildings in St. Mark's Avenue, Brooklyn, and four lots at the northeast corner of Rosa Avenue and Archer Place, Jamaica, L. I. There are about fourteen parcels in all.

Washington Place Apartment.

The old Washington Square locality has recently been the scene of considerable real estate activity, and, as a result of one of the recent deals an eight-story building is being erected on a plot fronting 44 feet at 79 and 81 Washington Place, between Washington Square and Sixth Avenue. It is being put up by the Fogliasso-Clement Building Company, who purchased the site last week through Pepe & Brother. Frank E. Vitolo is the architect, and has estimated the cost at $75,000. The apartments are arranged for two and three room suites, with studio apartments in the rear.

Transit Celebration in Queens.

Residents of the Morris Park and Richmond Hill sections of Queens have been informed by the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company that the work of extending the elevated line on Liberty Avenue from the Brooklyn Borough line to Richmond Hill will be completed within two weeks. The residents of the district have decided to celebrate the opening of the line on Labor Day. A Celebration Committee of one hundred has been named, with A. J. Cisney, President, and T. A. Wagner, Secretary.

Apartments Leased.

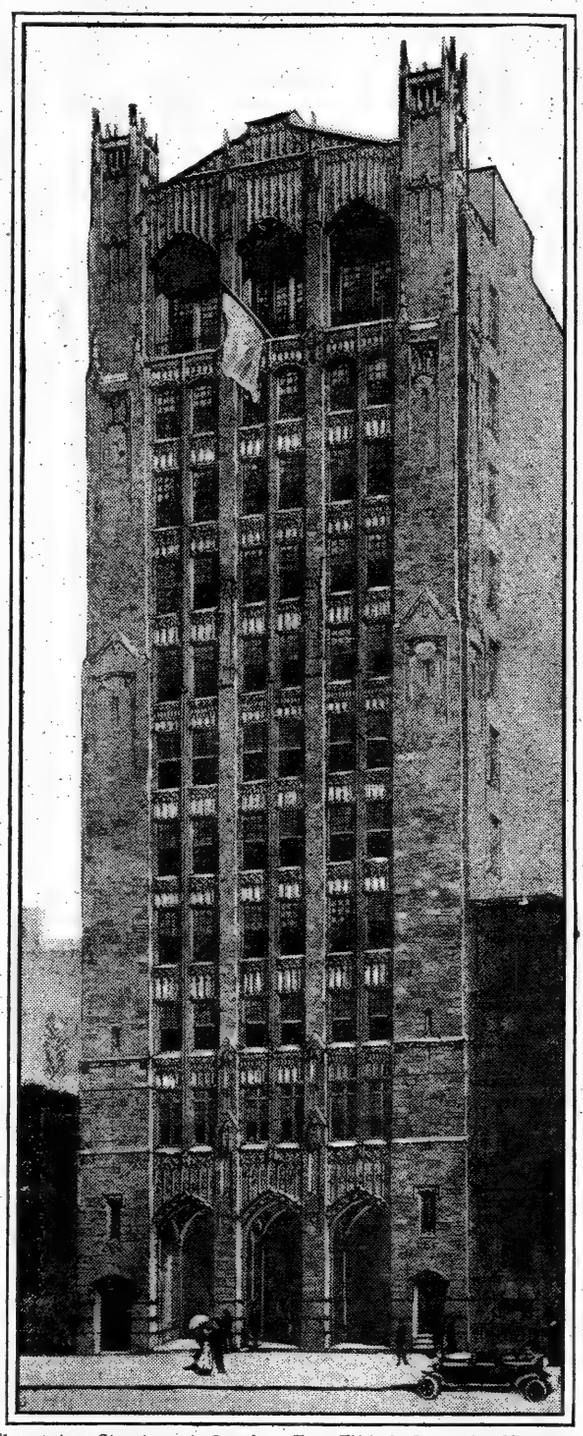
Malcolm E. Smith & Co. have leased for 131 and 135 East Sixty-sixth Street a large duplex apartment to Mrs. Alice B. Creelman, and for 130 and 134 East Sixty-seventh Street duplex apartments to Edward T. Cockroft, Mrs. Lora C. Schroeder, and Gerome Brush.

Pease & Elliman have leased for the Horatio Realty Company, controlled by Samuel A. Herzog, an apartment in the new house at 116 East Eighty-fourth Street, to Mrs. H. A. Seymour, and for Bing & Bing an apartment in their new house, 993 Park Avenue, at the southeast corner of Eighty-fourth Street, to Curt H. Reisinger.

SALE OF WILSON CORNER ON FIFTH AVENUE RECALLS LONG FIGHT TO CLOSE STABLE ALLEY

How Agreement of 1864 Has Blocked Efforts to Assemble Larger Plot—Present Operation, However, Involves About $3,000,000—Fiftieth Street Building on Perpetual Leasehold.

Home of Late R. T. Wilson, with Vacant Plot on Fifth Avenue and Forty-third Street, Sold Last Week for Sixteen-story Commercial Building.



Eleven-story Structure at 18 and 20 East Fiftieth Street for Hampton Shops.

ONE of the few remaining residential landmarks in the Forty-second Street section of Fifth Avenue—the old Wilson house, with the vacant plot on the immediate Forty-third Street corner—will soon be torn down for a sixteen-story skyscraper. For over half a dozen years the plot has figured in prospective deals, and just before its actual sale to an investing syndicate known as the 511 Fifth Avenue Company last week it figured in another visionary transaction, in which the ambitions of the would-be owner were curtailed by the difficulties of successful finance.

The sale as at last closed includes only the holdings of the late Richard T. Wilson, being the old-fashioned brownstone house and the corner, which was never built upon, fronting 62.11 on the avenue, 108 on the street, with a southerly line of 123 feet adjoining the old house at 509 Fifth Avenue, which in turn adjoins the twelve-story building at 507 Fifth Avenue, erected by the Fleischmann Realty Company on leasehold property owned by the Ford estate.

The deal was considerably smaller than was at one time expected. The corner is one of the best on the avenue. Many efforts in the past have been made to assemble all the available parcels north of the 507 Fifth Avenue building, including the house at 4 West Forty-third Street, also owned by the Wilson estate. But the little ten-foot alley, which is easily noticed in the rear of the grass-covered corner plot, has blocked more than one near-deal involving millions.

The Wilsons have tried in the courts for years to remove the old restrictions which gave the use of the alley, with access to Forty-third Street, to adjoining owners. The last legal battle was closed two years ago, when the Court of Appeals decided a suit to close up the alley in favor of the Fleischmann Realty Company, whose twelve-story building abuts on the alley. In the suit the latter company claimed the right of usage through the covenants of 1864, made by the late John R. Ford and other owners of the corner parcels, in which it was agreed that the alley should be held in common.

In its decision of 1913 two questions were involved. One was that of the rights of the owners and heirs of the property at 507 Fifth Avenue in the use of the alley. The court held that these rights were never denied until after the erection of the building.

The second question was whether, in view of the changed conditions, a commercial structure could retain the same easement rights as for private use. The court did not decide this technicality, but indicated that the Wilson estate could reopen the case by a trial on that point. The Wilsons have not done so, and the sale of the two corner parcels without the alley and the Forty-third Street house, which was held as a valuable addition for rounding out a large plot, indicates that the legal fight on the alley is closed.

The existence of the alley, besides blocking more than one prospective deal, virtually ties up the 37-foot house at 509 Fifth Avenue, materially curtailing its value. The house is owned by the Martha S. Sturges estate, and, had it been possible to close the troublesome alley, this plot might also have figured in assembling a choice corner for an operation about twice the size of the building now contemplated.

The transaction, although smaller than the one looked for, will involve, with the sixteen-story building—illustrating that Fifth Avenue is by no means immune from the skyscraper type—about $3,000,000, making it one of the noteworthy realty and building operations of the year. York & Sawyer are the architects, and the structure will be known as the Guaranty Building, as the Guaranty Trust Company will occupy the ground floor and additional space. It is expected to be ready for occupancy next June.

The Forty-second Street section of Fifth Avenue has been one of the active localities of the city in new developments. The latest structure on the avenue to be opened was the dignified Rogers-Peet Building, running through from Forty-first to Forty-second Street. Just below, on the southeast corner of Fortieth Street, the attractive Arnold-Constable Building is nearing completion, and when occupied by that firm early this Winter the last of the big retail houses in the old Twenty-third Street district will be housed close to many of its neighbors of many years in the new shopping centre. The Arnold-Constable Building is no skyscraper, being but six stories in height.

At Madson Avenue and Forty-fourth Street the new home of Brooks Brothers has just been completed and opened, and on Broadway the ten-story home of Brokaw Brothers is rapidly nearing completion.

In East Fiftieth Street, between Fifth and Madison Avenues, the first big commercial operation is under way in the eleven-story building to be occupied by the Hampton Shops of 34 West Thirty-second Street. The structure occupies the plot at 18 and 20 East Fiftieth Street, long the site of the Cutler School for Boys. In the realty world the site possesses the unique interest of being a perpetual leasehold, with very exceptional conditions.

The property is owned by the Garvey estate, the original owner being Andrew J. Garvey, a politician who attained some celebrity or notoriety in the Tweed days. In 1894 it was leased to Arthur H. Cutler for twenty-one years, but with a provision that renewals may always be made to the tenant of the property. An annual rental of $8,500 was provided for, and this also is perpetual.

The estate pays taxes equal to $1,037.40, being the rate in 1894, but anything over that amount is paid by the tenant. The taxes have increased since then, so that the actual lease in recent years represents over $11,000 annually. The lease was sold to the builders, W. W. & T. M. Hall, in 1908, and a year ago they disposed of it to a building syndicate, which is erecting the present structure. It is of an attractive Gothic type of architecture, in keeping with St. Patrick's Cathedral, opposite. The new tenants will use the entire building for the display of furniture and decorations.

NEW VENTILATING PLAN FOR SUBWAY SYSTEM

An effort is being made by the Advisory Council of Real Estate Interests to solve the problem of ventilation in the new subway system and do away with the present system of gratings upon the sidewalks, against which property owners, storekeepers, and lessees have taken a very decided stand.

The council, which has been studying the matter for several months past, with the aid of Daniel E. Moran, the consulting foundation engineer, has finally devised a form of ventilation which, in the opinion of its technical experts, will obviate the necessity of placing gratings upon sidewalks, and simultaneously afford a pure and constant supply of air.

The method employed will be to use the public park places for ventilating ducts and between stations have large outlet pipes through private property. This system would necessitate each subway track being inclosed, so that the movement of the trains would act as a piston, forcing out bad air through these ventilating shafts and permitting fresh air to enter at station entrances.

It has been learned that private property could be obtained at a small figure for the purpose of erecting large ventilating shafts, which will be from 4 to 6 feet in diameter and could be well located through property on side streets or in back yards.

The important factor in all subway ventilation is to keep the air in constant circulation. In the present subway this is impossible because the subway tracks are not inclosed in separate tubes, with the result that the bad air is never forced out through the gratings, but is constantly pushed back and forth from one side of the subway to the other. The difference in temperature as well as in purity of the air when tubes are used is very evident in those sections of the subway where tubular construction has been employed.

The disadvantage to property owners by the system of ventilation through gratings has been very explicitly set forth by William R. Willcox, a member of the Board of Counsel of the Advisory Council, who is acting as the attorney for a large number of Broadway property owners. In the brief submitted by Mr. Willcox is stated that the effect of gratings has been to obstruct the use of the sidewalk for the pedestrian public.

In view of the fact that municipal authorities removed the encroachments on Broadway to increase the width of the sidewalk, at great expense to property owners, it would seem rather inconsistent that gratings should now be employed which will greatly diminish the space already too small for the greatest thoroughfare in the world.

These gratings are likewise a distinct element of danger in Winter because of the accumulation of ice and snow on their surfaces, while the warm and vitiated air arising from the openings is extremely unpleasant. The inevitable result has been to press the crowded sidewalks on Broadway into still narrower limits and make them so unpleasant as to threaten the diversion of traffic to other less crowded streets and avenues to the imminent danger of depreciation of the value of property on Broadway.

Mr. Willcox likewise maintains that the grating system does not exchange pure air for foul. In this respect it is dangerous to public health both on the sidewalk and in the subway, for foul air with noxious elements is frequently expelled into the faces and lungs of the pedestrians. Such a condition of affairs would constitute a public nuisance and be particularly detrimental to the department stores on Broadway.

At a cost of many thousands of dollars the right to construct vaults to the curb line has been purchased from the city. If the subway gratings are to be used, property owners will be required to go to great expense to remove a large portion of these vaults, receiving no compensating advantage, for the taking of these vaults will be necessary under the proposed ventilation by gratings.

It is the contention that the consideration of this question should not be confused by any misconception as to the character in which the municipality is acting when constructing the subway. There is no exercise of any sovereign right, but the entire matter is a business enterprise of the city, so that the subway belongs to the city as a proprietor not as a sovereign. Thus, if this legal aspect of the question were to be raised by property owners, as there would seem to be sufficient legal authority for such a position, the question of condemnation proceedings would arise for taking private property for public use.

TAX AND REALTY LAWS.

Proposed Amendments Presented at Constitutional Convention.

Numerous amendments affecting taxation and real estate have been presented to the members of the Constitutional Convention now in session at Albany during the past week.

Those which relate to a modification of the laws granting exemption from taxation will probably not be reported favorably because of the well organized opposition to them. However, there are a few amendments which are of vital significance to property owners, the principal among which are those which provide for the supervision, review and equalization of assessments by the State Board of Tax Commissioners; for assessment of real property by the Legislature through new tax districts established on a county basis and for review by the State authorities of the assessment of real property within and without a municipality.

These amendments will give to the State Board of Tax Commissioners greater power to equalize assessments in the review of valuations. Thus taxes will become more equal and uniform throughout the State. In this respect New York City will be particularly benefited not only with regard to the general subject of assessment, but also in equalizing the exorbitant valuations which are placed upon the land owned by the city in the various counties of the State through which the city aqueduct passes.

There are also three amendments which come under the head of city planning, one of which relates to the limitation of the heights of buildings, another to the districting of the city into commercial, industrial, and residential zones, and the third of which provides for the condemnation of unsanitary areas for park purposes. Each one of these amendments has been approved by the Advisory Council of Real Estate Interests as being for the best interests of the city as well as for property owners.

There are likewise a number of other amendments affecting real estate which are buried in the various committees, but the amendments specified seem to comprise practically all that will probably be reported favorably to the convention.

REALTY CONVENTION.

National Association Will Hold Initial Meeting at Hotel McAlpin.

The National Association of Realty Brokers will hold its first convention at the Hotel McAlpin tomorrow. The general meeting will begin at 1 o'clock, to be followed by the banquet in the evening, at which Irvin G. Herman, counsel for the association, will act as toastmaster. Ralph Folks, Acting President of the Borough of Manhattan, will welcome the members.

J. J. Peirce of Wilmington, Del., will speak on "How Co-operation Among Real Estate Brokers of Different Sections Can Be More Effectively Accomplished Through Organization Work." Other speakers will be Jerome H. Fort of Oneida, Benjamin C. Fox of Chester, Penn.; William E. Wildman of Danbury, Conn.; Albert L. Wyman of Ridgefield Park, N. J.; C. J. Oben of Newport, Vt.; Wynne James of Doylestown, Penn.; Roscoe L. Chamberlain of Boston, Warren Lindsay, Jr., of Atlantic City, and Oliver Bruce Ferris of this city, Secretary of the association.

New Chelsea Improvement.

James J. Riordan, who has leased the Consolidated Gas Company property at 438-54 West Eighteenth Street for a term of twenty-one years, will commence at once the alterations to the premises which will transform the building into one of the largest structures to be used for printing purposes in the Chelsea section. It is also the purpose of the lessee to build a large garage in connection with the building, to have a capacity of 100 cars.

The building, which has a frontage of 225 feet on Eighteenth Street, will be made thoroughly fireproof, having a floor capacity of 250 pounds per foot, be equipped with elevators, electric light and power, and be furnished with an automatic sprinkler system throughout. The architect, James S. Maher, estimates the cost at $65,000, and expects the work to be completed by Nov. 1 of this year.

Suburban Sales.

Howell C. Perrin and Charles L. Perrin have sold for Mrs. Fanny L. Waters her property at Hommocks, Larchmont, N. Y., to A. A. Murdoch, consisting of one and three-quarter acres of land near Larchmont Harbor, with landing and bathing privileges, a large field-stone and shingled dwelling, and commodious stable and garage. The purchaser will take immediate possession.

J. Sterling Drake has sold for Mrs. Agathe Brehme to Joseph Rovegno her property on Manor Road, Castleton Corners, Staten Island, consisting of five acres of land, a house, barn, &c.

Building at Howard Beach.

Building operations on a large scale are to begin shortly at Howard Beach Estates, on Jamaica Bay. James P. Fitzgerald, a builder of Saratoga Springs, is contracting for the erection of thirty houses and work on this operation will be started at an early date.

Street improvements at Howard Beach are being pushed forward actively and it is expected that the streets now being laid with asphalt will be completed by Sept. 1, opening up many additional building plots.

CITY INSISTS ON FAIR TRACK RENTAL

Long Island Road Agrees to Reduce Local Service Lease by $50,000.

OFFER UNDER ADVISEMENT

Plan Involves Use of Tracks from Corona to Little Neck and Whitestone.

At a joint conference last Wednesday between Chairman McAneny of the Rapid Transit Commission of the Board of Estimate, Chairman McCall of the Public Service Commission, Borough President Connelly of Queens, and C. L. Addison and J. A. McCrea, representing the Long Island Railroad Company, the railroad officials were informed that under no circumstances would the city lease the Long Island Railroad tracks from Corona to the city line at Little Neck and Whitestone for the operation of rapid transit trains at the $250,000 annual rental demanded by the company. They were further advised that no lease would be entered into except at a rental based on a fair rate of interest on the value of the property or based on the average net earnings of the company for the last five years.

As a result the railroad company agreed to reduce its rental $50,000 per annum, offering the tracks at a flat annual rental of $200,000 a year for a period of ten years, with the option of a ten-year renewal, also giving the city the privilege of canceling the lease at any time upon three years' notice.

No action was taken at the meeting. The new offer of the railroad company was taken under consideration until engineers could report on the probable number of passengers that would be carried and the cost of operation.

The representatives of the property owners who were present backed up the city authorities in their demand for a lower rental, at the same time urging the pressing need of rapid transit in the Third Ward, which now has no rapid transit whatever, although having an area nearly as great as the entire Borough of the Bronx.

At a meeting of the property owners held after the conference it was stated that the operation of rapid transit trains over the eleven miles of Long Island tracks in the Third Ward would not only serve 60,000 people living there but at least 10,000 people living beyond the city line, who would take the trolley lines and jitneys to the station at Little Neck, and then reach the heart of New York for a 5-cent fare, as compared to the present commutation cost of 41 cents per day and 74 cents for a round-trip fare.

NEW QUEENS BOULEVARD.

Title to Land Necessary for Improvement Vested in City.

Resolutions have been adopted by the Board of Estimate which clears the way for laying out the new Queens Boulevard. The resolutions vested in the city title to all the land remaining to be acquired for the work with the exception of a plot at Elmhurst on which stands the Elmhurst Presbyterian Church. It is not the intention of the city to buy this church property, which is valued at over $200,000, but to make a contract for moving it back.

This will cost about $65,000. The contract for this work has not yet been executed between the officials of the church and the city.

By the resolution the city gets title to all the land from Grand Street in Elmhurst to Hillside Avenue in Jamaica, and which is roughly valued at $2,000,000.

The commissioners in condemnation who are taking this property have completed taking testimony and they are now in executive session, fixing the values. They have reached a point almost at Forest Hills. They will be ready to make their preliminary report by the first of next year.

New Paving in Manhattan.

Borough President Marks announced yesterday that the following list of streets is about to be repaved during September, and he requests that residents on these streets take notice that any desired subsurface connections for gas, electricity, steam or water should be made at once, for after the new pavement is laid no cut therein will be permitted for one year, except in case of accident. New-type signs with this warning are now being placed at the corners of the streets about to be paved.

Granite — Madison Street, from Roosevelt Street to New Chambers Street.

Sheet Asphalt—Forty-fourth Street, from Madison Avenue to a point about 124 feet east of the east curb line; Forty-eighth Street, Broadway to Eighth Avenue; Fiftieth Street, Madison Avenue to a point averaging 328 feet east of the east curb line; Sixty-sixth Street, Park Avenue to Fifth Avenue; Seventy-sixth Street, Lexington Avenue to Park Avenue; 104th Street, Central Park West to Manhattan Avenue; Broadway, Forty-seventh Street to Columbus Circle, from curb to rail (granite between tracks).

WANT LOWER INSURANCE.

Long Island City Rate Declared to be Exorbitant.

For over fifteen years an addition or district charge of 15 cents and 25 cents per $100 has been made in the fire insurance rates for building in the Long Island City section of the Borough of Queens. This extra charge was based upon conditions which existed in 1899, when there was an inadequate water supply, poor street paving, &c.

The Manufacturing and Industrial Committee of the Queens Chamber of Commerce has taken up this question with the intention of having the extra charge removed. If it is successful, it will mean the saving of many thousands of dollars annually to the big manufacturers and owners of homes of all kinds in Long Island City.

The movement to have these charges lowered was started over a year ago, at which time C. G. M. Thomas was Chairman of the committee. The present committee, of which William D. Bloodgood is Chairman, renewed the efforts in this matter a few months ago through the Fire Insurance Exchange of New York. At the request of the Manufacturing Committee, a series of tests of the pressure and volume of water at the various fire hydrants in Long Island City was made last month jointly by the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity, the National Board of Fire Underwriters, and the New York Fire Insurance Exchange.

The results of these tests are now being compiled, and, if favorable, there is every reason to expect that lower fire insurance rates will be established in Long Island City.

To Dredge Rockaway Creek.

The south shore of Long Island has never lessened its efforts in behalf of a through waterway, and provisions are being made all the time to meet any legislative move in the direction of an appropriation.

In connection it is interesting to note the recent appropriation by the Town of Hempstead to dredge out East Rockaway Creek. For some time the village officials of East Rockaway and the Oceanside Board of Trade have been urging this measure. The channel will be dredged to a depth of six feet at low tide and widened to fifty feet. The basin at the head of the stream will also be dredged.

This stream will then be navigable for all kinds of craft, including some of the large motorboats. It will be of inestimable benefit to the towns of Oceanside, Lynbrook, Rockville Centre, and East Rockaway, which adjoin this waterway, and will provide direct access to the latter bodies of water.

MANHATTAN BUILDING.

Shows Slight Increase in July Over Previous Year.

The report of the Manhattan Bureau of Buildings for the month of July shows that plans were filed for fifty new buildings costing $4,097,080 as against forty-three costing $4,605,350 the same month last year, thereby showing an increase of seven in number of buildings, but a falling off of $508,270 in moneys involved.

The report further shows that plans were filed for one dwelling costing $30,000 against three costing $410,000 last year; nineteen tenements costing $1,585,000 as against sixteen costing $2,000,000 last year; one hotel costing $60,000 as against one costing $185,000 last year; eight store and loft buildings costing $1,444,000 as against five costing $450,000 last year; no office buildings as against two costing $1,050,000 last year; two factories costing $3,000 as against four costing $260,000 last year; one church costing $200,000 as against none last year; one school house costing $600,000 as against none last year; one municipal building costing $2,000 as against two last year costing $50,000; one place of amusement costing $40,000 as against three costing $154,000 last year; twelve stables and garages costing a total of $122,080 as against three last year costing $43,000, and three other structures costing $11,000 as against four last year costing $3,350.

BRONX BUILDING.

Figures Show a Fifty-two Per Cent. Gain for Half Year.

Building records in the Borough of the Bronx for the first six months of the present year show a net gain of 52 per cent. over the amount expended during that period in 1914 for the erection of buildings. The borough led every city in the United States of over 200,000 in the percentage of increased building operations.

It is also worthy of note that in the actual amount to be expended in new buildings the Bronx ranked sixth, the only cities whose records show expenditure in excess of the Bronx being Manhattan, Chicago, Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Cleveland, in the order named. The first four of these cities have a population of over 1,000,000, while in the case of Cleveland, the Bronx figures are almost as large as those shown by the Ohio city, whose population in 1910 exceeded that of the Bronx by over 100,000.

WESTCHESTER—FOR SALE OR TO LET. | WESTCHESTER—FOR SALE OR TO LET.

All-Year-Round Country Home by the Sea

ON Echo Bay, about midway between Larchmont and New Rochelle, there is a country home with 800 feet of sea water front, which realizes the dream of many a man and which can be bought for much less than it would cost to create that dream.

There are three acres of ground covered with fine old trees, offering the unusual combination of seaside and woodland.

The house has 19 rooms and 5 bathrooms, including 6 master bedrooms and 5 servants' bedrooms; also 6 open fireplaces.

The garage-stable has room for three large cars, a carriage room and five stalls and two men servants' bedrooms over.

All facilities and improvements that an owner expects in a thoroughly modern house are found in this home worked out into a place of unusual attractiveness, in which the buildings seem a part of the grounds, and the whole forms a picture from every point of view, from the inside out, or from the outside in.

The name of the place is

Carlina

It is on the Boston Post Road, is a mile from the New Rochelle station, and has a trolley all the way. An important consideration in the keeping of servants. The property is on what is known as Premium Point, and has the exclusive bathing privileges of a white sandy beach, private dock and deep yacht anchorage.

Full particulars, visit to the property and price can all be arranged. The house can be bought for immediate occupancy, furnished or unfurnished. Full commission paid to brokers.

Mr. and Mrs Tenant.

Due to present business conditions we have just finished a new apartment house at an extremely low cost without in any way lowering the quality.

This enables us to rent apartments at prices which never have been and we believe never again will be duplicated.

The normal price of an apartment of 12 rooms and four baths is 50% higher than our price.

An Apartment That Is a Real Home

Some people prefer to buy an old house rather than build a new one, because there is about an old house a livability, a character, which cannot be duplicated.

For the same reason some people prefer one of the older apartment houses built in the days of leisurely comfort, when expense of building was not so great.

Such houses offer bigger rooms, more rooms, more closets and a certain indescribable air of homelikeness that more than compensates for the lack of the ultra-modern improvements of the newest houses.

This is especially true when the rents for the same amount of space average lower than in the newest apartments.

Such a house is 495 West End Avenue. There are now available the following:

2nd and 4th Floors—	9 Rooms and 3 Baths, $2,000.00
3rd Floor—	11 Rooms and 3 Baths, $2,200.00
7th Floor—	11 Rooms and 3 Baths, $2,500.00
9th Floor—	11 Rooms and 3 Baths, $2,700.00
6th Floor—	9 Rooms and 3 Baths, $2,100.00
8th Floor—	10 Rooms and 3 Baths, $2,600.00

As these apartments have their own personality, you must see them to appreciate what they really offer you.

Loton H. Slawson Company 171 Madison Avenue, New York
Agent and Manager.

An Opportunity for the Right Couple

Why do so many people with plenty of means continue to live in the older apartment houses year after year?

Because they know that there are some things that the newest apartments cannot give, and that good service is as essential as artificial refrigeration.

A house of this type—that is, of roominess and comfort, at very low rentals—is No. 391 West End Avenue.

The following apartments are vacant:

2 Apartments—	each 7 Rooms and 1 Bath, $1,250.00
1 Apartment —	of 8 Rooms and 1 Bath, $1,500.00
1 Apartment —	of 8 Rooms and 1 Bath, $1,700.00

PRIZES FOR POSTERS OFFERED IN NEWARK

Contest Announced for Celebration of 250th Anniversary of City's Settlement.

$1,800 FOR THREE AWARDS

Designs Must Be Suitable for Both Hangings and Stamps—Big Fund for Settlements.

The Committee of One Hundred, which is arranging for the celebration next year of the 250th anniversary of the settlement of the City of Newark, N. J., announced yesterday the offer of $1,800 in prizes for the best three poster designs suitable for reproduction and use as part of the publicity campaign for the celebration. The competition, which is open to all the artists of the United States, will close on Oct. 5, 1915. The first prize is to be $1,000, and the second, $500.

Among the artists who have announced their intention to take part in the competition, are Edward Penfield, Louis Fancher, W. G. Sesser, Adolph Treidler, M. C. Perley, Frank Bittner, Robert J. Wildhack, C. B. Falls, Miss Helen Dryden, and Louis Treviso. The judges of the contest will be John Cotton Dana, J. H. Bacheller, and Frederick J. Kerr, all of Newark, and Charles Matlack Price, and Arthur W. Wiener of New York.

All of the designs are to be placed on public exhibition and the visitors to the exhibit are to decide by vote the awarding of the third prize. The rules of the contest provide; the original drawings or designs must be 24 by 32 inches, requiring not more than five printings for reproduction as a hanger and as a poster stamp, and bearing the words: "250th Anniversary Celebration, Newark, New Jersey, May-October, 1916. 1666-1916." Each artist may use his own judgment as to the subject and execution of the design, which must be addressed "Poster Competition, Free Public Library, Newark, N. J.," with a separate sealed envelope containing the name and address of the artist.

The committee requests that every competitor gave the price of his original drawing submitted on the card bearing his name and address, as members of the committee and other individuals may desire to buy drawings which fall to win the prizes. The committee makes this comment on the prestige of Newark:

"In proportion to its population Newark excels every other community in the world in the volume, value and variety of manufactured goods, and it is felt quite logical that the exposition should be limited to a show of the products of her own workshops."

A fund of $250,000 has been subscribed for the celebration. The features will include a historical pageant, in which 5,000 men and women will participate, under the supervision of Thomas Woods Stevens, and industrial and civic expositions.

Lafayette Fund.

The Lafayette Fund of the Hotel Vanderbilt, which sends comfort kits to the French soldiers, received contributions during the week that brought the total subscriptions up to $75,619. The work of this fund is to be enlarged during the coming Fall and Winter. Bains-Douches are to be supplied to the men at the front, who will enjoy the luxury of a shower bath, as well as find it useful for other purposes. One of these equipments will accommodate six men at a time and supply baths to 1,000 men every day. It may be used for disinfecting clothing, sterilizing drinking water, and to check the spread of epidemic diseases. The cost of the complete apparatus is $200.

Sicilian Relief Fund.

An American Branch of the Sicilian Relief Fund has been organized to aid families of Sicilian soldiers in the Italian Army, and Joseph H. Choate and Daniel Chester French have been asked to act as Honorary Vice-Presidents.

Bern Committee.

An appeal for assistance has been sent out by the Bern Committee of Assistance for War Prisoners, connected with the Red Cross, which was created in December, 1914, and has branches at 5 Place de la Gare, where Mrs. Valentin is in charge; 30 Langasse, Basle, Mrs. Sarasin-Speiser; 2 Rue de la Croix Rouge, Geneva, Lyceum de Suisse, and at other places.

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE.

After breaking sharply on the early dealings, the market on the Consolidated Stock Exchange rallied quite well in the cases of numerous stocks. The trading was active for a Saturday short session. An adverse influence was early exerted by quotations for sterling exchange, indicating renewed weakness in that department.

CITY BANK STUDENTS GET RIGID TRAINING

Hard Work Laid Out for Men Being Prepared for Latin-American Branches.

MUST STUDY DAY AND NIGHT

At Luncheon Conversation in Spanish or Portuguese Is Directed by Instructors.

Plans for the National City Bank's special training school for South American barking are now complete and the school has begun actual work. Recently the bank announced that it had decided to add to its many educational activities this newest feature for preparing young men for posts in its Latin-American branches.

From some sixty applications the committee on the school selected the twenty men best qualified to form the first class. Of these every one is already a college graduate having previously specialized in finance and economics. It is expected that it will take a year at least for these picked men to complete the course of study and practice laid out for them. During this time each of them will be paid $50 a month, "not that it is expected that any of them will actually earn that amount, but rather to make them independent of outside support."

The almost utter lack of men fitted to represent the United States in South American commercial life is the reason for establishing this school. Accordingly, the course of study not only includes banking in all its detail, but also French, Spanish, and Portuguese, as well as South American history, politics, and social usages.

Work from 8 to 6.

The day's work begins at 8 o'clock and continues until 6. From 8 until 9 in the morning classes are held; then, at 9 the men divide into groups of three or four and work some of the bank's twenty-six departments. From 12 to 1 all of the twenty men are expected to eat luncheon in the bank's restaurant, where there are special tables at which conversation in Spanish or Portuguese is under the direction of the language teachers. The Spanish professor is Maximo Illuralde of New York University, while A. M. Torres, assistant to the Brazilian Consul, presides at the Portuguese table.

After luncheon the squads return to their various stations and continue there until closing time, 5 o'clock. Then, up they all go to the class rooms for an hour's abstract work. At 6 their day in the bank is over. These twenty students have their lessons to prepare for the next morning, besides digesting what they have seen and heard during the past day's routine which might make even West Point cadets turn pale.

Every three months there will be examinations just as rigid as fairness will permit, and these must be passed or the student will be dropped.

"This school's primary purpose," Mr. Schwedimann, the school Director, explained, "is to take men who already have considerable acquaintance with the theories of banking and to give them a good practical knowledge of how a bank works, using our own organization as a laboratory. Besides that, we aim to equip our students so that they may go to Rio de Janeiro of Buenos Ayres and do business according to the best customs of the place, plus the finesse we have up here. We hope to graduate men who will go out to our branches and become, to all appearances, good South Americans.

Remain Loyal to U. S.

"But on the other hand," the Director continued, "we want them to be able, in spite of their exterior changes, to remain loyal men of the States in their hearts, realizing that they are serving their native land best by living away from it and not blatantly proclaiming at all times the superiority of the United States of America. In other words, we are going to ding it into their heads that they must do business in this new field according to the customs of the country, and not as it is done back home.

"Of the studies they pursue during the year, the most important subject of all is credit, for that is the corner-stone of international banking. Credit they get every morning, noon and night and I hope that they will dream credit as well. Besides this, we intend to teach the men enough about foreign exchange, banking practices, loans and securities, and commercial geography, a subject by the way, that is not adequately taught in the United States. In addition, each man will have some instruction in bookkeeping, auditing, and every-day mathematics, as used by bankers."

The members of this new school of finance represent practically all parts of the country, a complete list of the colleges from which they come including Yale, Cornell, Bowdoin, University of Missouri, Princeton, Kentucky State, University of Michigan, Tufts, Harvard, De Pauw, University of Chicago, the Catholic University, University of Virginia, and the University of California.

Director Is "a Big Brother."

To be sure that each man is making proper progress, weekly reports upon each one of them are sent to the Director, who in turn gets from the students their own estimates of their standing. He intends to be a "big brother" to these embryo bankers, and not an overlord. When once a man leaves the school he is not bound to serve the National City Bank for any definite term of years, but it is expected that he will make banking his life work whether he continues permanently with his financial alma mater or not.

During the year's training opportunity will be offered for the twenty young men to meet as many captains of finance as possible, and the school will have the co-operation of Columbia, Yale, Harvard, and New York University.

Frank A. Vanderlip, President of the bank, will keep in close personal touch with this pioneer class, and among the other bank officials who will lecture and give advice are: John E. Gardin, Vice President, one of the great authorities in the United States on foreign exchange; George E. Roberts, Assistant to the President, and former Director of the United States Mint; James H. Perkins, Vice President; Herbert R. Eldridge, Vice President; Stephen H. Voorhees, Vice President; W. S. Kies, manager of the Foreign Trade Department; G. Edwin Gregory, cashier; Joseph T. Cosby, manager of the Foreign Department, and John G. Scattergood, auditor.

EDUCATION NOTES.

Andrew W. Edson, who for the last two weeks has been acting as Chief Superintendent, has gone to Brookfield, Vt., where his family is. He is succeeded as Acting City Superintendent by William McAndrews.

Some sort of vocational work is said to be very much needed in School District 18.

The Board of Education has been asked to obtain a new school site at some suitable place in the immediate neighborhood of 140th Street and Cypress Avenue, which would afford practical and actual relief from the growing congestion.

An addition to the main building of the Girls' High School on Nostrand Avenue and Halsey Street, Brooklyn, similar to the Macon Street addition, is deemed necessary. The Principal of the school says that nearly all of the first-year pupils will be on double time in September.

It has been recommended to the Board of Education to acquire the property to the south of P. S. 11, Brooklyn, in order to prevent the erection thereon of an apartment or other building, which would blanket the entire southerly exposure of the school, darkening the windows in a large number of classrooms.

The register at the close of the school year in elementary schools in District 39, as compared with the register in June last year, shows a gain of 1,947, principally in the southern and western part of Brownsville, Brooklyn. A new school to the south of P. S. 109 is urged.

STERLING EXCHANGE $4.69.

Possibility of the English Pound Going to $4.25 Discussed.

Foreign exchange rates yesterday moved further down, in the absence of any more definite information as to measures for financing Europe's obligations here through credit advances. As in the preceding days, demand sterling pressed heavily on the market, there being few purchases even at the unprecedented reductions made by the sellers. London checks sold at $4.69, or 17½ cents a pound under the normal quotation, a matter of 3 per cent. Demand closed at the low figure, with a loss of 1⅜ from Friday's close. Cables sold at $4.70.

Some foreign exchange authorities say that unless action is taken by the Bank of England to provide funds here in much larger volume than it has provided through its gold exports there is reason to believe that the price of $4.25 for the English pound, which was once suggested as a very remote possibility growing out of the war's overturn of trade balances will be touched and passed.

The commission announces for Sept. 8 a competitive examination for gardener, for men only, to fill a vacancy at $720 a year at the Phoenix Indian School, Arizona. As an insufficient number of applications were filed for this examination for this position announced to be held on July 21, qualified persons are urged to enter this examination. Unmarried eligibles only will be considered. Competitors will be examined in practical questions in gardening and training experience. The appointee will be required to do vegetable and landscape gardening under irrigation. Applicants who have not had experience for at least one year in both vegetable and landscape gardening under irrigation will not be eligible. Applicants must have reached their twenty-first but not their fiftieth birthday on the date of the examination. Further information may be obtained from the commission, Wash

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Irregular—Bank Statement Reflects the Receipt of British Gold.

The stock market was mixed yesterday, with many stocks showing the continuing influence of the war orders which have played so spectacular a part in the market of recent weeks. Further adverse effect was exerted by the anthracite decision on the stock of some of the roads directly affected, but others showed net gains for the day, suggesting that the effect of that decision so far as they were concerned had run its course. The Washington dispatches indicate that the Commerce Commission assumes that the rate reduction will not cause a lowering of the price of anthracite coal and that in the final count the railroads will have to suffer the reduction only on the coal mined by independent companies. On the rest the commission's theory seems to be that the railroads or companies affiliated with them will get back in the price of the coal what they lose through the rate reduction. If that is to be the case, the public will derive no benefit at all from the rate reduction. This theory reduces the loss to the anthracite roads through the decision handed down on Thursday from a rough estimate of $8,000,000 to a rough estimate of $1,600,000.

The bank statement was more interesting than the stock market, for it showed the effect of the receipt of the big gold consignment from the Bank of England. It may also have reflected some borrowing on the securities sent here by England, but that was not clearly indicated. Such borrowing would, however, account for the increase of over $25,000,000 shown in the loan account in the actual figures of the bank statement and in part for the increase in deposits, which exceed the gold arrival by more than $30,000,000.

The banks gained cash from other sources as well, for the reserve held in their own vaults showed an increase of more than $29,000,000. This not only cared for the increase in deposits, but added more than $21,000,000 to the surplus reserve. Another such gain would establish the reserve at a new high record. So great is the existing surplus of the New York banks and trust companies that they alone could absorb the talked-of $500,000,000 credit to Great Britain on the pledge of American securities and still have a surplus larger than they ever had prior to the establishment of the Federal Reserve Bank system. And such a credit could be extended without barring the banks from extending the necessary credit for trade, for the resources of the Federal Reserve Banks, not available for loans on securities, are available for all trade purposes, and their resources have as yet hardly been touched.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Some Wide Fluctuations.

The market for certain of the active specialties had a curious aspect at times yesterday. Perhaps traders who stand ready to buy for a turn whenever offerings appear at an attractive figure were out of the city, but at any rate small demand existed when profit-takers were most desirous of selling Willys-Overland, Crucible Steel, Allis-Chalmers, and Bethlehem Steel. The first named dropped under a few sales from 190 to 175, later recovering to 186. Allis-Chalmers retreated from 42 to 36½ and then moved up again to 40¾. Crucible Steel went from 79 to 70 and up to 72½, and Bethlehem, after selling at 292, sagged off to 285, recovering to 290. It is the chance of extraordinary fluctuations of this sort that racks the nerves of any but the hardiest speculators.

As to the B. R. T. Dividend.

Brooklyn Rapid Transit shares, which lost more than 3 points gross and 2¾ net on Friday, advanced a full point yesterday to 85. The immediate cause for the recovery seemed to be a statement from a Director that there was no reason whatever for thinking that the dividend might be reduced. Earnings last year, he said, justified a 6 per cent. payment to shareholders, and there was nothing to indicate any falling off of revenue. The Street was puzzled to explain Friday's drop, as whatever talk was heard of a possible dividend reduction was not of an insistent character. If the attack on the stock was nothing more than a bear raid it would seem that prices held up very well in spite of the 3-point recession, inasmuch as the market was decidedly nervous and unsettled in numerous quarters at the time.

Pacific Mail Remains Quiet.

Those who expected that Pacific Mail stock would reflect the positive evidence presented in a sale of ships that it means to go out of business were disappointed yesterday. The stock did advance something more than a point, but movements greater than this have frequently occurred during the last six weeks. The book value of the company's fleet, as displayed in the balance sheet issued recently for 1914, was $11,800,000, and the sale of five of its twelve ships is believed to have brought in close to $8,000,000. If this figure actually was approximated, a balance of $3,800,000 remains to be covered by the sale of eight vessels in order that the book value may be realized. The balance sheet indicated that a conservative liquidating value for the stock would be $50 a share, yet buyers have not been sufficiently interested to lift the market quotation as high as 40.

The British Credit.

There are two ways of looking at the foreign exchange problem. The prevailing view is that of bankers who feel that the situation has now reached a point where something must be done to prevent complete demoralization of this country's foreign trade. This view holds that the problem is America's as well as England's and that for the good of this country every assistance should be rendered to any movement from the other side for the establishment here of a half-billion-dollar credit. In so far as orders already placed and not subject to cancellation are concerned the decline in exchange cannot hurt the manufacturers, for payment must be made in this country in current funds, throwing the loss in exchange on the foreign buyer. On the other hand, some orders may be canceled and further business that should come here may not be placed if exchange continues to move against Europe. The opposing view is held by bankers with a strong leaning toward British sentiment. They say that the decline in exchange does not present a serious problem and that it is nothing for New York to become agitated about.

One of Many Worries.

Said one of these bankers yesterday: "In this country the growing trade balance in our favor looms up very large and the decline in exchange seems to call for immediate action. It is engrossing. But if you were to go to London you would not have been there twenty-four hours before you absorbed the other side's atmosphere. You would then agree that the establishment of a credit here can await England's convenience. Standing in Lombard Street, you get a wider view of Great Britain's task. There are problems in South Africa, Calcutta, Montreal and Petrograd, and the foreign exchange difficulty becomes but a minor worry."

FIGHT STOCK ASSESSMENT.

Investors in International Steam Pump Issue Statement.

Opposition to the proposed reorganization plan of the International Steam Pump Company, which calls for an assessment of $12.50 a share, took definite shape yesterday in a statement issued by a group of stockholders. The law firm of Goldman, Helde & Unger, 120 Broadway, issued the statement, which said:

Our clients are of the opinion that the proposed plan of reorganization of the International Steam Pump Company is most unfair to the stockholders of the company. We have reliable information to the effect that while the reorganization agreement is dated Aug. 5, 1915, it was, in fact, made up four or five months ago. Since then, we are informed, the company has received a number of large orders on war contracts, which insures a large and steadily increasing business in the immediate future. We believe that the stockholders are entitled to much better treatment than is accorded them under the terms of the proposed reorganization. A plan is now under way to organize an independent committee of stockholders, the purpose of which is to oppose the proposed reorganization and strive for a reorganization which will be fair to all interested in the company.

Sponsors for the plan said on Friday that opposition was looked for, but that it was thought differences could be adjusted without difficulty.

NEWS OF THE CORPORATIONS AND THE BANKS

$3,100,000 GAIN IN GOLD RESERVES

Increase of $1,900,000 in Gold in Vault Also Reported by Federal Reserve Banks.

MORE CITY WARRANTS HELD

Gain of $458,000 Reported in This Class of Paper—Additional Purchases of U. S. Bonds.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—The Federal Reserve Board's weekly statement indicates a gain of $3,100,000 in total gold reserve, of $1,900,000 in the amount of gold in vault, and a loss of about $4,000,000 in reserve other than gold. The total reserves of the bank decreased about $900,000 during the week. New York, Philadelphia, and Kansas City show the largest gains in gold reserves, partly through increased credit balances in the gold settlement fund, while Boston shows a loss of $1,300,00, mainly the result of transfers on the books of the gold settlement fund.

The amount of discounted commercial paper owned by the banks at the end of the week shows a decrease of about $250,000. Of the total, about 70 per cent. is carried by the three Southern banks. Bankers' acceptances on hand increased about $136,000, the larger gain reported by the New York bank being offset in part by losses shown for the Boston, Kansas City, and San Francisco banks.

Of the total amount of acceptances for which detailed figures were on hand at the Federal Reserve Board at the close of business on Aug. 13, about $7,100,000, or over 39 per cent., were based on transactions involving the importation of merchandise, and $4,200,000, or about 35 per cent., on the exportation of goods, while the remainder of about $700,000 was indeterminate.

The relative amount of paper on hand maturing within ten days declined from 10.3 per cent. to 8.4 per cent., while the percentage of paper maturing within thirty days increased from 31.9 to 33.4 per cent. Bills maturing after ninety days, practically all agricultural paper, decreased slightly in amount and constitute at present about 5 per cent. of the total amount of commercial and bankers' bills on hand.

Additional purchases of $104,000 of United States 3 per cent. bonds are reported by the Cleveland and Chicago banks. This class of Government bonds is held by the two banks only and amounts at present to $2,049,000.

Municipal warrants in the hands of the banks show an increase of $458,000, all the banks reporting larger holdings than at the end of the previous week. Over 60 per cent. of all other resources is represented by national bank notes in hand. Net deposits decreased about $4,000,000 during the week. The larger decrease of $5,500,000 for the New York bank is represented almost entirely by Clearing House exchanges.

Federal Reserve agents report a total of $143,300,000 of notes received from the Controller of the Currency and $102,000,000 issued to the banks. Against the latter amount they hold $85,800,000 of gold and $17,600,000 of paper. The banks report a total of $90,300,000 of notes in circulation, and a net liability thereon of $15,700,000.

Financial Chronicle Says Relief Given by Commerce Commission Is Insignificant.

NO HOPE FOR FUTURE AID

Union Pacific Finds Some Consolation in Decision in the Ogden Gateway Case.

The Interstate Commerce Commission's decision in the Western rate case, which allowed the roads only a small part of the increases of freight rates asked for, has brought forth from friends of the carriers and students of the transportation business a great deal of criticism.

"The decision of the commission with reference to these Western roads," says The Commercial and Financial Chronicle in its current issue, "is disappointing in the extreme, for all the substantial demands of the roads are denied on one ground or another, though these demands, according to the commission's own statement of them, were exceedingly moderate. It follows that those inclined to pin their faith to the commission as likely to respond to the urgent needs of the carriers, thereby bringing nearer the solution of the gr

VARIED PHASES OF THE COUNTRY'S BUSINESS LIFE

TELLS OF FOREIGN COMMERCIAL LAWS

New Government Volume Deals with Procedure in Courts of Several Countries.

The increasing participation of American business men in foreign trade, on account of the larger opportunities developed abroad by the European war, has emphasized the need of a better comprehension of the commercial laws of the various countries with which exporters here have trade relations. Even before the outbreak of the present conflict, one of the most discouraging features of doing a foreign business was the inability, oftentimes, to collect money due for the goods sold. Lack of knowledge of the proper procedure to be followed in exacting settlements for accounts overdue, or where debtors refused to pay altogether, frequently led to the abandonment by the American creditor of his claim.

Naturally, the largest American firms, transacting business abroad through the medium of branches or responsible agents, fared better as a general proposition than the smaller merchants. The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce has recognized the inadequacy of previous special information relating to this feature of foreign trade, and has begun to furnish data in the concrete form long desired by exporters. The first fruits of this campaign are contained in a handy volume just published by the Department of Commerce.

This publication which, it is understood, is the first of a series of similar character, embodies studies by Archibald J. Wolfe, commercial agent, and deals in very readable form with the commercial laws of England, Scotland, Germany and France. In preparing the volume it has been the aim of the department to present to the American manufacturer, exporter and merchant, and to the American lawyer, those practical matters of foreign commercial law and legal procedure in which, through the growth of American commercial relations in foreign countries, he may be interested.

The purpose of the enterprise was to secure such practical information concerning foreign law and practice as could not readily be found in books. To this end a "questionnaire" was prepared, and personal studies based upon it were made by recognized legal practitioners in the countries under investigation, supported by personal interviews undertaken by Mr. Wolfe. The information obtained in answer to the "questionnaire" covers these points: Courts before which American plaintiffs or defendants may appear in cases of commercial litigation; brief sketches of jurisdiction of various courts, particularly as to amounts involved; classes of lawyers who can represent either party to a suit; security for costs; amount and form of security; court costs; assignment of claim for purpose of suit; chattel mortgage, and forms of; attachment, when and where permissible; powers of attorney; attorney's fees and prevailing rate of charge; what steps American creditors must take to secure their claims against bankrupt estates; time limit of presenting proof of claim, and many other details.

The volume also treats of the formalities necessary for Americans desiring to establish an agency, a branch establishment, or a subsidiary stock company, and gives data regarding their special taxation. The matter of bills, notes and drafts is discussed, as well as the standing of American promissory notes and the principal provisions of law relative to bills, notes, and drafts. There is also special information on such subjects as contracts and special laws such as laws relating to unfair competition, patents, &c. The work deals throughout with questions involving, principally those matters in which the American creditor having a foreign debtor is especially interested, namely, the judicial methods for securing the payment of his debt.

Inasmuch as the information obtained was not uniformly complete in the countries covered by the volume, and as various subjects were not covered in the original reports, the material was submitted to Edwin M. Borchard, Law Librarian of the Library of Congress, for revision and amplification. In the case of France it was not found feasible to follow the order of the questionnaire, the studies in that country being confined principally to the law of corporations and business associations, the matter of introducing American securities into the French market, and the law of bankruptcy.

Various subjects in German and French law—bankruptcy, execution of foreign judgments, matters of procedure, &c.—have been studied and original reports made. In addition, bibliographies of the principal works dealing with the various subjects discussed and glossaries of German and French technical terms in matters of commercial law and civil procedure have been appended.

The intricacies of commercial law procedure in some of the countries covered by the department's new book may be gained from this quotation from the chapter on Scottish courts and their jurisdiction:

"American plaintiffs can appear in all Scottish courts. Since, however, they are beyond the jurisdiction of Scottish courts, the court under such circumstances may order the American plaintiff to appoint an attorney who would be responsible for the expenses incurred and to be incurred in the action. When Americans are defendants in an action they are subject to the jurisdiction of the Scottish courts only when funds belonging to them have been validly seized or attached in Scotland. If, however, an American citizen has brought an action against a domiciled Scotsman, the latter is entitled to bring a counteraction against the American arising out of the same transaction on the ground of what is known in the Scottish law as 'ex reconventione.'"

The volume in its chapter devoted to trusts and combinations in Germany makes the interesting observation that "there is now in Germany a decided difference of opinion among jurists with regard to the legality of combinations, and whether the members of a combination are bound by their contract or may at any time recede from it."

The position of foreigners before the law in Germany appears to be a liberal one. The German law makes no distinction between foreigners and German subjects in their capacity of being party to a law suit, for every one who has rights at law can be a party to a lawsuit. The German law considers every living person capable of being a party to a suit and, in addition, certain institutions or entities endowed with the rights of artificial persons.

In France the law is administered by courts of ordinary jurisdiction and by special courts. The former, in principle, have general jurisdiction over all cases not withdrawn from their jurisdiction by special laws. The courts of special jurisdiction, on the other hand, are bound in their competency by the limits of the provisions of the special law creating them. Americans, in common with other aliens, have the right to bring or defend actions in any of the courts of England.

Among those who collaborated with Mr. Wolfe in the preparation of the volume were such well-known legal and trade authorities as Arthur J. Barratt of London, Allen McNeil of Edinburgh, Consul General Robert P. Skinner, Vice Consul General De Witt C. Poole, Jr., Dr. Ludwig Wertheimer, James H. Vickery, M. Andre Lesourd, Donald Harner, and H. C. Coxe, American Deputy Consul General at Paris.

Japanese to Exhibit in Chile.

The Department of Commerce has received a cablegram from Attaché Verne L. Havens, Santiago, Chile, in which he mentions a combination of Japanese steamship lines and Japanese merchants that has been formed under Japanese Government auspices for the purpose of establishing an exposition in Santiago, Chile's capital. The exposition will have a $100,000 stock of Japanese goods, which will be offered for sale.

THAT POTASH EMBARGO.

Opinions Differ in the Glass Trade Regarding Its Seriousness.

In view of the practically absolute embargo on potash exports from Germany—the amount of the carbonate arriving in June being only 588 pounds, as compared with 1,385,750 pounds in the same month of 1914—The Crockery and Glass Journal recently made inquiries among a number of manufacturers as to what they contemplated doing when the stock on hand was exhausted. Could they make a satisfactory glass without potash? If not, what substitute could be employed? Would soda ash glass work satisfactorily?

Among the replies received was one from M. A. Smith, President of the McKee Glass Company, Jeannette, Penn., who said:

We are in receipt of your favor of the 29th, and are pleased to advise you that we have a substitute for potash used in the manufacture of figured and plain lead blanks for cutting, but if we make the substitution the cutters to whom these blanks are shipped will be unable to get a satisfactory polish by dipping in acid with the formula they are now using.

It is possible that when the potash supply is exhausted in this country a substitute will be found for potash and a satisfactory dip can be given to the users of lead blanks which will make practically as good a quality of cut class as is being used at the present time.

Another firm, which would not be quoted by name, reported that while the matter was not quite so simple as the substitution of soda ash for potash, they had been able largely to dispense with the use of potash, and that in some cases important improvements in the glass had resulted.

A second firm which did not want its name used wrote:

We have a small supply of potash left. When it is all gone we will have to make a soda-ash glass, and the trade will have to take it if they must have glass. We do not know of any substitute. Our opinion is that we can make good glass with soda ash, but it will lack the brilliancy of the potash glass.

C. H. Blumenauer, President of the Jefferson Glass Company, Follansbee, W. Va., answered:

We scarcely know what we shall do when the potash in the country is exhausted. Our chemists have been steadily working to a point where we could dispense with the greater part of the potash, but the work is slow and unsatisfactory.

M. G. Bryce, head of the United States Glass Company, Pittsburgh, declined to answer the questions asked, on the ground that to do so would be to betray trade secrets. He added that it would be quite a time yet before all the potash in the country was exhausted and that he did not think the question of what would be done when it was used up was worth while worrying about at the present time.

TO MINE SPANISH POTASH.

Concessionaires Given Royal Right to Work Cataluna Deposits.

The recent interest taken in the deposits of potash salts in Cataluna, Spain, which promise to be of extraordinary importance, has given rise to some discussion as to the best method to pursue in their exploitation, according to Consul General C. E. Hurst, Barcelona. Spain wishes to safeguard the domestic supply of potash by embodying in the mining concessions the necessary guarantee for the protection of Spanish agriculture. With this object in view, the royal decrees of June 30 and Oct. 1 were issued and a bill presented to the Cortes and approved by the Senate, which, when it becomes law, will regulate concessions to potash mines and permit the intervention of the State to protect the supply and its consumption. Pending the reopening of the Cortes, work on the potash deposits has been practically suspended, and as the demand for potash is augmented by the present European situation, the Spanish Government realizes that it might be prejudicial to national interests to hinder in any way the development of mining for this mineral.

Accordingly, a royal decree has been issued, in harmony with the general provisions of the bill now pending. It provides that the concessionaire of mines of potassic salts, as well as any potash-producing minerals, shall uninterruptedly work the mines to which rights may have been conceded, whether for carrying on experimental borings or for actual mining. In the latter case it will be understood that the obligation to exploit the mine will be enforced only when the value of the production covers the expense inourred. The concessionaire is obliged to reserve for national consumption such part of the salts produced as the Government shall deem advisable. All beds of potash shall be registered at the Civil Governor's office of the province in which they are found, and the Government will inspect the work on these concessions in order to enforce compliance with its regulations.

It is understood that large American users of potash are greatly interested in the Cataluna deposits.

DISLIKE DILLON'S 'KNOCKS.'

Trade Authority Calls on Him to Substantiate His Charges.

The atmosphere surrounding the plan of Commissioner Dillon of the State Department of Foods and Markets to dispose of farm products at auction under State supervision is not adding anything to his popularity in the local commission trade.

The Fruit Trade Journal, in its current issue, protests against Mr. Dillon's references to dishonesty among commission merchants as follows:

John J. Dillon, Commissioner of the New York State Department of Foods and Markets, continues to furnish the public press interviews reflecting upon the integrity and honesty of the fruit and produce trade as a whole. Mr. Dillon has made himself so ridiculous that the trade no longer takes a serious view of his plans for disposing of fruits at auction. They do, however, object to being referred to as dishonest, and it is now time for Mr. Dillon to specify some individual firm, if he has any proof against it, or known anything to its detriment. The fruit and produce trade are getting tired of having their honesty questioned by Mr. Dillon. It is time his bluff was called, and if he has any proof of dishonesty against anybody, let him come forward like a man and proceed with his case.

The latest developments in Commissioner Dillon's marketing plans include a contract with the Fruit Auction Company, of New York City, to sell apples and pears at auction in the New York Central Railroad's auction room on the Desbrosses Street pier. Whether this plan will be a success remains to be seen, but one thing is sure, namely, the trade are no longer specially interested in what Mr. Dillon says or does.

At the beginning they wanted to co-operate with Mr. Dillon in an effort to reduce the high cost of living, but he displayed such a woeful lack of the knowledge necessary to conduct the Department of Foods and Markets, and such an extreme desire for the sensational, and endeavored to curry favors with the farmer at the expense of the merchants, that they became suspicious of him. He is, however, being given sufficient rope to hang the proverbial calf.

It concludes by saying that the trade no longer cares whether Mr. Dillon sells fruit at auction or not, nor is it interested in his statement that he can get the fruit sold at 5 per cent., although the regular auction charge for selling it is only 2½ per cent.

Limit Dutch Import Licenses.

Commercial Attaché Erwin W. Thompson, stationed at The Hague, Netherlands, has cabled the Department of Commerce that the Netherlands Oversea Trust now gives import licenses only to those satisfactorily accounting in detail the ultimate destination of the last lot. Hereafter importers may sell only through a new distributing committee. Attaché Thompson also cabled the department that there is a great demand and agitation in the Netherlands for coal. The Oversea Trust will now issue licenses for American coal. Mr. Thompson advises the department to push American export when Oversea licenses are obtainable.

PROPER OUTLETS WOULD HELP TRADE

Many Clothiers' Troubles Are Attributed to Inability to Find Right Markets.

"The trouble with a large number of clothing manufacturers is that they lack a knowledge of proper merchandising methods." This statement was made by a member of a firm that has been remarkably successful in the clothing business, and that is said to do an annual business close to the $5,000,000 mark.

Reviewing the price-slashing methods that have prevailed for some seasons back in the clothing industry, this man said that the clothiers, as a rule, have not studied their market with the purpose of finding an outlet for goods that otherwise would have to be sacrificed in quarters which were oversupplied.

"The average clothier," he said, "has only one thing before him when certain goods that he has produced fail to move out promptly, and that is to sell them at any price. His entire energies are devoted to selling those goods, regardless of whether they bring a profit or are sold at cost or less. There is some excuse for this when the clothier is in need of funds and must sacrifice his merchandise in order to continue business, but where he does not face such an emergency it is most foolish on his part to sell his goods to any chance customer. We have held goods in this house for a long time with no opportunity to move them out at a price that would bring us a fair return. In the majority of cases, however, we have eventually sold these 'stickers' at a profit, even though it has been small.

"A case I have in mind is that of some clays which we made up early this year. We sold a fair quantity of these goods, but overestimated the immediate demand. Another house might have thought the situation hopeless and sold out at job prices, but we held the goods. We informed our trade that these goods were on hand ready for shipment, but received no response other than letters saying that the retailers were overstocked with goods of this description. We held our stock, however, and refused to job them out despite many offers. Eventually the goods came back into favor and a ready market was found for them.

"In most cases it will be found that goods which are not favored in one quarter may be sold easily in another. The manufacturer, however, must seek until he finds the proper market. If he grows discouraged with the lack of demand for his goods in one city he must investigate thoroughly the possibilities in other cities. Serges may not be selling very well in the South, or in the large cities of the East, but in the country towns only a very short distance from these big Eastern cities there may be an active demand for them.

"Besides this lack of discrimination between the merchandise that will sell in one place and prove unsalable in another, the clothier who is doing a medium-sized or small business makes another mistake in attempts to advertise much. You don't find the retailer on Avenue A trying to do the same thing that the big department store is successful at. He doesn't try to draw patrons from the whole city. He is satisfied to have as customers residents in his immediate section of the city. He knows their needs and caters to them. Even the slightest change in their mode of dress finds him immediately prepared. No clothing house of medium size can expect to cover the whole field in a successful manner. A little business may be secured from each town and city, but there will be constant complaints and switching of patronage from this house to another more fitted to supply properly the needs of the retailers. Each locality must be studied and an eye kept at the same time on the general situation.

"It is necessary for the successful clothing manufacturer to visit the markets he serves, and also the territory that for one reason or another has been closed to him. He frequently comes across valuable suggestions that may mean increased business for him. There is no excuse for the man who keeps his nose too close to the grindstone. He is apt to make the same mistake as the man who takes too broad an outlook on conditions. One is up against the same difficulty as the other.

"As an example of what can be done by the manufacturer who keeps in touch with tendencies and conditions in all quarters, I may cite a case of my own. While on a trip to the coast I noticed a certain style of garment which was worn extensively in that section of the country. A retailer in one of the coast cities does a very large business on this particular model. I met him and got him to submit a sample of the merchandise he used. We made up a suit and sent it to him with our price. It proved to be $1 below the price at which he was accustomed to buy these goods, and now there is every prospect of our doing a very large business with him on this particular make of garment.

"The small house must specialize, and the large house must specialize in a general way, keeping well informed on the whole situation. There will be a decline in price slashing and 'close-out' sales in the clothing business when the manufacturers learn to find the proper outlet for their products."

TO AID CLOTHING SALES.

Government Agent Will Study Trade Possibilities in the Orient.

The Department of Commerce has decided to conduct an energetic campaign in the Far East in behalf of American ready-made wearing apparel, as it is believed by Secretary Redfield that a large and lucrative field awaits our clothing manufacturers in China and Japan. The Secretary has, accordingly, made Dr. Stanhope Sams a commercial agent for the purpose of conducting the investigation. Dr. Sams, who was formerly connected with The Japan Times of Tokio and who is conversant with conditions in the countries to be investigated, called yesterday at the branch office of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in the Custom House.

"As a preliminary to my investigation," he said, "I am making a tour of the clothing and general wearing apparel centres of this country in order to confer with American manufacturers. I have met many of the leading clothing manufacturers of Maryland and Pennsylvania, and am now interviewing New York City clothiers. I have met, among others, William R. Corwine, Secretary of the National Association of Clothiers. Mr. Corwine, as well as the others, expressed great interest in the forthcoming investigation.

"It is my intention to investigate all forms of the ready-made wearing apparel situation in China and Japan. Up to recently the Germans had a monopoly in these lines in the two countries mentioned. They flooded the markets with low-priced goods, though the materials were by no means inferior. The English manufacturers were close competitors of the Germans. The latter, however, were always willing to undersell in order to capture the market, trusting to luck later to receive better prices when a market was established. Much the same thing has been true of the English manufacturers. The American manufacturer, on the other hand, has been so engrossed in the profitable market at home that he has not interested himself to any great extent in the possibilities of trade in the Orient.

"The American manufacturer, also, has been unwilling to meet the price competition, as he wants his profit at once on the goods he sells. The war, however, has brought a big change in conditions. Neither the Germans nor the English, hereafter, will be able to offer merchandise at the low prices which prevailed before the war, and right here comes the opportunity for the American manufacturers. These manufacturers, in some instances, have told me that they could meet the foreign competition in the two countries, but that they have been too busy at home to bother about foreign business. Now, however, they are desirous of going into the field after all of the facts have been developed by the investigation."

Dr. Sams said that a strong preference exists for American clothing, especially in Japan. The Japanese, he said, admire the "natty" appearance of American products, and criticise the loose, ill-fitting garments turned out by the German manufacturers. "The Japanese," he continued, "are strong on style, as most of the men have had military training, with which goes the wearing of well-fitting uniforms. This makes them partial to American goods."

Dr. Sams started yesterday on a tour of the clothing centres of the country. He will visit Troy, Utica, Rochester, Cleveland, Fort Wayne, and Chicago. He expects to sail for the Orient about the middle of September.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Fancy Patterns in Linen Towels Do Not Make the Goods "Drawnwork."

Mills & Gibb were sustained yesterday by the Board of General Appraisers in a controversy relating to linen towels. Collector Malone decided that they were dutiable at 60 per cent. ad valorem as "drawnwork," his classification being based on the ground that threads were omitted, drawn, punched or cut, with threads introduced after weaving. The samples in evidence consisted of towels having a zigzag pattern woven at each end. It was testified that the threads in this zizag pattern have been pushed apart and tied together, making an open-work effect, but that no threads were omitted, drawn or otherwise treated as specified in the paragraph under which duty was taken. This fact having been established, Judge Cooper ruled that the goods are entitled to entry at 35 per cent. ad valorem, as claimed, as manufactures of flax.

Judge Howell handed down decisions affecting the claims of many importers of silk hair nets received under the 1909 tariff. All of the goods were returned for duty at 70 per cent. ad valorem as having been made on go-through or lever machines. The importers claimed that the goods were not produced on such machines and should be admitted at 10 per cent. less. While the decision is not very clear as to what proportion of the goods are held by Judge Howell to be property dutiable at the lower rate claimed, it is apparently large. The balance of the importations are required to stand the assessment imposed by the Collector. The importers interested include F. B. Vandegrift & Co., A. J. Hague & Co., F. L. Kraemer & Co., New York Merchandise Company, T. H. Gary & Co., Poirer & Lindeman, Silverberg Import Co., the Rudolph Saenger Company, and others.

B. Altman & Co. were sustained in a contention regarding the duty rate on knitted silk mufflers entered under the old tariff. The Collector took duty at 60 per cent. ad valorem as silk wearing apparel, whereas the importers claimed 50 per cent., as the "silk mufflers" mentioned in paragraph 400. The case was before the board in 1912, and was then overruled. The United States Court of Customs Appeals, however, ordered the board to re-try the issue. This time the importers put in sufficient testimony regarding the character of the importations to warrant a finding in their favor.

Marshall Field & Co. objected that the Collector's classification of cotton cloth returned at 40 per cent. ad valorem as cotton pile fabrics. The protestants claimed that the goods should pay duty at the appropriate rate as cotton cloth, or at 30 per cent. under paragraphs 266 and 258. No testimony was submitted at the trial and no evidence was put before the board except samples of the merchandise and the return of the Appraiser. The board held that an examination of the record disclosed nothing to warrant disurbing the classification made by the Collector.

BRITISH EMBARGO HURTS.

Bent-Wood Furniture Importers Are Among Those Affected by It.

The British embargo on goods of German or Austrian origin has brought about a serious condition in the bent-wood furniture business. Stocks here are down to almost nothing in the hands of jobbers, while retailers and large establishments like hotels, restaurants, and cafés, which are big users of this merchandise, are unable to get goods for their requirements. Austria is the home of bent-wood furniture, and while large quantities of it have been bought and paid for, in many instances by American importers, they cannot get it shipped owing to the refusal of the steamship companies to handle the goods.

Walter D. Schmits, President of Jacob & Joseph Kohn, Inc., importers of Austrian bent-wood, describes the situation confronting handlers and users here as follows:

"Our firm, as well as other importers, are losing heavily because of the embargo. We are unable to fill orders from hotels and other large users of the goods. The merchandise was ordered in Austria and paid for, but now we cannot get it. The storehouses of the Netherlands are filled to overflowing, while railway cars, warehouses, and factories all the way from Rotterdam into Austria are likewise overburdened with stocks for America.

"Naturally we and our customers are greatly hurt by the present condition of affairs. I hope a way will be found quickly by our Government to break the English embargo. Many of the goods were ordered for the Fall trade, and our failure to receive them is a severe blow all around. Certainly no one can claim that bent-wood furniture is contraband of war."

Where American Goods Are Going.

The shifts in currents of foreign trade just before the European war reveal many oddities. This country, for example, began sending modern farming machinery to Egypt, art works to France, medicines to England, washing powder and fluid to New Zealand, chewing gum to the Philippines and watches to Switzerland. Electric fans are going to India, motors to Brazil, wireless apparatus to Japan, copper manufactures to Central America, engines to the Balkan States, plated ware to Australia, tin goods to Canada and Cuba and spelter to the Netherlands. It is the hope of Government officials that, when the war ends, the American "invasion" of these unusual lines of export may be continued and enlarged.

A Late Summer Novelty.

The large business that is being done by the shirtmakers on the so-called sport shirts this season has induced one of the largest of them to bring out a kind of transformation, or collar, by means of which any shirt of the negligee type may be made into one of the sport variety. This collar is made in the shape of the collars on the sport shirts, and may be attached to the top button of the bosom of the ordinary shirt when the neckband is turned in against the neck, leaving the V-shaped opening which is said to spell comfort in hot weather.

RAW SILK VALUES HARD TO FIGURE

Because of This the Bond of Faith Between Buyer and Seller Should Be Strong.

The variable quality of raw silk makes it exceedingly difficult at times to arrive at a proper estimation of the value of a shipment. Numerous methods have been devised and suggested for arriving at a proper grading of the different qualities. The amount of raw silk now being sent to the conditioning house for tests that properly will record the grade has increased to a large extent over that which was formerly submitted to scientific examination.

It has been pointed out by one authority in the raw silk business that for the manufacturer's guidance the silk he buys should be tested and compared with certain fixed standards established for the various grades. These standards, he said, should be printed on the back of the conditioning house sheets, so that the manufacturer might refer to them when he received the report on his silk.

The quantity of raw silk tested by conditioning houses at present, however, in comparison with the total amount put into work, is said to be too small to furnish adequate and satisfactory standards. "A man who has had considerable experience as a broker in raw silk claims that a proper valuation and grading of the silk received in one shipment would make it impossible to sell the silk in a mercantile package. To satisfy the buyer beyond the shadow of a doubt it would be necessary to examine each "book" in every bale received.

"'Silk,' this man said, 'is like wine, inasmuch as its quality admits of so many variations. As it is now, samples are taken from a shipment for testing purposes, but the results obtained can by no possible means be said to cover the entire quantity. It is wrong to think, however, that the importers are defrauding the manufacturers by manipulating qualities and passing off silk for a better grade than it actually is.

"If this were tried, the importing house that attempted to defraud its customers would soon be losing business. The manufacturer may not be fully informed on the different qualities of raw silk and know how to determine them, but he does know whether the fabrics he makes out of the product are up to the proper standard. If the manufacturer does not get satisfactory results in one quarter he will turn his business over to another dealer. Competition is too keen for the importers to trifle with their patrons. There would not be men in the raw silk business today who have built up enormous asset if they did not act fairly toward the manufacturers."

The head of a raw silk importing house that is regarded as one of the leading American concerns, said that the manufacturer should put more trust in his dealer.

"If only three or four silk manufacturers large enough," he said, "to bear the expense of conducting their own tests. They know what they are buying, and if the silk they get is not up to the standard they will refuse to accept it.

"The rest of the trade, however, should put some confidence in the knowledge of the men with whom they do business. The silk manufacturer's business has to do with making silk fabrics, and on that point his knowledge should be comprehensive. He should be content to leave the matter of raw silk values and qualities to the raw silk man. The trouble is that the smallest manufacturer will pretend to know much more than he really does about raw silk and often causes difficulties out of which he comes the loser.

"A common practice among the smaller manufacturers is to go from one raw silk house to another, get prices and then endeavor to force down the price of one firm by disclosing the figure he has obtained from another. There is keen competition in this line, and frequently the importer will come down from the price he originally asked. But when making this reduction he does not by any means intend to supply the same quality of silk as that on which he originally quoted a price. The manufacturer loses because he has attempted to force down prices and has only succeeded in forcing down the quality of the silk he buys.

"If, on the other hand, the manufacturer will tell the importer what kind of a silk fabric he wants to make, the latter will help him out. As a result of his long experience the importer knows just what grade of silk will give satisfaction in making a certain fabric, and he is in a better position than the manufacturer to get just what is wanted in the market. Beating down prices of a product of so variable a nature as raw silk can do the manufacturer no good, for by doing so he antagonizes the very man who can and should help him out."

AT FALL RIVER MILLS.

Business in Bandage Cloths Was One of the Week's Features.

Special to The New York Times.

FALL RIVER, Mass., Aug. 14.—There was little business in the cotton goods markets of New England this week. On some lines of goods there was fair inquiry, but this encouragement concerned fancies rather than goods made of printcloth yarns.

There was some business put through in bandage cloths, but the volume was not as large as that of the week previous. It was estimated that about 5,000,000 yards of bandage goods were sold last week, equivalent to about 100,000 pieces, but as this cloth sold for less than two cents a yard the margin of profit was small.

As has been the case for several months past, wide and medium-wide printcloths sold in major quantity. Some of the buyers have already stocked up on goods, and, therefore, they are not interested in market conditions. The small demand has also precluded further buying. The fine goods mills are doing a fair amount of business, although very little in the way of new business is coming to hand because mills have their output for the balance of the year well sold up. Medium-count fancy-goods mills are doing moderate business, but the margin of profit is not as large as that on fine goods. The week closed with the demand rather quiet.

The total sales for the week are estimated at 110,000 pieces, of which about one-third are spots.

SHOVELS VERSUS SPADES.

Treasury Department Defines Difference—Latter Get Free Entry.

Collector Malone received a letter yesterday from the Treasury Department that is expected to go a long way toward solving the perplexities of customs men regarding the difference, for classification purposes, of spades and shovels. Up to this time there has been a wide variation in the practice at the several ports in returning these articles for duty. Andrew J. Peters, Assistant Secretary of the department in charge of the customs, advised the Collector that following an investigation the department has decided upon these rules:

Spades, both long-handled and D-handled and whether polished or black, are chiefly used for agricultural purposes, while ordinary shovels, both polished and black, and whether long-handled or D-handled, are chiefly used for purposes other than agriculture. In view of this conclusion, customs officials will hereafter pass free of duty as agricultural implements, under Paragraph 301, spades of the kinds mentioned above, while shovels, either polished or black, long-handled or D-handled, are to be assessed at 20 per cent. ad varolem as manufactures of metal, under Paragraph 167.
